Mr. KITCHIN. When the matter was submitted to the conferees the suggestion was made that the Government, having control of these railroads and getting the benefits of additions and extensions to operate the railroads and carry out the purposes of the railroad act to help in the prosecution of the war, either had to advance the money and put up these additions and betterments itself, or, if it could do it, make the railroad corporations advance the money.

So we said, "Here we will permit the corporation to help do that, because the Government is perfectly safe on every dollar of that money, because it has the railroads in its hands, and no one gets the railroads back until every dollar due the Finance Corporation is paid and we have absolute protection." That is the reason we were willing to make the exception, and I am frank to tell members of the committee that the House conferees made this proposition of compromise on this ground, because we recognized the Government had to have these betterments if it was going to operate the railroads in the interest of the prosecution of the war and the general public, and whether the Government or the Finance Corporation furnished it neither could lose a dollar, because these roads on which the betterments, additions, and extensions were going to be used will remain in the hands of the Government until they make good these advances.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have in mind the public utilities and also the fact that the Government is taking over some of these public utilities as war necessities. Now, does not the gentleman think that inasmuch as the Government has taken over some of these utilities already that they should be given the same rights or benefits as regards advances as are given the railroads under this section.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, that might have been a question that could have been discussed, but we did not discuss that particular phase of it; but I will say we ought not to put in a general proposition on public utilities, according to the gentleman's suggestion, just because maybe one or two or three are in the control of the Government; but if the Government has taken over any public utilities—I do not know that they have any except war industries—why, there is a law now permitting the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to advance 30 per cent before they do anything on a contract, and pay as the contract progresses, so they can get all the money they need in that way.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understood these advances were to be assumed by the War Finance Corporation when fully organized.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman, no doubt, got that impression because of a suggestion by some officer of the Treasury Department that the 30 per cent advance provision should be repealed and let the Finance Corporation handle it; but the committee, after thinking about it, thought it wise to let that provision remain.

Mr. McFADDEN. One further question. Does the gentleman feel that there is adequate provision here for relief to those public utility companies which are necessary and vital to the war?

Mr. KITCHIN. The public-utility corporation companies are run on the same basis that every other industry necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war is run. There is but one industry that is mentioned specifically and that is the railroads in possession of the Government under control of the President.

Mr. McFADDEN. I think public utilities are a little different because they are regulated by public-service commissions of the various States in regard to the issuance of securities.

Mr. KITCHIN. Public utilities under this act are eligible to apply for the loans provided they convince the War Corporation or the banks that their operations are necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. McFADDEN. But they must first before issuing securities get the approval of the public-service commissions of the various States, making oath that all the money they are applying for has been honestly expended. Where are they going to get the 25 per cent margin when they come to the War Finance Corporation for a loan? The public-service commission will not permit them to issue a 25 per cent margin of securities.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know where, but I will tell the gentleman this: No public utility ought to have any Government funds or War Finance Corporation funds if they come and want to borrow $75,000 and are not willing to put up $100,000 of property, giving a mortgage on their plant. I know the gentleman is a banker. If I went to him and asked him for a $100,000 loan and told him I had $125,000 of property behind it, I know he would not feel it was safe or wise or good banking or good business to let me have $100,000 on $125,000 worth of property, and yet the war utilities of which the gentleman speaks——

Mr. McFADDEN. I am speaking of war necessities.

Mr. KITCHIN. They only have to put up a mortgage of $125,000 on their plant to get $100,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am speaking of war necessities, and call the gentleman's attention to the testimony before the committee of the Secretary of the Treasury and Mr. Warburg, in which they stated positively that there might be instances where the demands of the Government were such that they should have to advance beyond a safe zone—in other words, advance beyond the actual value of the property to obtain quick results in production of war materials greatly needed by the Government to win the war—and that same thing might apply to public utilities which are necessary to win the war in furnishing power, transportation, and so forth.

Mr. KITCHIN. I know; but the committee after due deliberation and much investigation concluded otherwise.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There is no possible question but railroads are included in the 12½ per cent limitation in section 9.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a bit.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But in section 10 they are not included——

Mr. KITCHIN. I am coming to that. That is the third material difference, or rather the third material change that the conferees agreed on in the House bill. Section 10 provides that no one person, firm, corporation, or association shall receive from the War Finance Corporation a loan amounting to more than 10 per cent of the capital stock of the War Finance Corporation. That is, no one concern could ever be advanced more than $50,000,000, because $500,000,000 is the capital stock of the War Finance Corporation. This section does not apply to railroads under the control of the President for advances for betterment, additions, and extensions.

The railroads may want more than $50,000,000 and the War Finance Corporation could loan them from this direct fund, which is limited to $437,500,000, more than $50,000,000.

Now, gentleman, I think I have covered the only material changes. There have been many small changes which I shall not mention unless some gentleman may wish to consider them, and I will be glad to answer any question in respect to them. I do feel, however, that I ought to mention one, because our good faith seemed to be a little questioned by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in a genial way, however, with respect to the requirement that there should be members of a different political party on the board of directors of the War Finance Corporation and on the Capital Issues Committee. We agreed with the Senate conferees to strike that requirement out. I will say that of the party of the gentleman from Wyoming, we had on the conference committee, I think, as strong a man as we have in the United States Senate, and, unanimously, as I say, after two days—the House conferees holding out two days on that—we yielded by the unanimous insistence and urging of the Senate conferees, including members of both parties. They took this position, that this was a nonpartisan, nonpolitical bill in every way; that it had no partisanship in it, not a tinge of it, and they felt that if we injected partisanship in it by putting a provision in it, it would look like it was a partisan proposition, and therefore it ought to stay out, and not inject any politics in it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is fair to say that the minority conferees on the House side, respecting the apparent wishes of their colleagues here, did undertake to retain that paragraph in the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. All the conferees, not only the minority members on the part of the House, but all the conferees stood out for two days and insisted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it was due to the argument that this is an extraordinary measure, a war measure of first importance, and that it might embarrass the President in the prosecution of the business to be conducted under this measure, that after generous discussion the conferees finally agreed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, which was sent over by the Senate and which was passed there unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 19.

Resolved, etc., That, it being a duty peculiarly incumbent in a time of war humbly and devoutly to acknowledge our dependence on Almighty God and to implore His aid and protection, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to recommend a day of public humiliation, prayer, and fasting, to be observed by the people of the United States with religious solemnity and the offering of fervent supplications to Almighty God for the safety and welfare of our cause, His blessing on our arms, and a speedy restoration of an honorable and lasting peace to the nations of the earth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSING FOR WAR NEEDS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10265.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10265, with Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The first section has been concluded, and the Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That upon the requisition of or the filing of a petition for the condemnation hereunder of such land, or any right, title, or interest therein, or such houses, buildings, furnishings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, and parts thereof, immediate possession thereof may be taken to the extent of the interest to be acquired and the same may be occupied and used, and the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, providing that no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land is located has been given, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended as to all real estate acquired hereunder.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

It was my misfortune not to hear the chairman's explanation of this bill, and much of the discussion also escaped me, because of my attendance upon other duties. But it is evident that the wide scope of authority conferred by this bill upon one officer of the Government may lead to discussion. I trust it will not lead to scandal. Whether the hearings revealed the points at which portions of this large sum of $50,000,000 are to be spent, I do not know. I have heard some gentlemen contend that it is not wise to construct these houses along the Atlantic seaboard, because of the congestion that already prevails there.

It has been stated and argued by some gentlemen that the distribution of this fund should go so far west, even, as the Rocky Mountains. Now, it may be that there ought to be some such distribution. It may be that in the exercise of his wisdom and judgment the Secretary of Labor may see fit to build a large number of houses around about a coal mine somewhere in Colorado on the ground that that is a war emergency, and that those houses ought to be constructed for the benefit of workmen who may have no roof over their heads. It may be that his discretion would be properly exercised in that respect, and that he would have a right under this bill to so allot the money, but it does seem to me that there ought to be some provision written in the law which would limit his powers in that regard, at least, so that Congress might know where this money was going.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the gentleman says that he hears an intimation that some of this might be spent as far west as the Rocky Mountains, he does not mean to infer that the Pacific seaboard is not doing something in the way of war activity?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, observing the activity of my friend from Washington, I would say that if this sum starts from the East westward, it will not be likely to stop until some of it is located in the State of Washington, and I have no objection to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think that opens up a very serious question, whether we are not rolling a pork barrel right in now, composed of a 60 per cent necessity as a war measure, and, say, 20 per cent as high-minded betterments, and a little graft?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be. I said I hoped this bill will not result in scandal, but it may be that influence will be brought to bear on the Secretary of Labor that will induce him to spend a large portion of this money in places where, in the judgment of Congress, it should not be expended. It may be that in consequence of the activities of our profit-making citizens large organizations may be started involving vast expenditures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, I want it understood that I am not criticizing the Secretary of Labor or anyone else in prospect of what may happen, but is it not fair to assume that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] in his district has lots of influence, and if I in my district am supposed to have some influence, it stands to reason that the gentleman is expected to pull and haul and I am expected to pull and haul and intervene to secure housing—good, permanent housing, mind you—in each of our districts for thousands of employees engaged in manufacture of war supplies in each of our districts?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want to say that both of these gentlemen have been taken care of already out of the $50,000,000 appropriated for the Shipping Board, and they need have no concern about what will be done under this $50,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I were to be influenced by the speeches of the gentleman from Kansas, I might assume that the whole of that $50,000,000 appropriated for the housing of shipping employees had been spent at Hog Island.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman surely does not want this amount expended there?

Mr. MOORE of Pensylvania. No; that is not the fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And I am not talking of shipyard housing. I know something, however, of the demand that came up under that authorization, limited, of course, to seaports. I do not object to the main propositions in this bill. I know that the prompt housing of employees is necessary. I do object to hitching the District of Columbia home plan onto this bill. This bill is for workers on war material; the amendment is for clerks here in Washington.

Now, I have read in the hearings that responsible men doubt whether they can spend or appropriate this sum in this fiscal year. I presume that means between now and the beginning of July. I read also that this sum is a very small proportion of what is to be needed under the ambitious plans which are developing—loans for houses and the like. One thing more. I have heard the arguments here of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and others as to the desirability of not congesting so much of this war work in certain centers. Great activities are going on in my district in regard to shipbuilding and the housing of the workers. This bill is, of course, outside of the shipbuilding program; but, right in line with what the gentleman from Illinois said yesterday, let me read this telegram that I received to-day:

SOUTH BEND, WASH., April 1, 1918.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We earnestly protest against installing the machinery at Seattle in the Sanderson & Porter vessels being built at Raymond. Contractor had made all arrangements for installing plant here to do the work. Have best of facilities, including wharfage, ample water front, and buildings for machine shops located on deep water and on Milwaukee and Northern Pacific Railroads. Labor and housing can be provided. We feel that it is an injustice to the citizens of this county to be deprived of such industries when the work can be done here and as rapidly as in any other locality. We feel we should not be deprived from installing the machinery in the boats built on this harbor. We urge the Shipping Board to investigate our facilities and to permit the work to be done here if it is found same can be done here promptly and without delay.

L. L. DARLING, President,
J. H. HENDERSON, Secretary,
South Bend Commercial Club.

I have no doubt but that the Shipping Board will make a proper recommendation when that telegram reaches it. These smaller harbors have produced and delivered wooden ships. They have machine shops, hoisting devices, boiler works, and all those necessary things, in a smaller way than the big cities have them, and they have not got this housing congestion. The people of these small communities, in their anxiety to see the war activities go on, are housing their workmen in their own homes and in public buildings and halls, and if this bill goes through they are likely to cease doing that and to ask that Uncle Sam do it, and Uncle Sam can not do it all.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman from Washington refers to Seattle?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; as the place these ships are to be taken for installation of machinery.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The hearings show that Mr. Eidlitz, the gentleman who has investigated these different settlements, says:

We are investigating the Puget Sound now for the Navy, and Mare Island. Seattle is complaining bitterly, and of course we will have to give attention to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. That is what I say. Here is machinery to be installed in wooden ships, and I think 70 wooden ships are being built in and about my district, and the hulls are proposed to be yanked to Seattle to put the machinery in.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. COX. Why not put the machinery in where the hulls are built? How far is it to that place?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. By water, probably 460 miles.

Mr. COX. What excuse do they give?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. None, except, perhaps, that the big machinery and the Northwestern headquarters of the Shipping Board are in the larger cities. I think the Shipping Board here will correct the situation.

Mr. COX. That is a funny way to do business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not opposing this bill, but I am offering a mild protest as to parts of it. I wish the amount could be reduced one-half and the amount to the District of Columbia reduced one-half, so that we could find out what we can do. Some people are already having an agitation set on foot to the effect that when the Government housing bill goes in operation here in the District that all the money shall not be spent in the northwest section, but some in the southeast and in the southwest and the northeast, and that these citizens should be given a chance to come into their own. That is only natural and is in line with demands that will come from everywhere.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I know that the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman had been here last evening, he would have seen that the last thing we did was to adopt an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to the effect that nothing should be done in the housing of Government employees in the District of Columbia except upon detailed estimates and appropriations for such purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I was here. That amendment applies to the District of Columbia only.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. I have taken no time in this debate——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Reserving the right to object, I want to state that I am perfectly willing to have all the time necessary to debate this bill, but I respectfully submit that the matter of moving boilers from one place to another to put into ships has nothing to do with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It has got to do with the principle and with some of the congestion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And I am going to insist from now on that the argument be confined to the amendment offered. If the gentleman does not like the bill, let him offer an amendment to make it better, and then argue it, and we will pass on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not object, but I am going to object after this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am quite serious about this. On the North Pacific many war orders have been placed; on the Atlantic coast many more, of course. Other communities have not received so many. If houses are to be built, all will demand good houses. Workingmen themselves will object to good, permanent houses in one place and bad, temporary houses in another. A man with half an eye can see what is going to happen. The District of Columbia is getting ready for it now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman knows of any contemplated wrong, why does he not offer an amendment to prevent it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will let that contemplated wrong in the District be remedied by the very distinguished gentleman of my name, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. This thing will make him work harder. I would not object to this bill at all if it were confined to a great war emergency housing plan, but I am inclined to believe——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then the gentleman is opposed to the whole bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no; I am not; but I am trying to call attention to the fact that this bill contemplates permanent homes, loans for building, possibly for bungalows and cottages, and that many people in the District of Columbia believe that they are going to have actual houses built for them to relieve a situation where men renting houses for homes are told that they must either move out or buy the houses. These people think that this bill, in addition to being an absolute war emergency measure to take care of laboring men sent in great numbers to these other communities, has had hooked on to it a plan to relieve the situation in the District of Columbia and to give people a chance to hope they can secure actual ownership of homes, purchased from the Government, in the course of time, possibly on the installment plan. The two plans do not fit very well, and will make much confusion, I feel sure.

Mr. BARNHART. I have no doubt the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I try to be; yes.

Mr. BARNHART. The bill specifically provides that where vacant houses are found, or where there are houses that are not fully occupied, the Secretary of Labor may requisition them for housing purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the Government can requisition them now, without this act. It provides also that the Secretary of Labor may take over street car lines and certain other municipal utilities, whatever is meant by that.

Mr. BARNHART. There is no provision for the Government taking over housing propositions now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Government has commandeered houses and other buildings.

Mr. BARNHART. For offices, yes; but not for housing purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They have taken buildings for barracks, have they not?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, what do the words "municipal utilities" mean under the broad powers granted in this bill? Do they mean to build sewers, or to build community houses and forums, where there shall be lectures for the workingmen, the clerks, and the people as an urgent war necessity? Does it mean telephone lines; does it mean to take over the street car lines in the District of Columbia? It says that, and the only check is in the amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I am satisfied the committee will find——

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman spoke of the magnanimous conduct of his people out there in furnishing houses for these workmen. Do they do that free? Do they not get rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In my home town the large rooms in the city hall have been made into bedrooms for the men doing war work. Either the contractors did it or the city government did it.

Mr. BURNETT. I venture the assertion that they got paid for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope they did. But I hate to see the opportunity for all war-working communities to come forward and say, "Let Uncle Sam do it."

Mr. BURNETT. I never saw one of them yet that failed to charge people enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the power and authority granted herein shall cease with the termination of the present war, except the power and authority to care for and rent such property as remains undisposed of and to conclude and execute contracts for the sale of property made during the war.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONDON offers the following amendment:
Page 4, line 20, insert the following as a substitute for section 5——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is to perfect the text of section 5 as it stands in the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] will be held in abeyance and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK:
Page 4, line 22, after the word "rent" insert "and to sell and convey."

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will permit me, that question was considered by the committee, and they did not think it ought to be put in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, on the statement of the gentleman from Indiana I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reoffers the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the amendment reported, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 4, line 22, after the word "rent" insert the words "and to sell and convey."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the suggestion that to the amendment perhaps should be added the words "at not less than cost." I do not know what the committee has to say about this, but the right to sell is a dangerous right when left to the discretion of an officer of the Government. The right to sell ought to be limited definitely by law. Nothing creates so much trouble——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit, I think I can make a statement that will give the gentleman the information as to why we did not include that language. It has never been the policy of Congress to allow a department to sell or convey property without coming to Congress and getting the assent of Congress to sell that particular property at a given price. We thought it would be better to only give him the power to act as the custodian of this property after the war had terminated. Of course to rent it and to collect the rent. Then when an offer was made to purchase any of it let him report it to Congress with the prices and all the circumstances, and let Congress say whether it ought to be sold or not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a good deal in what the gentleman has said, but consider the cumbersomeness of that proposition; here would be thousands of separate parcels of real estate, every one of which might be an eyesore, and will be sooner or later, if the buildings are to be but temporary ones, and yet in every instance under that program the Secretary would be obliged to come to Congress and lay before it a recommendation to sell a piece of property worth perhaps $2,000 or $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; in a minute. If it was provided that he could sell for not less than cost, from that point of view it would be an aid to the workingman. Personally all things being even I would rather see some of these buildings remain in the hands of the occupants, because if turned back into the hands of the Secretary of Labor they will not only depreciate in value but they will affect detrimentally the surrounding property.

Suppose you put a thousand houses on Mussel Shoals, where I understand some are to go, and after the war is over and you continue that great plant there for fertilizer purposes, pure and simple, the Secretary suddenly orders these ramshackle buildings vacated. What is the effect going to be on surrounding real estate? All the citizens, all the farmers, all those who have attempted substantial improvements will be seriously affected in respect to their land values. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman has been discussing the matter I wanted to call attention to. I understand the amendment provides for the sale and conveyance of this property at a price not less than cost.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will suggest a modification of my amendment to that effect. I ask unanimous consent to add to the amendment the words "at not less than cost."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania modifies his amendment by adding at the end the words "at not less than cost."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman think that when he adds those words to his amendment that it will necessarily force Congress to act because the property could not be sold, having been used by the tenants and being only a temporary building—it could not be sold at cost, and it would be equivalent to saying that it could not be sold at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would depend on circumstances.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman will bear in mind that these buildings are called for more strongly in communities that are not permanent, but where there has been a spasmodic settlement due solely to war activities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose we built a village of temporary buildings somewhere in the wilderness, on the banks of a river where water power could be had and where it was a decided advantage to attempt such a settlement, far removed from the battle front, far removed from the congested centers of population, might it not be wise now that we have the property, with the streets laid out and a community interest there, to allow them to remain and go on with other industries?

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman think that Congress should exercise its judgment——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If some of these activities were to start up in the backwoods of Missouri——

Mr. RUCKER. We have cleaned up all the backwoods in Missouri.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But there are remote sections of Missouri. Our modern characterization of the Missourian is a man who "wants to be shown."

Mr. RUCKER. I know that the gentleman must have reverted to some of the beautiful landscapes that he sees up in Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman want to perpetuate the title in the Government and put it where the Government can never sell? Would not that be the effect of his amendment? Nobody believes that one-tenth of this property could ever be sold for cost, and the amendment of the gentleman would put it where we would have to hold it perpetually. If you put it in the hands of the Secretary with this limitation on it, that will be the effect of it. If the gentleman wants the Government to acquire property up around Philadelphia and always hold it, this would be a good way to bring it about. Is the gentleman working for anything of that kind?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was about convinced by the gentleman's argument until he put forward the selfish point of view, and that destroyed the effect of his argument. I usually follow the gentleman from Alabama cordially, but I can not in this selfish point of view. No; I do not want a lot of Government-owned land around Philadelphia. We have had great difficulty in getting rid of some that we had, because once in the hands of the Government it seems to remain there forever. There is always some objection to its being sold.

I say I was almost convinced by the gentleman's argument that I ought to withdraw my amendment, because I am not in favor, primarily, of giving too much power to the Secretary of Labor. Having explained the point, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it, anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 20, strike out section 5 and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 5. That the power and authority granted in paragraphs (a), (c), and (d) of section 1 hereof shall cease with the termination of the present war."

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to restore section 5 as it was in the original bill as drafted by the Secretary of Labor. The effect of the language contained in the bill as reported by the committee and now before the Committee of the Whole House is to make it impossible for the Secretary of Labor to improve the opportunities that will offer themselves to him by reason of being in possession of a number of buildings. The provision as it stands now will compel him to get rid of the property at any price, so that all of the investment will be wasted. The Secretary of Labor was careful to avoid the possibility of being put in that difficult position, and when he drafted the bill he was careful enough to provide that only the power and the authority granted under paragraphs (a), (b), and (d) should cease with the termination of the present war. Let us see what authority paragraph (c) will leave in the Secretary. It would leave in the Secretary the following powers, namely:

(c) To equip, manage, maintain, alter, rent, lease, exchange, sell, and convey such lands, or any right, title, or interest therein, houses, buildings, improvements, local transportation, and other community facilities, parts thereof, and equipment upon such terms and conditions as he may determine.

That would give him the opportunity to retain those buildings which would prove to be of permanent value in permanent communities, to retain those structures which would form a permanent addition to cities. We can not possibly anticipate now the development of the industrial forces that have been called into action by the present contingency. We do not know how long this war will last. It may end any moment or it may become the normal condition of mankind for the rest of our lives. We may have nothing but war during the rest of our days, but we can readily see the contingency arising where the Secretary of Labor will find himself with a number of buildings half completed or fully completed and prevented from exercising any control over them because his power over any of them will expire with the termination of the war if my amendment should be rejected.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, Congress will still be here it is most likely after the war ends, and it might direct the Secretary of Labor how to proceed under these conditions.

Mr. LONDON. I know, but Congress may not be in session when the war will terminate.

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, yes; it will be.

Mr. LONDON. It may not be in session. Secretary Wilson emphasized the importance of retaining the original provision of the bill. I read from page 30 of the hearings, from the testimony of Secretary Wilson. He spoke of the necessity of retaining the powers recited in paragraph (c), and says:

Secretary WILSON. That is one of the things that is in contemplation in permanent communities and where the houses are likely to be used even beyond the period of the war emergency. Provisions can be made by which sales can be made to the workmen of the houses and the sales made on the installment plan, so that they may acquire their own houses. While three of the items in section 1 terminate with the termination of the war—that is, A, B, and D—C may continue, and it is quite apparent that it ought to be continued, because it provides authority to equip, manage, maintain, alter, sell, lease, exchange, or otherwise dispose of the lands, so that even when the emergency is over these lands, if there be any of them, and these houses, if there be any of them, are in the possession of the Government, and the power will be in the Government, where these permanent communities have been established, to dispose of these lands and houses in the manner in which you suggest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the most difficult problems that will face this Congress may present themselves with the termination of the war, and there is no reason in the world why we should now condemn all of these buildings that will have been constructed at a tremendous cost, why we should waste them in advance, why we should make it impossible for the Secretary of Labor to utilize to the fullest extent the acquired properties when the war is terminated, why he should have to wait 6 or 8 or 10 months for the following session of Congress or be restrained from expending the necessary money to complete such buildings as may be then only partially completed, so as to save the moneys invested in the construction of the buildings.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. This bill, on page 2, line 25, and on page 3, line 26, contemplates that the buildings are to be of only a temporary character wherever practical so to construct. If that be true, and they be constructed hastily and are of a temporary character, why ought not the power to cease with the proclamation of peace?

Mr. LONDON. During the debate yesterday the chairman of the committee insisted that the language just referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not confine the Secretary of Labor to the construction of temporary structures under all conditions; that the word "practicable" meant that temporary buildings should be constructed in those cases where only temporary buildings could be constructed advantageously, but where permanent buildings were more advantageous or desirable, taking into consideration the community in which they were to be constructed, permanent buildings were to be constructed. In other words, this bill does not limit the Secretary of Labor to temporary structures.

Mr. ROBBINS. In line with that suggested by my inquiry, this is an emergency measure, the housing to be procured quickly.

Mr. LONDON. I understand that, but when we invest $100,000,000 in powder we do not expect to follow up that money—that money is gone, blown to atoms—but when we invest $100,000,000 in buildings it does not necessarily follow that you must necessarily throw away $100,000,000 if you can save a portion of it. It is not necessary to make temporary buildings when a permanent building can be constructed at almost the same expense and be of greater advantage to the workers in these towns. In other words, we must not assume now that temporary buildings are the only ones that should be constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one word about this: If the amendment of the gentleman from New York should prevail, then after the close of the war we would have the spectacle of the Secretary of Labor running hotels and boarding houses in times of profound peace. We would have the Secretary of Labor engaged in trading and trafficking in street car lines or transportation lines and all that kind of thing. It is the idea of the committee that these activities were only warranted by existing conditions of war, and that when those conditions cease these activities ought to cease, and we give no authority beyond that, except simply the power of a custodian of this property, allowing him to collect rents and make returns and——

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman realize, in view of the large number of men involved, that the very process of demobilizing these large bodies of men will require a considerable time, and that four or five months may pass before the Secretary will be able to remove those people?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do; and they will have ample time to do that. This does not mean that the houses will close and the people be put on the streets, because he is given authority to rent——

Mr. LONDON. To sell and rent.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not to sell, but to rent until Congress says it wants to sell the property. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division on this.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 3, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do this for the purpose of obtaining information about a section considered yesterday, but which was not touched upon by the committee. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether in the consideration of the bill any reference was made to the duration of the loans which would be made under the authority of paragraph d, I believe, of the first section?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that there is no consideration of that; it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the chairman's attention, not for the purpose of offering an amendment—though I would if that section were under consideration—to the fact that when the bill authorizing the Shipping Board to carry on activities of a similar character was under consideration an amendment was adopted by the committee, which was subsequently accepted by the conferees, limiting the duration of the loans to a period of 10 years, the idea being that we should not grant authority to any executive officer to obligate the Government for a long period of years—30, 40, or 50 years—and that there should be some limitation placed as to the length of time. Ten years was considered a reasonable time within which the loans should be made to private individuals.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state, Mr. Chairman, I think the Secretary of Labor can be trusted not to make any loans that would be unreasonable in length, and I am sure he would not make them longer than absolutely necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know it is the intention of the committee, from the expressions made by the chairman and other members of the committee on the amendment which was just considered, to have this authority brought to an end as soon as possible after the termination of the war. That was the very purpose of the amendment I offered to the Shipping Board bill, so we would not be obligated for a long term of years after the war has terminated. If the matter would be brought to the attention of the chairman in conference, would he be in a mood to accept it——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. In the event the war might terminate soon, if we fixed the maximum period at 10 years it seems to me that it might influence the Secretary of Labor to feel that he should fix these loans all at 10 years, and we might want to remove them in five or six years, and it would be a waste of money if we had to hold this property and pay interest on it after we were through with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is the proposition: Here are a large number of artisans moving into a new district which is being rapidly peopled by the reason of it being proximate to a new manufactory engaged in war activities.

Buildings are erected of a more or less permanent character. The artisans wish to purchase a home under some loan arrangement. Some might wish to obtain the loan for a period of 10, 15, or 20 years. I think that the Government would be doing all that could be expected of it to make it for 10 years, and if the person could not pay for it in that period——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he could not pay for it in that period, he could go to private sources and obtain it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not hesitate to say to the gentleman if such an amendment were offered I should certainly accept it, undoubtedly.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That at the beginning of each session of Congress the Secretary of Labor shall make to Congress a full and detailed report covering all of the transactions of his department with relation to the subject matter of this act, describing each parcel of land purchased, the improvements made thereon, together with the amount of money spent in connection therewith and the disposition of the same; descriptions of all parcels of property sold, to whom, the terms of sale, and the status of the title at the time of the making of such report; description of each piece of property purchased under the terms of this act and still owned by the Government and the estimated value; a list showing the names of all persons who have been employed in any capacity to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act, the service rendered by each and the amount of compensation paid to each, and a full, detailed, itemized statement showing each and every transaction of the department in the execution of the trust herein created, and immediately after the declaration of peace in the existing war the Secretary of Labor shall make a final report to Congress covering in detail all the operations and transactions of his department, under and by virtue of the terms of this act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 5, line 5, after the word "purchased," insert the words "leased or otherwise acquired."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether the committee will object to this amendment or not, but provision is made here for describing only such parcel and parcels of land as have been purchased. In a preceding paragraph of the bill provision was made for purchase, lease, requisition, condemnation, and so forth.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The section now under consideration, on line 5, provides that the report shall include a description of each parcel of land purchased, and, as the amendment now reads, "leased or otherwise acquired"; and on line 10 also provides for a description of each piece of property purchased under the terms of this act, which seems to me to be unnecessary and tautological.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And still owned, the gentleman will notice.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Still owned by the Government. Is that the distinction the committee undertook to make?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, another comment upon this section is that it provides, on lines 7, 8, and 9, for "descriptions of parcels of property sold, to whom, the terms of sale, and the status of the title at the time of the making of such report," so that evidently, whether the gentlemen think the Secretary of the Treasury ought or ought not to sell the property, he is given the power to do it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; he is given the power during the existence of the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What does the gentleman say, then, as to the suggestion that he should be limited in the matter of the price he fixes for the property which is to be sold?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that the committee considered that, but here is the difficulty, as all gentlemen must realize: Here is an extraordinary condition. Building material is higher, probably, than it ever was in the world, and labor is higher than it ever was.

Building is extraordinarily expensive. I doubt, to be perfectly frank with the gentleman, if the Government would ever get cost out of any of this construction on that account. And we did not want to limit him to that cost, which might result very seriously to the Government. They might have opportunity to dispose of property to great advantage. And then the depreciation, of course——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me put this illustration before the gentleman as justifying the thought that there ought to be some limitation here. Suppose they have a thousand houses in an operation, and they are of temporary construction, and the Secretary, exercising his discretion, sells one house in the heart of the thousand, or a dozen houses somewhere where the situation is favorable, and at the termination of the war it develops that these few people own houses there, while the rest of the property is to be disposed of. Would not that operate to prejudice the Government in the disposition of the rest of its property? You give the man a right, in the midst of a large tract you are going to sell, to select a house there and stay there and say, "I will not move now if you want me to move, because I have a fee-simple deed to this property."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is supposed, of course, that those who execute this law will have regard to that condition when they undertake to sell property.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This bill gives the right to the Secretary to condemn, does it not? Therefore if my house happens to be in the area the Secretary wants to cover, he takes my house and drives me out. Of course, he pays me a price under condemnation proceedings. I have to yield and go away, but if the Government wants to dispose of the whole tract later on, and it is sold by the Secretary to one, two, or three individuals, how is the Government going to dispose of the rest of it without dispossessing those people?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman to answer, if he cares to do so.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is utterly impossible for me to answer these hypothetical propositions about what may happen.

We have got to trust the Secretary of Labor in the administration of this law with discretion, and it is presumed he will act with the discretion of an ordinary business man. And I do not believe that he would sell property in the way the gentleman indicates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We must have faith; I grant the gentleman that. I trust the Secretary may be wisely guided in these matters.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 5, line 15, after the word "compensation," insert the following: "including fees, commissions, allowances, and traveling expenses."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This widens the range of the report submitted.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit me, I think the section is pretty full and complete and will cover that. If the gentleman thinks differently, we are willing to accept it. We want an absolute, clean statement with reference to all these transactions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman accepts the amendment, I have no further argument to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That no work or contract done or made under or by authority of any provision of this act shall be done or made on or under a percentage or "cost-plus" basis.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out all of section 7, on page 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 7. That no work to be done or contract to be made under or by authority of any provision of this act shall be done or made on a percentage or cost-plus percentage basis, nor shall any contract be let until at least three responsible bidding contractors shall have been notified and considered in connection with such contract."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Florida if he will agree to go a step further and provide that neighborhood contractors may have the opportunity to compete for this work?

The amendment proposes just what I had in mind to offer as an amendment—that these contracts and these awards of work should be open to competition. The gentleman's amendment goes so far as to open them to competition on the part of at least three contractors, but if the operation is located somewhere in Kentucky, we will say, and each one of the three contractors invited to send in bids is to come from the city of New York, it might not be wholly satisfactory to the contractors of Kentucky, who might have, and ought to have, perhaps, an opportunity to come in and bid for that work.

I have heard considerable complaint, I will say to the gentleman, from small contractors who find that they have no opportunity to bid for work in their own environment, where they are familiar with the prices and the conditions and the labor market. We have instances of at least one or two shipyards fully equipped, with ways constructed and men employed, who are willing to do Government work, but who can not get Government work to do, although they are on the ground and eligible for the purpose. It seems to me that the men in the vicinity of the operation, the known contractors, those who have established reputations and can prove up to who ever is going to be in charge of the work, ought to have an opportunity to come in with the other three to bid on the work. The amendment proposes that there shall be opportunity for at least three persons to bid.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the gentleman's intention that this work shall be divided up into small contracts, so that a man who can do a certain part of the work can have an opportunity to do it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was asking that the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] be broadened so that those who have establishments and who are equipped to do the work, who know the situation, may have the chance to bid for it. That is all.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Does not the gentleman believe that the preference should be given to local contractors?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If a man in the neighborhood can do the work as well and as quickly as the man a thousand miles off, it seems to me that he ought to have an opportunity to do the work. It gives a chance to the men in the vicinity whose plants otherwise might be put out of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the matter of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has just spoken was very fully and extensively considered by the committee. Mr. Eidlitz, who was present, assured the committee that local contractors would be given the privilege of bidding on this work and awarded contracts wherever it is possible that they can do the work and expedite construction at the same time. But to insist that a local bidder shall have the privilege of bidding, taking as an illustration these buildings that have been constructed here in the very recent past down on the Mall, there are only one or two firms in the United States who were equipped to go right at it and build those buildings quickly. They had the machinery and the equipment and the labor to rush the work. Under ordinary conditions every provision ought to be made to give the widest possible competition to bidders; and I hope that the men in charge of this new enterprise—for it is new—will be sufficiently liberal and fair-minded that they will not invite a condition whereby contractors from New York will be given the privilege of constructing buildings in Kentucky and Kentucky contractors refused consideration. I can not conceive of any way by which such a thing could arise in the estimation of practical business men, as I believe the men in charge of this undertaking will be. We have the assurance that these men are practical business men and practical builders. We must trust some of these things to the honesty and wisdom of men, because we can not tie them up as we might under ordinary conditions, for the reason that they insist, as we all know, that this undertaking is emergent, and there must be unusual inducement to hurry things. These buildings are needed at the earliest moment possible, and if we have to spend more money than would be ordinarily necessary in order to get them quickly we must do it. It is one of the besetting misfortunes of war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman would not want to destroy some small builder who was thoroughly capable of doing such work as was assigned to him?

Mr. BARNHART. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The fact is, and I think the testimony the gentleman has referred to will bear it out, that by yielding these vast contracts to one or two concerns, and then levying an embargo upon all other material, such as lumber and other things that go into these buildings, it is impossible for a small man to operate, and he is really put out of business. I am appealing to the gentleman to give some encouragement to the small operator, in the vicinity of some cantonment for instance, or in the vicinity of some remote operation, if he has the facilities and the men; at present the embargo operates against him.

Mr. BARNHART. I can answer that by referring to some of the evidence given in the hearings. It was to the effect that if in this emergency the Government advertises for bids, as it must do if we are to let this undertaking by contract, then when a contractor sends in his bid the next step is to investigate to see whether he is prepared to do this work, whether he is dependable, and whether he is going to have difficulty before he gets through, and the work will be delayed both in beginning and completion. Under these conditions the Government wants to know the men who take these contracts, for it wants the assurance, based upon past experience of the contractors, that this work will be expedited—rushed through to completion at the earliest possible day.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. A moment ago the gentleman made mention of the fact that the buildings being constructed on the Mall require a tremendous organization and a large amount of machinery, which we are willing to concede is true; but that argument does not hold good, I imagine, as to a great deal of this work, because in other places they are building smaller units of different kinds of material.

Mr. BARNHART. But the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] would require that instead of giving this contract down here to men who can do the work quickly, because the need of office room is imperative and urgent, we would have to wait for some Washington contractor to come in and bid, and then consider his bid and investigate his responsibility, and the building would be delayed. It is the "do it now" that our country needs, and that is why contractors who are known to be ready and dependable are needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That for carrying out the provisions of this act and for the administration thereof the sum of $50,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment:
Page 6, line 2, strike out the figures "$50,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$60,000,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington to the committee amendment:
Strike out "$60,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope that amendment will not be adopted. The hearings before this committee showed that if we are to do this work at all it is going to cost many millions more than the $60,000,000 that we are proposing. It would simply be child's play to start with the authorization of $25,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman indicate to the House about how much this may eventually run into?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The hearings indicated that if the war lasts three or four years it will probably require between $300,000,000 and $500,000,000.

I sincerely hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] will not be adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to be recognized at the proper time in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment in all seriousness, not expecting, of course, to receive much support for it, for we have ceased to talk or even think in sums of anything less than $50,000,000. However, half that sum is still a large amount. If you will read the report of the committee you will come to the conclusion that the authorization of $50,000,000, not $60,000,000 as now proposed, was to be asked for, and that $50,000,000 was about as much as the distinguished witnesses before this committee thought they could tap Congress for at this time. Witnesses at the hearings went on to state that they doubted if they could expend that sum during the fiscal year. They would like to get ready for the grand scheme, and they expect to come to Congress for other $50,000,000 chunks until a stupenduous total is reached. I think it is only fair to suggest to the membership of this House that any reasonable sum, one-half—I have put it at fifty-fifty, giving the Government half a chance—is enough to inaugurate the plan, start it, so that we may see how it is going to work and where it is going to end. The Shipping Board's activities, mind you, are not covered in this bill, neither are Army and Navy housing, neither are offices in Washington, and neither is the Arlington Hotel site. That is another story.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the impression left by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] is that this bill makes the appropriation. It does nothing of the sort. It merely authorizes the Congress to make such appropriation as it sees fit, and it requires first, under the provisions of this bill that no appropriation can be made until a detailed and specific estimate of the expenditures proposed shall be made and approved by the Congress. I do not see what further safeguards we can place about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is there any warrant for the gentleman's statement which he just made that there can be no appropriation made until estimates are furnished?

Mr BARNHART. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and adopted just before adjournment yesterday.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is a limitation exclusively to the authorization for housing facilities in the District of Columbia. I wish it was general, so as to include estimates for all the buildings. I think the gentleman in the discussion before to-day referred to the fact that it included all estimates as authorized under this bill.

Mr. BARNHART. In theory and practice and in congressional procedure it has always been so considered, and ought always to be, that no authorization of any amount by a committee not authorized to make appropriations can get anywhere until the Appropriations Committee reports to the House and asks the approval of the House and makes the appropriation in whole or in part. And at that time Congress will have its day in court. While the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] only covers the District of Columbia, as a matter of fact the rules of the House cover the other provision. The gentleman from Wisconsin as well as older Members know that no authorization ever gets to the stage of appropriation until the House makes it so.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it is not necessary under the phraseology of this bill, if it becomes a law, that any estimate shall be made as a warrant for the housing, community, or transportation facilities outside of the District. The committee under this authorization could bring in a bill without estimates being first furnished. I am in hearty favor of the suggestion of the gentleman that estimates should be made, and I hope some member of the committee will offer an amendment extending the provisions in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARNHART. That would be true under ordinary conditions, as I said. But here we will have this housing problem coming up here and there all over the country. If we have a detailed statement of every move that is to be made before the appropriation committee acts there would be too much delay. I have no doubt the Appropriation Committee is going to be careful, because it is not the practice of the Appropriation Committee to recklessly make appropriations under authorizations of this kind. If we should require that every time an expenditure is to be made for housing anywhere in the United States, it should first be laid before the Appropriation Committee in the way of detailed specifications and estimates, as set forth in the district where it is directly under the observation of the committee, it would be a delaying proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. If we should require, as the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky prescribes, that estimates be furnished before the appropriations be made, it would not be necessary, as the gentleman seems to think, that a detailed estimate should be made.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky be read.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have the amendment before me. It is as follows:

Provided further, That the powers herein authorized shall not be exercised in the housing of Government employees in the District of Columbia except upon detailed estimates and appropriations for such purpose.

I really believe that before we grant to the Secretary of Labor supplementary authority, which is possessed now by the Shipping Board, the War Finance Corporation, to advance moneys for transportation facilities, and also separate authorization for community purposes, that Congress should have some estimate so as to know whether they shall engage in hospital activities or interurban railway activities, so that we can vote intelligently upon the needs of the country in the respective districts and not go wild, as we are doing in many bills with extravagant appropriations.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] will not be agreed to. If there is any fear which I have at the present time it is that these buildings will not be ready soon enough. Those of us who passed through this last winter knowing conditions in some of the cantonments where the work was started late, knowing of the terrible suffering of the men who were sent to some of these cantonments, are eager to see this work started at the earliest possible moment. If these reports were brought back, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], we here in the House might possibly get to the consideration of some of them by July or August. This work should be started to-morrow. We may just as well admit to ourselves right here and now that we are in for a long, long war, and plan to place our men for a term of years rather than a few weeks or months. It has been my privilege within the last 24 hours to know the thought of a man who has just come back from the other side, who is one of the foremost military authorities on either side of the water, and the things which he has to say as to what we must do in America, and do in the very near future, if I were not an eternal optimist, would be discouraging to say the least.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware that if the bill passes in its present form the Secretary of Labor will have to come to the appropriate committee before he can take one step?

Mr. MEEKER. I am fully aware of that, and I hope he comes in a hurry and gets it without any talk. [Applause.] Also, I hope that he gets busy immediately, and that the builders are at work within 10 days or two weeks if possible, because, as I said before, we men who have been through a close study of the cantonment problems of the past winter do not want the houses to be prepared for these men left in the condition some of those were during last winter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This is an authorization for $50,000,000 and by amendment will be sixty million?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the hearings disclose the fact that we may be called upon for six or seven times that. Why can we not start with an authorization of twenty-five millions? That is quite a sum of money.

Mr. MEEKER. Oh, it is a very small sum of money when you spread it over the United States, to say the least.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, $50,000,000 is still a small sum of money?

Mr. MEEKER. Certainly it is, and that is the reason I hope the gentleman's amendment will be defeated. If it costs us $500,000,000 we have to put it up, and do it in a hurry. We want this housing question settled now.

I want to say one thing right here. I hope there will not be quite so much suggestion from the floor of the House by men in civilian clothes as to what the men in military uniforms should do about running this war. There has been a very popular talk lately condemning so-called swivel-chair officers. I think the military authorities know whether a man should be left in a chair in Washington or put on the front in France. This agitation is going to disorganize some of the departments where the men have been working for months to obtain the technical knowledge to carry on just such a war as this, which must be done, and I say it ill becomes those of us who are still wearing civilian clothes to be condemning the men for the things they do or do not do who are in uniform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEEKER. And this is the last five minutes you will hear out of me on this whole thing. I am going to say this, further. There has been just complaint on the part of men from the inland manufacturing centers against the tendency to let contracts to concerns along the coast. Men who have been studying this question for the last year have been able to see that this congested situation was bound to come. However, the agitation which has been carried on has called the attention of contracting authorities to the necessity for holding back the men in the middle western country, and contracts are being let there more and more each day.

I believe that with the building policy on the one hand, and the new policy on the part of those who have the letting of the contracts on the other, working together or side by side, there is going to be some check of the movement for the transportation of labor to these coast points and these coast cities. It was naturally expected in the beginning of the war that the men who were most ready to take those contracts should get them, and there should be a piling up at such points, but now if the men who represent the middle section of the country will insist on calling the attention of the Government to the necessity and wisdom of letting those contracts in the middle western country, and if the manufacturers of that section will realize that they are now here to take war contracts at the lowest possible figure at which they can turn out the stuff, and that the day of war profiteering, thank God, is past in the bidding for contracts, it will mean a great benefit and advantage to all. Now, Mr. Chairman, we are all bound to make mistakes, but I believe that when we are considering these great movements that a bill of this kind, which looks to be a very practicable problem, namely, of preserving and maintaining the health and the physical vitality of the men who are to build our ships and manufacture our munitions, that it is just as essential as if we had been asked for an additional $50,000,000 to take care of the men on the other side. I hope that the amendment that was offered by my friend from California will be defeated, and I hope that the committee is back here in the shortest possible number of hours to get the money so that they may be able to go to work. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a very carefully worked-out full report as to the enlistment and subscriptions for war work of all sorts that have occurred in the city of St. Louis and in the State of Missouri since the war was declared.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing certain statistics. Is there objection? [Afer a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEEKER. Under permission granted me to extend my remarks, I wish to insert in the RECORD a statement prepared by the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce. This sets forth very clearly and tersely what St. Louis has done in the way of war work and war service.

During the latter part of April of last year I called to pay my respects to the President, and he said to me at that time: "I have received no set of resolutions from any legislative body, either State or municipal, that pledged more cheerfully and unreservedly the support of those for whom they spoke than the resolutions that came from the Board of Aldermen of St. Louis and signed by the mayor of that city."

Without much ado St. Louis has gone about her war tasks with a zeal and an energy that is, indeed, remarkable; and, after all, it is what individuals and citizens do rather than what they merely talk about that will count in winning the war.

While attention is called to the fact that there is a small percentage of "born-in-Germany population," let it be remembered that some of these very citizens have been foremost in our war activities. When you read the report as to the number of naval recruits, it will interest you to know that more than 700 of these recruits were obtained by a citizen by the name of Paul Werner, who has seen service in the German Navy and, since he became naturalized, served a long time in the Navy of the United States. He is now physically disqualified for service, and is a moving-picture machine operator. With his own savings he rented headquarters in South St. Louis and, earning his livelihood at his profession at night, he has spent his days in personally soliciting men for the Navy. More than 700 of his recruits have been accepted and are now in service. On the other hand, some of the very heaviest purchasers of bonds and subscribers to the Red Cross and other war-relief work, not only in St. Louis but in the Middle West, are St. Louis citizens of immediate German parentage.

We have all learned of late that the question of loyalty or disloyalty is not a matter of ancestry. Some of the most active and persistent pacifists—and thereby aids to the Kaiser and his cause—are men and women who have not a drop of German blood in their veins. Loyalty to one's nation is a matter of soul and not of name or flesh.

St. Louis, the all-American city, realizing that she has not done all that she might do, and determined to do more than she has done, calls to her sister cities throughout the Nation to, with her, spend their last ounce of strength, both in resources and in men, to bring victory to our arms at the earliest possible hour. The statement from the chamber of commerce follows:

WHAT EVERY AMERICAN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHER AND EVERY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL SHOULD KNOW.

The percentage of population that is foreign born, compared to the total population of this city, proves St. Louis to be a real American city, and coincides exactly with the foremost position St. Louis has taken in enlistments, Red Cross, liberty bonds, war-savings stamps, and all other war activities.

Foreign-born population.

[1910 census.]

	Population.	Foreign born.	Per cent.
St. Louis	687,029	125,706	18
Detroit	465,766	156,585	33
Cleveland	560,663	195,703	34
Boston	670,585	240,722	35
Chicago	2,185,283	781,217	35
Bridgeport	102,054	36,180	35

Born-in-Germany population.

The percentage of population born in Germany is as follows:

	Population.	German born.	Per cent.
St. Louis	687,029	47,766	6.95
Cleveland	590,663	41,408	7.38
Cincinnati	363,591	28,423	7.81
Chicago	2,185,283	182,289	8.34
Detroit	465,766	44,675	9.59
Buffalo	423,715	43,815	10.34
Milwaukee	373,857	64,816	17.33

These figures are compiled from the United States Census Bureau's figures, 1910 statistics, and have been submitted to the Washington authorities, in final answer to the many unjust rumors which, from one source or another, have come to their attention.

AN AMERICAN CITY.

Everybody not provincial has known for many years that St. Louis is the most American among the greater cities of the United States. St. Louisans have answered Chicago taunts of greater numbers with the old fable of the lion and the more fecund wolf. But there is still so much of provincialism abroad, particularly in the East, that the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce has felt it to be necessary to compile comparative statistics showing that the German-born population of St. Louis constitutes a smaller percentage of the St. Louis total than the same population does in either New York, Chicago, Cleveland, or Detroit.

It is the war which makes the native German selected for this comparison. In St. Louis the native Germans are but 0.069 per cent; in Chicago they are 0.08; in Milwaukee, 0.17; in Buffalo, 0.10; and in Cincinnati, 0.07. These decimal fractions in what have long been supposed to be great German centers would indicate that the enemy alien is not as dangerous in numbers as has been supposed, but the more important fact they reveal, in view of provincial hysterics and nightmares, is that St. Louis ranks only seventh among American cities in the number of its German-born population.

In all sorts of foreign-born population St. Louis shows but 18 per cent, while both Chicago and Boston score with 35 per cent, Cleveland with 34, and Detroit with 33. There was a heavy German movement to St. Louis for a half dozen years after the Civil War, which was reflected in the census of 1870, showing this city to be leading for the first time both Chicago and Cincinnati. Emigrant trains were crossing Illinois prairies daily bringing them here by thousands. But that was a long time ago, and not all of them stopped here. The response of St. Louis to every call for troops, money, or supplies is a sufficient test of its Americanism. If more is desired, the chamber of commerce has supplied the conclusive proof. (Globe-Democrat, Mar. 8, 1918.)

St. Louis has not done more than she should, or as much as she expects to do; but her war record to-day is one any American city could be proud of. We want you to look it over as printed, then think of it before you say, or permit others to say, other than good of St. Louis, an American city.

More than 32,000 St. Louisans in American fighting forces.

United States Regular Army recruiting:
Regular Army	7,373
National Guard	302
National Army	1,218
Enlisted Reserve Corps	334
Training camp for officers	1,281
British recruiting	22
Quartermaster and mechanical repair shops of National Army	90
United States Marines	2,957
United States Navy	4,459
Twelfth United States Engineers	1,200
First Regiment National Guard (One hundred and thirty-eighth Infantry)	1,800
Fifth Regiment National Guard (One hundred and thirty-eighth Infantry)	2,000
First Missouri Field Artillery	900
Missouri Signal Corps	300
National Army (selective draft)	4,377
Medical Reserve Corps and medical units	1,200
Aviation Service	500
Intelligence, Ordnance, Quartermaster, Red Cross, Red Triangle, etc., directly connected with war and war relief work	2,000
Total	32,313

NOTE.—The figures included in the table are for enlistments from April 1, 1917, to February 28, 1918, and have been prepared on a conservative basis. Wherever there was a possibility of duplication in the constituent service being included in the Regular Army the figures have been omitted from the calculations.

ONE ST. LOUISAN IN EVERY 24 IN UNITED STATES SERVICE.

St. Louis has offered 1 person for service in the United States fighting forces out of every 24 of its population. Think that over just a moment.

St. Louis and surrounding country in Missouri has furnished second to the largest number of applicants for the Navy, regardless of size of population. Only New York furnished more applicants.

In December, when the Government asked St. Louis for 1,200 Navy recruits in 30 days, the chamber of commerce raised $9,500 for handling the campaign advertising, etc., and received more than the desired amount in 15 days, and almost doubled the number in the month.

St. Louis has led the entire United States in marine recruiting. During October the Government limited St. Louis to one recruit a day.

Prior to the draft the Nation's volunteer quota was placed at 1 per cent of the population, making St. Louis's quota 8,000. The city supplied 9,730 volunteers for service, an excess of 21.6 per cent.

Ferguson, a St. Louis suburb, perhaps holds the national honors for recruiting. Of its 1,935 inhabitants, 125 enlisted, or 7 per cent of its population. Besides this, Ferguson recruited a home guard company of 100.

Since January 1, 1918, 2,028 have been recruited in St. Louis for the three branches of the service.

WENT "OVER THE TOP" FOR EVERY CAMPAIGN.

Liberty loan: Subscribed $42,000,000 to first loan; quota was $25,000,000.

Second loan: Subscribed, $74,000,000; maximum quota, $68,000,000.

The St. Louis district subscribed $184,280,750; the quota was $120,000,000, being 54 per cent oversubscribed, which was exactly the oversubscription of the entire loan.

Red Cross: St. Louis raised $2,000,000; the quota was $1,000,000.

St. Louis was asked to get 150,000 Red Cross members. The total secured was 242,000.

The southwestern district's quota was 1,162,000 Red Cross members; members secured, 3,250,000.

Again, St. Louis went "over the top" for the Knights of Columbus fund for $80,000.

St. Louis gave $51,129,463.83 to the Y. M. C. A. red triangle fund.

St. Louis's subscription to the Young Men's Hebrew Association fund was $200,000.

St. Louis to date (Mar. 15) has bought $5,227,000 war savings stamps, having taken up a larger percentage of its quota than any other American city. The State of Missouri is in the same relative position, leading the United States in subscriptions on its quota to date, with sales of $13,010,256.

THE AMERICAN CITY.

St. Louis as well as Cincinnati is still referred to frequently, along with Milwaukee, as one of the "German" cities of America.

There was a time when the reference was justified by the facts. That, although the city remains the headquarters of many religious and other organizations founded by early German settlers, it is no longer accurate is due to the shiftings in population typical of American cities. The large percentage of German residents resulting from the great inrush of German immigrants just before and just after the Civil War has steadily declined because of decrease in those coming here from Germany and increase of native Americans coming from other sections of the Union.

Figures compiled by the Chamber of Commerce show that St. Louis has but 6.9 per cent of persons of German nativity and Cincinnati 7 per cent. The percentage in both cities is exceeded by that in Chicago, Buffalo, and Detroit. The Milwaukee percentage is 17.

St. Louis is not only the least German of the large western cities but it is the most American of all the great centers of the United States. Its percentage of all foreign-born residents is only 18, while that of New York, Boston, and Chicago is 35, that of Cleveland 34, and that of Detroit 33. The impression that it is largely dominated by influences having their origin in the German element is simply a survival of an idea that had some basis of truth in the time of our fathers and grandfathers. Most of the "Germans" we have are Americans. (Post-Dispatch, Mar. 9, 1918.)

CITY HAD FIRST FOOD-CONSERVATION ORGANIZATION.

St. Louis had the first food-conservation organization in the United States, and many of the ideas developed by this conservation committee have been nationally adopted, such as the conservation normal school, community canneries, and Hoover lunch rooms. Due to the efforts of this committee there has been a reduction in the city's garbage in six months of a total of 8,000,000 pounds.

Three hundred and forty-two thousand women signed the Hoover pledge in St. Louis—more than any other city, regardless of size.

Last spring St. Louis plowed up 700 acres of back yards and lots for thrift gardens.

More than 1,000 St. Louis boys have enlisted in the Aviation Division.

A school for plastic surgery has been established in the city and over 350 officers already trained there.

In one-half day's time St. Louis raised a fund of $100,000, and inside of 60 days recruited 3,000 men for two home guard regiments, being the first American city to have two regiments of home guards completely equipped, even to machine guns and armored motor cars.

One of the first hospital units to land in France was from St. Louis, which was outfitted by the St. Louis Chapter of the American Red Cross at an expense of $60,000.

RED CROSS DOING WONDERFUL WORK IN DISTRICT.

Five thousand St. Louis women are registered to do knitting, and over 400 work daily in the Red Cross factory here. One thousand women are making Red Cross bandages. St. Louis has a wholesale Red Cross warehouse, supplying five States or 3,000 Red Cross chapters. The headquarters for the entire southwestern division of the American Red Cross are located in St. Louis.

Eight hundred young women have been given a course in nursing by the Red Cross people here and are ready to serve as nurse assistants in France.

Sixty young women have graduated as auto mechanics to serve as ambulance drivers. The local chapter of the American Red Cross is spending on an average of $30,000 a month.

St. Louis is spending $100,000 in war camp community service.

St. Louis is selling $45,000 worth of smileage books.

Three classes of army balloonists have been turned out at the balloon school here, one of the first schools of the sort in the country. This plant is being tripled in size.

Fifteen miles from St. Louis is one of the country's great aviation schools—Scott Field.

Every factory in the St. Louis district—there are 3,450 of them—has a good portion of their capacity given over to war production. Yet there is ample capacity, labor, capital, and housing for increased production of this sort.

ST. LOUISANS IN FOREGROUND OF WAR HEROES.

Within five months after the declaration of war St. Louis recruited and equipped an entire additional regiment of National Guards.

The second ambulance corps to land in France was from St. Louis.

One hundred and three St. Louis schools, with 70,000 pupils, are now 100 per cent Red Cross.

Diesel engines, necessary both to submarine and ship construction, are being turned out exclusively in St. Louis in large quantities by the Busch-Sulzer-Diesel Engine Co.

We are not mentioning these things in a bragging way, but simply to show that in the important factors of the war, Red Cross enlistments, liberty loan, heroism—or whatever the call—St. Louis has answered every fresh demand upon its manhood and womanhood, upon its finances, upon its resources, in a manner that refutes the casual slur of those here and there to the effect that St. Louis is dominated by an alien population and that it is apathetic toward the progress of the war and slow in its exhibit of patriotism.

Compare this record, item by item, with that of any other city, and then judge of St. Louis's patriotism. Read the tables on the front page of this folder and then nail any accusation of foreign influence in connection with the metropolis of the Mississippi Valley, the "city surrounded by the United States."

Not said boastfully, but that the United States may know the truth about St. Louis and Missouri.

ST. LOUIS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 3, after the word "authorize," insert "Provided, That not less than $10,000,000 of the amount hereby authorized shall be used to build or acquire as herein provided housing accommodations within the District of Columbia."

Mr. MAPES. I am heartily in favor of this bill. It requires no argument to convince anyone at all familiar with the conditions prevailing throughout the country and in the District of Columbia that it is a highly important and necessary piece of legislation. This amendment which I have introduced is in harmony with the one just adopted increasing the amount authorized by the bill from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000, which was recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and introduced by the chairman of that committee. The purpose of that amendment was to increase the appropriation so as to make available $10,000,000 to provide housing accommodations in the District of Columbia. My amendment is for the purpose of incorporating in the bill the specific provision that $10,000,000 of the amount authorized shall be actually used within the District.

There is now on the calendar a bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia which I introduced authorizing an appropriation of $10,000,000 for this same purpose. If this bill passes with the amendment I have proposed, it will not be necessary to pass the other bill.

It is not necessary to discuss the need of additional housing accommodations within the District with anyone who has lived here, even temporarily, as every Member of the House has, and conditions are getting worse and worse as time goes on.

In a letter of the president of the Civil Service Commission, a copy of which is printed in the hearings held before the committee on this bill, it is stated that 20,000 new Government employees came to Washington last year, who, with their families, increased the population approximately 50,000, and it is estimated that 20,000 more employees, making an increase of another 50,000 to the population, will be added this year, or a total increase of population in two years of 100,000. Contrary to what one might expect, the president of the commission says that the number being appointed to positions is constantly increasing, and that the maximum will not be reached until some time in July.

The letter goes on to state what everyone here knows to be the fact—that many people do not take the civil service examination at all on account of the difficulty of securing suitable living accommodations, and of those who do take the examination and are placed upon the eligible lists practically one-half refuse to accept appointment for the same reason. As the president of the commission well says, it is its duty to furnish eligibles for the necessary Government offices, but it is impossible for the commission to function unless additional housing facilities are provided. That being the case, it necessarily follows that the Government will be hampered in its prosecution of the war unless something is done to provide better housing accommodations for the Government employees and their families. I hope that the chairman of the committee will accept my amendment to make sure that $10,000,000 of the amount authorized by the bill will be used in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, will the gentleman have any objection to changing his amendment so as to say "not more than $10,000,000"? If the gentleman will do that, I think the committee will accept it.

Mr. MAPES. My idea was to have the House express the opinion that $10,000,000 ought to be spent here within the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say to the gentleman I think we had better leave that in the discretion of the persons who are to execute the law, because we do not know just what ought to be spent here. We could spend $10,000,000, and I suggest that the gentleman say not more than $10,000,000 shall be spent, and I will be very glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. MAPES. It seems to me if that language were adopted there would not be any purpose to my amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; there would.

Mr. MAPES. My idea is to require $10,000,000 to be spent in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman that would be a clear intimation to the Secretary of Labor that it was the purpose and, I will say to the gentleman, it was the intention of the committee that about $10,000,000 should be spent in the District of Columbia, and that is the occasion for this amendment which has just been adopted. I do not like to make it mandatory that he should spend that much. It is possible there may not be $10,000,000 spent altogether; we can not tell; but if you say that he should spend not more than $10,000,000, that will give him authority to go to that limit in the District of Columbia, and we are perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. BURNETT. And, in addition to what the chairman has said, I will say to the gentleman that will be an indication of the legislative mind that it is expected that, if it is necessary, up to that amount will be spent, and I think will accomplish what the gentleman has in mind and at the same time without making it peremptory. I think it very likely if these hotel arrangements as spoken of are adopted and some large dormitories are erected, very likely we will get through on half of $10,000,000, but it gives the right to spend the $10,000,000 if necessary. But certainly it ought not to be peremptory for him to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman and other members of the committee if they would be willing to accept the language "$10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary," shall be spent in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment so that it will read as the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAPES moves to modify his amendment, as follows:

"Provided, That $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the amount hereby authorized, shall be used to build or acquire, as herein provided, housing accommodations within the District of Columbia."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think that out of $60,000,000 to be appropriated for the housing made necessary in all parts of the United States, that one-sixth of it is a little bit heavy for the District of Columbia?

Mr. MAPES. No; the gentleman does not. And I will say to the gentleman from Washington that, in my opinion, he need not be alarmed at the amount authorized in this bill. If anything, we ought to authorize a good deal more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to have a short letter read to go into the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALBANY, N. Y., March 28, 1918.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
Office Building, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CLARK: Surrounded as we are by conditions and emergencies that call for the utmost efforts and sacrifices of every patriotic American, and knowing the immense responsibility that you and your committee are continually assuming in the interests of our Government and the democracy and freedom of the world, I want you to know that if there is any way in which I, as an individual or as a public official, can help you in any of your problems, I would consider it a privilege to do so.

My tender of service is not bound by any conditions and is forwarded to you prompted by the patriotic desire which I believe animates every loyal citizen.

Faithfully, yours, L. F. PILCHER, State Architect.

[Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves——

Mr. BARNHART. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. Was the last amendment offered by the chairman of the committee adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It was adopted.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10265) to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment making an appropriation for the District of Columbia—the Mapes amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for a separate vote on the amendment appropriating $10,000,000 for the District of Columbia.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If no other separate vote is demanded on other amendments, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken on this bill may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

PAY OF RETIRED CHIEF WARRANT OFFICERS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his point until I can present a conference report?

Mr. GILLETT. I do.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I submit for printing under the rule the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty.

Following are the conference report and accompanying statement:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 455).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House amending the title, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House inserting section 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the engrossed amendments, strike out the words "performed or," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "been on active duty since August 29, 1916, or who"; and the House agree to the same.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report:

The amendment to the House amendment inserting section 2 makes the provision regulating the pay of retired warrant officers conform to that regulating the pay of retired chief warrant officers by substituting in the beginning of said section 2 the same language as is in section 1.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts renews his point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. One moment. I want to make a statement.

Mr. DENT and Mr. POU rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] that I said to the minority leader, Mr. GILLETT, an hour or half an hour ago, that we would not take up anything after the housing bill had been finished to-day. I understood then that it would probably take all the afternoon to finish that bill, and some Members have left. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Alabama will not insist now upon calling up the measures they have in hand, but will be willing to take them up on Thursday.

Mr. DENT. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. POU. That is satisfactory to me. I would like to say a word. I do not know that anything can be accomplished by trying to go faster than you can go, but I want to remind Members of the House of the fact that there are one or two propositions pending that are absolutely necessary to be acted upon; without them the activities of the War Department are being paralyzed. One of them is the quota bill, which we hoped would come up immediately after this bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw his point.

Mr. GILLETT. I have done so.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WALDOW. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2617. An act to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish; and

H. R. 10365. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge agross White River at Forsyth, Mo.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2469. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 3, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GREENE of Vermont, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3980) to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 449), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BRAND, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11167) to require cashiers, other officers, and employees of a national banking association handling its funds, books, or assets to give bond, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 453), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 297) directing the Secretary of War to furnish the House the facts in reference to the issuance of a commission as captain to Herbert A. Meyer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 454), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. WATKINS: A bill (H. R. 11186) providing for an increase of the salary of the United States attorney for the western district of Louisiana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURRY of California: A bill (H. R. 11187) to provide for the punishment of disloyalty, sabotage, and acts of terrorism, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCORMICK: A bill (H. R. 11188) to amend section 1009 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 11189) to promote military training by providing scholarships for students enrolled in public institutions of higher learning, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. TREADWAY: A bill (H. R. 11190) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto approved October 6, 1917; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. POU: Resolution (H. Res. 299) providing for the consideration of S. J. Res. 123; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 11191) granting an increase of pension to Urias Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11192) granting an increase of pension to William J. Van Hoose; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 11193) granting a pension to Catherine Ellis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11194) for the relief of Ferdinand A. Roy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11195) granting a pension to Sophronia N. Waite; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETT: A bill (H. R. 11196) granting a pension to Thomas H. Lillis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 11197) granting an increase of pension to John G. Powers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE of Vermont: A bill (H. R. 11198) granting an increase of pension to Charles Plummer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 11199) granting a pension to Sarah Vaughn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 11200) for the relief of William H. Watt; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 11201) granting an increase of pension to John Hebenthal; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOBECK: A bill (H. R. 11202) granting a pension to Ida A. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11203) granting an increase of pension to Jacob M. Evans; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 11204) granting an increase of pension to Christopher Kneup; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 11205) to transfer George Ufford from the list of chief machinist's mates, United States Navy retired, to the list of chief machinists, United States Navy retired; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. OVERMYER: A bill (H. R. 11206) granting a pension to Harry Hoffman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RANDALL: A bill (H. R. 11207) to reimburse Jason J. Green; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11208) to reimburse Orpha Rebecca Dudley; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11209) to reimburse John Nave Ellis; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11210) to reimburse Margaret Elizabeth Ellis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED: A bill (H. R. 11211) granting a pension to Carl C. Dunham; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBBINS: A bill (H. R. 11212) granting an increase of pension to James T. Peale; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 11213) granting an increase of pension to Thomas P. Pope; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNER: A bill (H. R. 11214) granting a pension to James F. McIntosh; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11215) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. Russell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma: Petition of the citizens of Craig County, Okla., for the regulation of prices of food supplies, fuel, food for live stock, shoes, clothing, farm implements, etc.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. NOLAN: Petitions of United Irish Societies of Chicago (Thomas P. Bonfield, secretary), 154 West Randolph Street, Chicago; Ladies' Auxiliary of California, Division No. 12, Ancient Order of Hibernians of America (Winifred Collins, secretary), Hibernian Hall, 454 Valencia Street, San Francisco; and Robert Emmet Division, No. 4, Ladies' Auxiliary in Ancient Order of Hibernians of America (Mary E. O'Connor, secretary), Columbus Hall, 3316 Mission Street, San Francisco, favoring House joint resolution No. 204, by Miss JEANNETTE RANKIN; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. REED: Papers to accompany House bill 11178, to increase the pension of James McCune, jr.; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of 124 citizens of Tingley, Iowa, petitioning Congress for national prohibition during the war and to prevent our grains being sent to England and France for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 3, 1918.

The Senate met at 1 o'clock p. m.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, our hope and help in these days of stress and strain, we humbly supplicate Thy presence continually, so that whether we think of conditions at home or abroad we may be sure that the success of the arms of our soldiers with their allies shall be realized, and we trust speedily. Graciously guide Thy servants in all their duties and upon the President smile with Thine approbation. We humbly beseech Thee, in Christ our Lord's name. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore assumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the secretary of state of the State of Delaware, inclosing, in accordance with instructions from the governor of that State, a certified copy of the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was passed at the special session of the general assembly, which will be read and placed on the files of the Senate.

The communication is as follows:

STATE OF DELAWARE,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
Dover, Del., April 2, 1918.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with instructions from his excellency, John G. Townsend, jr., governor of the State of Delaware, I am herewith inclosing certified copy of the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was passed at the special session of the general assembly.

Kindly acknowledge receipt of same and oblige,

Very truly, yours,

EVERETT C. JOHNSON,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF DELAWARE,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
DOVER.

I, John G. Townsend, jr., governor of the State of Delaware, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 3, approved the 26th day of March, A. D. 1918, as the same appears on file in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Delaware.

Joint resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes, and giving to the Congress and the several States concurrent power to enforce the same by appropriate legislation.

Whereas the Congress of the United States has proposed an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, as follows:

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Delaware in General Assembly met, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislature of the State of Delaware; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State at Washington, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

HERVEY P. HALL,
Speaker of the House.
LEWIS E. ELIASON,
President of the Senate.

Approved March 26, 1918.

JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr., Governor.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Delaware to be affixed at Dover this 29th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1918, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-second.

[SEAL.] JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.

By the governor:

EVERETT C. JOHNSON,
Secretary of State.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10265. An act to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs; and

H. R. 11123. An act to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2469. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney;

H. R. 2617. An act to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish; and

H. R. 10365. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge across White River at Forsyth, Mo.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pine Bluffs, Albion, and Lagrange, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for national prohibition as a war measure; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in the year 1918.]

Resolutions relative to the independence of Ireland.

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby requests that the Congress of the United States, if it shall be deemed expedient, shall recommend that the right of Ireland to be a free and independent country be considered at any peace conference which may be held at the termination of the present war; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted March 14, 1918.
In senate, adopted, in concurrence, March 19, 1918.
A true copy.
Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Manchester, Conn., and a petition of the Council of Jewish Women of Hartford, Conn., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lyme, Conn., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Old Lyme, Conn., remonstrating against the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for enactment of legislation to impose punishment upon all persons destroying or attempting to destroy property and committing other outrages in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of the Texas Aberdeen-Angus Breeders' Association, of Fort Worth, Tex., praying for enactment of legislation to provide for the eradication of tuberculosis and for indemnity to owners of tubercular cattle, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of City Development of San Angelo, Tex., favoring a boycott on German goods and that the teaching of the German language be discontinued in the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3663) authorizing the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians residing in the State of Washington to submit claims to the Court of Claims, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 352) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9506) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 354) thereon.

Mr. NUGENT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4910) to authorize the establishment of a town site on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 353) thereon.

Mr. OWEN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back adversely the bill (S. 4137) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, with the recommendation of its indefinite postponement, and I submit a report (No. 355) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERKS.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably with amendments Senate resolution 75, and I call the attention of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the resolution.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 2, after the word "Senator," to insert the words "having no more employees than one clerk, one assistant clerk, and one messenger, for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman"; on page 2, line 2, strike out "first" and insert "second"; and in line 3 strike out "$4 per diem" and insert "$100 per month," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That each Senator having no more employees than one clerk, one assistant clerk, and one messenger, for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman, is hereby authorized to employ an additional clerk for the remainder of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, at the rate of $100 per month, said compensation to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4247) granting an increase of pension to Josephine A. Haley; and

A bill (S. 4248) granting an increase of pension to Annie Robbins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 4249) granting a pension to Sarah E. White (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4250) granting an increase of pension to Alanson H. Nelson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4251) granting an increase of pension to Wesley C. Sharp (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 4252) granting an increase of pension to Monroe Eddy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLIS:

A bill (S. 4253) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus B. Norris (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4254) for the relief of Marion B. Patterson, widow of the late Gen. Robert F. Patterson; to the Committee on Claims;

A bill (S. 4255) granting a pension to Ida E. Morrill; and

A bill (S. 4256) granting a pension to Hannah M. Flaherty; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4257) to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 4258) granting a pension to John H. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

PRICES OF FOODSTUFFS.

Mr. THOMPSON. I submit the following resolution and ask that it be read:

The resolution (S. Res. 221) was read, as follows:

Whereas the prices of meat, poultry, eggs, butter, canned goods, and other necessaries of life alleged to be handled and controlled by the packing industries of the country have become so high that it is difficult for people of limited means or for laborers working for daily wages to purchase in sufficient quantities to properly sustain life, provoking dissatisfaction among the masses of the people; and

Whereas the packing plants under private control seem powerless to so control and regulate the labor employed in their plants as to keep them contented and satisfied without striking and resorting to violent methods to redress their grievances, which has delayed and prevented the production to the full capacity of the plants and has caused failure to promptly fill Government contracts; and

Whereas the high prices and unreasonable monopolistic control by the packers has greatly increased the cost of foodstuffs to supply the Army and Navy during the war, thereby diminishing our fighting power in the war; and

Whereas the limited control through the Food Administration of said packing industries is so ineffective, and the allowance of a profit to the packers above all losses, no matter how caused, of from 9 per cent to 15 per cent on their investment, including all borrowed money, which, through the control by the packers of the financial institutions of the country, was borrowed at a very low rate of interest, is unreasonable and difficult to carry out owing to the peculiar methods of bookkeeping employed by the packers to arrive at the profit allowed by the Government, all of which, as shown by the investigation carried on by the Federal Trade Commission, the hearings conducted by the Senate Agricultural Committee and other congressional committees, has resulted in great injury and loss to the people of the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the United States Government take over, control, and operate all the establishments known and designated as packing houses or packing plants now existing in the United States, to the end that the greatest and most complete service to the people and the country be obtained during the period of the present existing war.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so referred.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill with the Senate amendments and accompanying papers.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF ESPIONAGE ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. NELSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 11123. An act to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EDUCATION OF ADULT ILLITERATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to suggest the following amendment: On page 2, in line 3, after "and," strike out the word "others" and insert the words "those engaged in educational work in cantonments and camps."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that for the moment the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is not in order because an amendment was pending to which an amendment was offered.

The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] proposed the following amendment:

On page 2 beginning with line 14 after the words "nineteen hundred and eighteen." strike out "and $50,000 for each succeeding fiscal year until June 30, 1928."

Before striking out, the Senator from Georgia moves to perfect the part proposed to be stricken out by striking out "1928" and inserting in lieu thereof "1922."

Mr. GALLINGER. I appeal to the Senator from Georgia to make that "1920" instead of "1922." That will give an appropriation for three years, and if it works well there will be no difficulty in getting future appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have reduced the time to 1922. I know that there can be good work done. That is a very small appropriation. I hope the Senator will not insist upon reducing it still further.

Mr. GALLINGER. Entertaining the views I do, and I should like to vote for the bill, I shall feel compelled to offer the amendment. Of course, the Senate can do with it what it pleases, but I hoped the Senator from Georgia would agree to it.

Mr. SMITH or Georgia. I do not think it ought to be done. I think to reduce it below 1922 is unwise. If the Senate sees fit to do it, of course——

Mr. GALLINGER. Regretting that the Senator does not respond affirmatively to my suggestion, I move to amend the proposed amendment by striking out "1922" and substituting "1920."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before that is acted upon I should like to have the views of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], who is equally interested with myself in the bill. It is the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that we put the period 1920 instead of 1922, giving only three years.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Vermont is something of a Yankee and he would suggest that the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from New Hampshire split.

Mr. GALLINGER. I accept that, Mr. President, and move to make it 1921.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the proposition is to make it 1921, and I agree to it, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire as modified, inserting "1921" instead of "1922," is agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The proposition of the Senator from Utah is to strike out the entire period beyond the first year. I think that would seriously injure the measure, and I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. GALLINGER. If agreeable to the Senator from Utah to withhold his motion, I should like to offer two or three minor amendments.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to withhold the motion until the Senator from New Hampshire offers such amendments as he may desire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to line 6, page 1. After the word "methods" I move to insert the words "and promoting plans," using the language in the title.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 4, page 2, after the word "operation," I move to insert the words "and in carrying on the work night schools may be established and utilized."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I hardly think that is in harmony with the bill, because they are not allowed to use this money for schools; they are only to use the money to stimulate schools and work out plans for the schools conducted by local authority. None of this money can be used to hire teachers. This money can be used to work out the plans and to send representatives to cities to urge the organization in the cities and to help plan the way of conducting the schools.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator says they can not hire teachers; but they can accept voluntary teaching, of course.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true; to that extent it can be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or they might have night schools for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With that view I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in lines 16 and 17, on page 2, section 2, it is provided:

That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay teachers or school officers—

And so forth.

In view of what the Senator from Georgia said a moment ago I shall not offer an amendment at that point which I had in mind, but will simply content myself by suggesting to the Senator that if the bill shall pass and the amendment of the title comes up I hope he will see that the words "and the District of Columbia" shall be inserted in the title after the word "States."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Georgia having the bill in charge. I notice on line 7 the expression, which is rather extraordinary and certainly not usual statutory language, "meager education." I should like to inquire of the Senator how he defines "meager education"? Is it a lack of knowledge of Latin and Greek or of the higher mathematics? Where do we begin at the "meager" stage, and also who is to be the judge of the "meager" conditions?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The bill, as a whole, as has been stated a number of times, is simply intended to stimulate education among the illiterate and to seek to remove illiteracy. I would say that a lack of ability to write one's name would be a very "meager education," although such a person could read a little. This bill is designed to stimulate education among adults, and especially among the illiterates.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I fully understand the purpose of the bill, and I do not share the annoyance of some Senators at the inadequate character of the appropriation, for I feel entirely satisfied that if the Federal Government goes into a scheme of education—which, in the history of our Government, has heretofore belonged to the States—there will be an expenditure of many millions annually, instead of the insignificant sum of $100,000 which is named in the bill; but before we start on this venture I am quite curious to know what is meant by "meager education."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Pennsylvania objects to the language, I am willing to have it stricken out and to leave the word "illiterates," if the Senator understands that better.

Mr. PENROSE. I certainly think the phrase a most extraordinary one. An adjective has no place in a statute anyway. If the Senator had any clearly defined idea in his mind when he used the word "meager," I have an absorbing curiosity to know just what it means.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have stated that I presented the bill, believing in its general purposes, not having prepared the bill myself.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Georgia also stated that he entertained the view that bills of this kind presented in this way could with great propriety be considered and perfected upon the floor of the Senate, and that he was not one of those who objected to their being so perfected by the Senate itself. If the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to strike out the word "meager," I shall not object.

Mr. PENROSE. As the Senator from Georgia disavows the paternity of the measure, has he any objection to stating who is its author?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not the slightest. I opened the consideration of the bill with that information. I obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior commending the bill and fully discussing the occasion which brought to his attention the necessity for such legislation. It was the discovery that there were 700,000 illiterates, who were in part men who could not speak English, among those drafted and those covered by the present draft.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, the Senator from Georgia has defined "meager education" to mean an inability to sign one's name. Why not put that language in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not undertake to definitely describe it. It means certainly a very limited education.

Mr. PENROSE. I would suggest the insertion of the words "or including inability to sign one's name."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the same purpose would really be reached if the word "illiterates" were simply left.

Mr. PENROSE. I have some reluctance to see the word "meager" go out of the bill; it is such an extraordinary word.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, suppose we leave it in.

Mr. PENROSE. But, in the interest of elegance of diction, I move to strike out the language "and men and women of meager education."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no special objection to that, because I think the word "illiterates" covers it.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the Senator from Georgia has no objection at all to that language being stricken out. I hope he cheerfully agrees to that being done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no objection to seeking to stimulate and improve the education of adults who have very limited education.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I move to strike out the language "and men and women of meager education."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "and men and women of meager education."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from South Dakota will pardon the Chair a moment, the Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to line 22, page 2, where similar language occurs.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; the phrase occurs again in lines 21 and 22, where it reads "and men and women of meager education." That would be included in my original amendment to strike out those words also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment going to the form of the bill. On page 1, line 8, I move to strike out the words "to aid," and in lieu thereof to insert the words "in aiding."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no objection to that. It is simply a matter of language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendments heretofore agreed to, at the top of page 2, after the words "United States, to aid the States in teaching English to aliens and naturalized citizens," it is proposed to strike out the words "to aid" and to insert the words "in aiding."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question in this way: The question is on reconsidering the amendment as adopted for the purpose of adopting the amendment now offered by the Senator from South Dakota. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the motion by which the amendment was adopted is reconsidered. The Senator from South Dakota offers the amendment which has just been reported. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment as a matter of form. On page 2, line 2, after the word "and," I move to insert the words "the commissioner shall," so that the language shall read:

The commissioner shall cooperate with the State, county, district, and municipal education officers.

I am not sure whether that language is included in the amendment or not. If so, I would move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3——

Mr. STERLING. Line 2 of the reprint.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he is informed by the Secretary that amendments are being offered to the bill in its reprinted form and not to the original bill as it is being considered. Senators will have to reduce their amendments to writing.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, before the word "cooperate," it is proposed to insert the words "the commissioner shall."

Mr. GALLINGER. So that it will read?

The SECRETARY. So that it will read:

To promote plans for the elimination of illiteracy, and the extension of education among the adult population, and the commissioner shall cooperate with State, county, district, and municipal education officers and others in putting these plans into operation, and in carrying on the work night schools may be established and utilized: Provided, That any action taken by the Commissioner of Education to remove illiteracy among the enlisted men of the Army or Navy shall be undertaken only by the approval and direction of the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy, respectively.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the reading just given by the Secretary incorporates at the proper place the language I suggested as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this bill, in my opinion, belongs to an ancient vintage. It is clearly an effort on the part of the head of a bureau to get hold of $100,000 to expand his activities and perhaps create additional useless places in the midst of this war crisis, when the money could well be devoted to better purposes. I move to add the following as a proviso at the end of the bill:

Provided, That no additional salaried positions shall be permitted under this act, and no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the additional compensation of any employee in the Office of the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to voice my protest against the whole bill. My impulse when it was first presented to the Senate was to vote for it. I was attracted favorably to the measure by the suggestion that it was for the education of illiterates, particularly those amongst the soldiers that might return from the Army in France. Without meaning that this shall apply to the distinguished advocates of the bill, I wish to state, Mr. President, that it has sometimes been said with a good deal of truth "that patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel."

This bill, as the Senator from Georgia has said, was not prepared by him; I am sure it was not prepared by him; and I think I can safely say that it had very little consideration at the hands of the committee. I voted yesterday to recommit it to the committee for the purpose of reconciling its inconsistencies and coordinating its provisions with legislation that now appears upon the statute books of our country.

I oppose this bill, Mr. President, first, because it proposes a duplication of work now done by a bureau of the Department of Labor. That is the first proposition. I oppose it, secondly, because the appropriation asked for is but a forerunner of immense appropriations that will be asked for a little later on; and I am going to prove by the advocates of the bill themselves that when they ask for fifty or even a hundred thousand dollars it is not sincere, and that it is their purpose later on to ask for much larger sums. Thirdly, I am entirely opposed, Mr. President, to the methods of the Bureau of Education in this and in other matters.

About a year and a half ago it developed here, in the discussion of an appropriation bill before the Senate, that this bureau had innumerable men in its employ at a dollar a year, paid by the United States, with their real salaries paid by private persons and corporations, representing all sorts of propaganda, some of which might have been in the interest of America but some entirely opposed to the institutions of our country. So a proviso was added to that bill to undertake, if possible, to limit the activities of the Bureau of Education and those who were affiliated with it.

I make no charge against the distinguished Secretary of the Interior, but I say that this bureau is being and has been operated in the interest of individuals and interests which in some instances are opposed to the best interests of our Government.

I am not going into the whole subject, as it was fully gone into at that time; but I call the attention of the committee to this proposition: A resolution was at that time introduced in and adopted by the Senate calling upon the different departments of the Government to furnish a list of men who were working at $1 per year in the several departments and at the same time receiving salaries from private persons and sources. Amongst other names reported by the Bureau of Education and by the Secretary of the Interior was this list [indicating]. There are 152 names of persons thereon who were so employed. I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] stated at that time there were 152 of such persons on the list.

Mr. PENROSE. May I ask the Senator from what document he is reading?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 26, 1917, at page 2308.

Mr. PENROSE. Is that an extract from the report?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am going to read an extract from the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

At least 150 names were furnished to the Senate of individuals receiving salaries, some of them as high as $10,000 a year, from private sources, who were on the Government pay roll at $1 a year, and many of these individuals were writing essays and other papers and sending them out through the Bureau of Education under the frank of the Government. I am going to show that the very association that is now here with this bill asking for the appropriation of $100,000 have been in times past, and possibly are doing so now, sending out over this country thousands and hundreds of thousands of papers and documents at the expense of the Government in the franked envelopes of the Bureau of Education.

In the list that was furnished us by the Secretary of the Interior of the persons who were employed in the Bureau of Education at Washington and whose salaries were paid in part by organizations other than the Federal Government are the names of H. H. Wheaton, at a salary of $2,500 a year, paid by the Committee for Immigrants in America; F. E. Farrington, who, I understand, has since gone out, and another employed in his stead.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Committee on Appropriations have now under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Dr. Claxton, the chief of the Bureau of Education, has been before us. He said nothing about this matter. Why does he not send down his estimate—and I was talking about this matter yesterday—in the regular manner, so that it may be considered by the committee and discussed? Instead of that, there comes on the floor a separate bill, calling for a separate appropriation, that has never been before the proper committee. We pass on these matters of appropriation. It has never been before us.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator does not expect to have estimates sent to the Appropriations Committee for matter that is not provided for by law, does he? It requires authority to do this work before the appropriation is made. This bill was drawn as an authorization. The Senator from New Hampshire amended it so as to make it an appropriation. It was originally an authorization of this work.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I am a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this bill was ever considered by the full committee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was considered by those who were present.

Mr. KENYON. When was that? I have made it a point to attend the meetings of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was Monday a week ago.

Mr. KENYON. I was unable to be here then.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, continuing what I had to say, we find here the name of F. E. Farrington—who, I believe, has since gone out, and somebody has taken his place—on a salary, paid by this same Committee for Immigrants in America, of $2,400.

T. M. Ave-Lallemant, a French name—is on the same roll, paid by the same concern $1,500 a year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is this?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is the same society under a different name that is now passing the pending bill. It purports to be for the education of illiterate aliens. The bill appeals to the tender side of Members of Congress, and I know it appeals to the generous side of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, because it is to educate the illiterates of the country and to help the soldiers—an afterthought, by the way, which was never in the minds of this distinguished committee at the time the bill was first proposed, in 1915. Help for our soldiers was an afterthought for the purpose of taking advantage of this wave of patriotism and enthusiasm to impose upon the American people an institution that in the last analysis is bound to cost, not $500,000, but $10,000,000 in order to make it a success.

Continuing these names, we find the name of Martha B. Burzuska, at a salary of $1,200 a year, paid by the same association; Paul A. Malone, on a salary of $720, paid by the same institution; Isabel Malone, at a salary of $600 a year, paid by the same institution; all on the pay roll of the Government and getting from the Government only $1 per annum. That association, under another name, is now behind this bill, Mr. President, as its author and backer.

Mr. President, this distinguished body of men and women who are representing this committee for immigrants get into the Bureau of Education, and the Government franks are utilized for sending out whatever literature they prepare. Now, we will read a little bit from the confidential report of the society to its members, taken from the minutes under date of October 11, 1915:

> Executive committee met Monday, October 4. Minutes and short program of work approved. Outlined to Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt plan for dinner conferences to get all leaders in preparedness together to agree upon essentials of a program for all parts of the country. Suggested Americanization dinners in cities to further this purpose.

I merely call attention to the beginning of propaganda for this measure. Here are a lot of distinguished people. I am not criticizing them. They have plenty of money and time and were doubtless impelled by a patriotic spirit to try to do something away back in 1915 for the poor illiterates; but the American soldier was not thought of then. He has crept into it here on this wave of patriotic enthusiasm that is going over the country.

Now note: When these people get on the Government pay roll at $1 per annum they write all kinds of stuff and send it out under frank. Here, for instance, they state:

> Seventy-five thousand posters urging night-school attendance and Americanization distributed over the country; 45,000 of these distributed to schools throughout the country by the Federal Bureau of Education at Washington; 50,000 post offices throughout the country authorized to post them; orders for posters received from 20 industries in different parts of the country, including Chicago stockyards; railroads that have ordered posters include New York, New Haven & Hartford, Chesapeake & Ohio, Philadelphia & Reading, Boston & Maine.

I just give you that item from the confidential report to show that they were sending out these things under the frank of the Bureau of Education. Now, think of four or five men and women on the nominal pay roll of the Government, at salaries varying from $600 to $2,500 a year, doing this immense amount of work! They do not do it. They have offices and suites in New York City where they are doing this very work, and duplicating the work that is being legitimately done under the Government of the United States without any expense whatsoever to the Government; and I am going to show that pretty soon.

But, now, we will see some other of these items that are being franked out. I assume that I am authorized to speak from this record, because it is their confidential record.

Here is a meeting of October 18, 1915:

> The first of a series of Americanization dinners was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor October 15. Twenty-four were present. Commissioner Claxton, of the Federal Bureau of Education; Dr. Finley, of the University of the State of New York; * * * were present.

This record recites also the fact that they were sending out an immense amount of circulars from the Bureau of Education. Let me, just in passing, show you one of the circulars that they were getting out recently, Mr. President. Look at it. It was "Uncle Sam and the laboring man" then. It is "Uncle Sam and the soldier" in the bill that is pending now. This is one of the circulars, gotten out at an immense expense, probably through contributions made by private citizens, but sent out under the franking privilege of the Bureau of Education.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Is this a circular which is sent out by the Rockefeller Institution or some organization separate and apart from the Government?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; there are persons connected with this immigrants' committee who are doing it. It is the same organization that is urging this bill, under a different name. Their agents are employed in the Bureau of Education. These are doing the work; and through their employment by the Government, at $1 a year each, this stuff is enabled to be franked out.

Mr. BORAH. What I want to get at is this: The Senator says this stuff is enabled to be franked out in that way. Is it proper stuff to go out?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is nothing inherently wrong about it, except——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator to tell us what is written at the head of it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. "America first. Learn English." It is in four or five different languages. "Attend night school."

Mr. BORAH. Well, that is good doctrine, no matter who sends it out.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is good doctrine. I said in the outset that it appeals to one because it is for the education of the illiterates; but my contention is that the same work is being done by another bureau of the Government, and done just as effectively, and practically without any expense. It is done by the Department of Labor, as I will show the Senator in a little while, and show what an immense amount of work they are doing. The complaint I have to make of this is that we are transferring our educational system to an independent bureau or body.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I understand precisely the position of the Senator; but I take it from what he has said that the material they are sending out is not improper material.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no; I do not claim that. What I am claiming is that they are coming here for a little appropriation that will not pay the expenses for five months of an efficient body; that their purpose is to come a year from now and possibly ask for $10,000,000, and all to duplicate work that is already being performed. The Senator from Georgia says, "Oh, no." I am going to read from a statement that was published, dated at Atlantic City in February.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FALL. I understand the Senator's point is that he is going to show that the Department of Labor is doing this same work, and doing it at little cost, and that he objects to the Bureau of Education doing this work, although it may do it at little cost, because some of the expenses are paid by individuals or by an independent association. What I want to ask the Senator is this: Why the objection to the Bureau of Education or the Commissioner of Education and his office receiving assistance from the outside when the Department of Labor avails itself constantly of civilian assistance from the outside in the performance of the very duties to which he is referring now? What is the difference? Why is the Department of Labor any more patriotic or sincere or honest than the Bureau of Education?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not claim that it is any more honest; but I do claim, and very strenuously, that it is a duplication of the work that is being done, and has been done efficiently, and is being done without much expense. If the Senator will just wait a little, I will show him how the bill proposes to duplicate work that is already being efficiently done.

Mr. FALL. I am perfectly willing to be shown; and if the Senator can show me that it is more proper, I am perfectly willing to vote for this bill with an amendment placing it under the Department of Labor rather than the Bureau of Education.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit one interruption?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator has referred to duplication. I want to call his attention to an instance of duplication which almost puts Mr. Hoover into the shade; and anyone who can overshadow that gentleman certainly is worthy of serious consideration.

Among the activities mentioned in the report which I hold in my hand are the following:

I. Food the deciding factor; plan of the United States Food Administration.
II. Food-conservation measures.
III, IV. Wheat conservation.
V. Conservation of meat.
VI. Sugar and fats.
VII, VIII. Preserving food in the home.
IX. Fundamentals of an adequate diet.
X. General.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is from the report of the Bureau of Education?

Mr. PENROSE. This is an enumeration of some of their special activities of a highly beneficial character.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no doubt about that. Now, let me call attention to this circular. The precepts in the circular are all right. There is no question about that. It says:

Learn English. Attend night school. It means a better opportunity and a better home in America. It means a better job. It means a better chance for your children. It means a better America. Ask the nearest public school about classes. If there is none in your town write to the National Americanization Committee or to the United States Bureau of Education—

Linking the two together again. Now, those are not all of their activities, Mr. President, and I will say very frankly that if this were the only body doing this work I would vote very cheerfully to make an appropriation, but not on a false-pretense proposition that $50,000 or $100,000 would do any good. I would insist that we give them $10,000,000 or more, in order to carry out the education that is sought to be accomplished by this bill. This is simply an opening wedge for a larger appropriation next year. I venture to make this prophecy and prediction now, and I want Senators to bear it in mind: If this bill goes through, next year this association will come back here with the establishment of a bureau larger than any that this Government has ever had, invading the precincts of the States, the municipalities, and every other department of the Government, supplementing an educational system which the State has always maintained jealously in times past.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator makes his predictions as to what will take place next year. Have we not rules to control that matter if it comes up next year?

I, for one, have studied this bill with a good deal of care. I have seen nothing in all of my investigations that leads me to believe that there was any such purpose as the Senator suggests, and I do not believe there is. I think the Senator is without any substantial proof. He may predict, as anyone has a right to do, as to what may happen.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator knows by his experience in the Senate that, whenever you establish a bureau, nothing short of dynamite will get it out.

Mr. PAGE. But you are establishing no bureau here.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, the Senator may think he is not. I insist that we are—that we are laying the foundations for an immense one.

Mr. PAGE. We may be laying foundations, but there is nothing in the bill that shows that and nothing that has come before our committee shows it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the reason why I say, with all deference to the Senator, that it is not honest on the face of it. I do not mean to impute dishonesty to the Senator from Vermont or to the distinguished Senator from Georgia, who has the bill in charge; but the men behind it have purposely withheld from the Senators their future purpose, and I am going to show what they intend to do by their own words.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the Senator will; but I also hope the Senator will debate this bill upon its merits, and not upon the assumption that there is a future purpose to defraud, for I do not believe there is. My opinion may be against his opinion, but I wish he would show us some facts that tend to convince us that there is something wrong.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am going to try to show them.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the Senator aware that a bill is now pending in the Senate for the creation of a department of education, with a Cabinet officer at the head of it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, Mr. President; I am.

Now, here are some of the activities of this Americanization Society that fathers this bill, and these are from their own reports:

The educational extension work being outlined by the National Americanization Committee includes the following:
1. Civic lessons for pay envelopes or to be printed on the back of time cards, etc.
2. Posters to stimulate attendance at school and increase interest in naturalization.
3. Syllabus for night-school work.
4. Civic lessons to be inserted in foreign-language newspapers.
5. Guide to citizenship
6. Training course for colleges.

Mind you, this institution that has for its purpose only the education of aliens and illiterates—the Senator from Pennsylvania very properly struck out the words "meager education"—a part of its propaganda is a training course for colleges—

7. In preparation; no copies yet available.
Training teachers for immigrant education.
(a) Program for teachers' institutes.

Mind you, getting right down into the States, doing the work the States are doing and have been doing from time immemorial.

(b) Courses for normal colleges.

Getting still further into State business—

(c) Suggestions for teachers.

Can anybody tell me why the rights of the States should be invaded by this body?

Mr. President, in January, 1917, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration, it was sought to curb the activities of private persons and corporations in governmental affairs by an amendment as follows:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations made for the Bureau of Education, whether for salaries or expenses or any other purpose connected therewith, shall be used in connection with any money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly, or contributed or tendered by any corporation or any individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies; nor shall the Bureau of Education receive any moneys for salaries or any other purpose for the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly, or contributed or tendered by any corporation or individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies, except by act of Congress authorizing the same. Any person violating any or either of the terms of this proviso shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not less than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, as the court may determine.

The purpose of that amendment was to limit and restrict the activities of the foreign bodies that were injecting themselves into the bureaus of the Government. That amendment was substantially agreed to, but in conference it was so emasculated as to render it almost harmless.

Let me show you what these people did when that amendment was first proposed in the Senate. It was read into the RECORD on the 26th of January, 1917, and immediately the Americanization committee got busy. They commenced to bombard their supporters in the field with the following telegram:

United States Senate yesterday passed amendment to general appropriation bill which will eliminate Education Bureau's Americanization activities by abolishing collaborators by making no appropriation to carry on this work now financed by outside organizations. Wire Senators SMOOT, BRYAN, and OVERMAN, of conference committee, that if amendment is retained the pending Pomerene-Parker bill, appropriating $50,000 for immigrant-education work, should be made part of general appropriation bill, otherwise bureau's whole America first and immigrant-education work will be lost. Hearing Tuesday, so get industrial leaders and philanthropic organizations to wire. Rush SMOOT and your own Senator and Representative.

(Signed) NATIONAL AMERICANIZATION COMMITTEE.

The efforts of the National Americanization Committee having failed of fruition at that time, they have continued and are still active as shown by the following telegram which has been received by me and other Senators within the past few days:

Secretary Lane has announced broad Americanization plan. Council of National Defense has approved Bureau of Education's program for same. Does Calder bill, S. 2854, now Unanimous Consent Calendar, mix plans and duplicate work contemplated and rightfully in Bureau of Education plan if passed?

(Signed) W. C. SMITH,
Chairman Legislative Committee of National Committee of One Hundred, America First.

I do not know what purpose this telegram has in it, but it seems to be an attack upon the Bureau of Naturalization and the intention to amend the naturalization laws as contemplated by this bill, S. 2854.

There are other activities of this legislative committee in which they have gratuitously undertaken to assault one of the established activities of the Government which is being carried on in full conformity with the law and in a most admirable way. I do not care to dignify this assault by referring at the present time any more directly to it. I can only say that the writer of the telegram who signs himself as "Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the National Committee of 100," is undoubtedly speaking with authority. Commissioner Claxton organized the Committee of One Hundred doubtless at the instance of these private sources or organizations for whom the bureau seems to be working and in whose interests he seems to be serving the Government. When he organized them and outlined their plan, the committee, his creature, is undoubtedly carrying out the instructions of their director.

They were not only active then but they are active now, and I have understood that this same association has been instrumental in getting some of the authorities of the Government to invite the governors of several States here in conference to-day to undertake to get them behind this bill. I understand so; I do not know anything about it. I simply understand that they have been invited here, possibly by the Secretary of the Interior, and the purpose of the visit is to get their support of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will yield——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I understand the position of these men, it is to get behind the work in their own States with their State agencies that this bill will seek to encourage and direct, and I think it is a splendid measure.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But, Mr. President, the Naturalization Bureau, under the Department of Labor, is already an established agency engaged in this work now. And this bureau is working in cooperation with the States. Then, too, the States are operating alone and in their own way with regard to illiteracy.

Take the State of Kentucky, Mr. President. I am sorry the Senators from that State are not here, but I understand that the State of Kentucky has gone to work and has organized to put illiteracy out of commission by 1920, and that the people of that Commonwealth are making splendid progress. What can the Government of the United States do with its $50,000 or with $100,000 to assist the work in all the States?

Mr. President, this bill is simply an entering wedge to get very much larger appropriations in the very near future.

I received the telegram last quoted a few days ago and I assume every Senator here received one like it. I replied to it as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 2, 1918.

W. C. SMITH,
Chairman, Legislative Committee of National Committee of One Hundred, America First, New York City.

Answering your night letter of March 29. Bill mentioned is necessary for carrying on of authorized work of Bureau of Naturalization, and does not interfere with any other Government agency.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN.

Of course not; the Calder bill is a sane and sensible measure and simply supplements the work of the Bureau of Naturalization.

Mr. President, Mr. Claxton, you will find, has extended his activities into this realm as he has extended them into almost every realm, interfering with State policies and State politics, so far as education is concerned. You will find him present at all the meetings of the Americanization Association giving his advice. He is not so active in giving his advice to the established authority in the Department of Labor, which I am going to address myself to in a few minutes to show that it is doing most effective and efficient work without interfering with any of the State authorities or any municipality. That would not extend the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Education, and that is what he wants.

Note, Mr. President, an extract from the minutes of the session of the national publicity campaign for Americanization called by Hon. P. P. Claxton, Commissioner of Education, at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, July 4, 1916:

Commissioner Claxton outlined the plan and facilities of the Bureau of Education for assisting in this publicity campaign to get behind the bill.

A little later on the minutes recite:

Superintendent Cody, seconded by Superintendent Garber, moved that the Division of Immigrant Education of the Bureau of Education act as secretary of the committee until the committee can select its own secretary.

Then here is the legislative proposition; here is a prediction for this bill:

Upon a motion of Superintendent Cody and seconded by Superintendent Garber, Mr. W. C. Smith—

That is the same Smith whose telegram I read a while ago—

of Troy, was appointed chairman of a committee, with power to select other members, whose duty it should be to prepare a bill to be introduced in Congress carrying an appropriation for the work of the Division of Immigrant Education.

There you have it. They prepared the bill under consideration, and they caused it to be introduced. They camouflaged or sought to camouflage the American people by putting a mere pittance in it, expecting to come back and ask for a larger sum later, in order to establish an immense institution or bureau.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] wanted to know if we had any evidence of what these people were doing or that they were going to attempt any such thing as I suggested in the way of larger appropriations. Let us see. On the 27th day of February they had a meeting at Atlantic City, and here is the report of that meeting:

Educators want $10,000,000 to push Americanization—

There you have it—

Common language in industry a vital need and Federal aid is wanted. Would save many lives.
Great educational convention a clearing house for superintendents.
Class system criticized.
Western man warns against kaiserization of education. Keep children at school.

There was a voice crying in the wilderness. Here is an undertaking not only to kaiserize the public-school system of America but to take it out of the hands of the States and centralize it in the power and in the hands of Mr. Claxton.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me read this into the RECORD. I have only read the headlines. Here is the substance of it:

ATLANTIC CITY, February 27.

Federal aid in the Americanization of aliens, and particularly of those from enemy countries, will come as one of the fruits of the greatest educational conventions America has known. Founded upon facts revealed this afternoon in a conference on legislation—and Americanization in the Breakers Hotel, a bill will be introduced in Congress within a few days appropriating $10,000,000 for Federal aid to Americanization work in the various States under the same provisions as those set forth in the Smith-Hughes Act for the furtherance of vocational education.

Legislation again—

There you have it. Now, the small appropriation carried by the pending bill does not amount to anything. It would not get them anywhere. It would not pay the salaries of the people who are now issuing the few hundred thousand posters they are getting out every year.

I am going to ask to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, for I do not want to take up any more time than is necessary, the recent activities of the Division of Immigrant Education. This comes out of the Bureau of Education. It is not mine at all. It shows their activities and shows that the amount appropriated in this bill would not get anywhere toward doing the work. I ask that it may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
WASHINGTON.

RECENT ACTIVITIES OF THE DIVISION OF IMMIGRANT EDUCATION.

The Division of Immigrant Education pursues activities which may be classified as follows:

"Surveys, field investigations, and research to ascertain conditions, facilities, and needs in order to establish the basis for constructive National, State, and local work.

"Publicity through news letters, circular letters, bulletins, articles in the daily and periodical press, exhibits, special reports, and by lectures and addresses

"Organization of cooperation among public and private agencies by serving as a clearing house, by projecting plans of work, and by developing organized facilities upon request.

"Counsel, given through conferences, committee meetings, personal interviews, and correspondence."

SURVEYS AND FIELD INVESTIGATIONS.

At the request of the Wilmington (Del.) Committee on Americanization, a survey of Wilmington was made to assist in the establishment of night schools for immigrants. Such schools were subsequently established. During the month of August the assistant specialist made a survey of the immigrant sections and of the evening-school facilities for immigrants in San Francisco. An official of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry also surveyed several communities in Pennsylvania in cooperation with the division.

A questionnaire was sent to industrial establishments asking for a statement of educational work, "safety-first" training, and other welfare activities for the benefit of non-English-speaking employees. Studies of the educational methods employed were made in many plants. From the returns a report was prepared setting forth the work of many plants.

RESEARCH.

The division prepared and published a "List of Cities of 5,000 Population and Over, Having a Foreign-born White Population of 1,000 or More and no Evening Schools," "Citizenship of Foreign-born White Males of Voting Age in Each County of Pennsylvania With More Than 10 per cent of the Population Foreign Born," "Immigration to the United States from 1820 to 1915" (a chart), "State Constitutional Provisions Affecting Legislative Responsibility for Establishment of Evening Schools and Ages of Pupils Concerned" (a digest), "Educational Rank of Connecticut, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island" (adapted pamphlet issued by the Russell Sage Foundation). The division prepared a list of "Textbooks for Foreigners Learning English."

To present the problem of Americanization the division prepared standard exhibit charts, diagrams, slides, and photographs, showing for the United States as a whole and for selected States: Inability to Speak English, Illiteracy, School Attendance, and Factory Classes. A questionnaire on immigration education was sent out to superintendents of schools and the information gathered from the replies presented in the first bulletin issued by the division under the title "Public Facilities for Educating the Alien." Previous to this survey the specialist in immigrant education had prepared an elaborate article entitled "Survey of Adult Immigrant Education" for the Immigrants in America Review. He also contributed a chapter on "Recent Progress in the Education of Immigrants" to the Report of the United States Commissioner of Education, 1914, and a chapter on "Education of the Immigrant" to the report for 1916. To the first Annual Report of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry the specialist contributed a chapter of 64 pages (Ch. II) on "Immigration and Unemployment."

FORMULATION OF PLANS AND PROGRAMS.

Many new and constructive ideas developed by the staff of the division were formulated and published in circular letters bearing the following titles: No. 3, "Suggestions to Principals and Teachers"; No. 5, "Training for Americanization Service"; No. 7, America First Campaign, "How to Advertise Night Schools"; No. 8, ditto, "How State Departments of Education Can Help"; No. 9, ditto, "How Chambers of Commerce Can Cooperate"; No. 10, ditto, "What Women's Organizations Can Do"; No. 11, ditto, "How to Organize an Evening School for Immigrants"; No. 12, ditto, "How Industries can Cooperate"; No 13, ditto, "How Libraries Can Help"; No. 14, ditto, "How Foreign-language Newspapers Can Cooperate"; No. 15, ditto, "What Some Members of the Committee of One Hundred Have Done"; No. 16, ditto, "How Labor Unions Can Cooperate"; No. 17, ditto, "How Sectarian Organizations Can Cooperate"; No. 18, ditto, "How Patriotic Societies Can Cooperate"; No. 19, ditto, "How Religious Organizations for Women Can Cooperate"; and No. 20, ditto, "A Call to National Service."

The specialist in charge of this division has prepared a schedule of "Standards and methods in the education of immigrants," which will in the future, as further elaborated, form the basis for the program of work of this division. One part of this has so far been made available for distribution.

PUBLICITY.

Over 250,000 circulars, news letters, news releases, and publications have been sent during the year to school superintendents, principals, and teachers; to college and university presidents; to women's clubs and women's organizations and agencies; to patriotic organizations; to organizations of foreign-born men and women; to educational associations; to postmasters; and to English and foreign-language newspapers. Fifteen articles and papers were prepared by the specialist and the members of his staff and published in such publications as the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the American Leader (organ of the American Association of Foreign-Language Newspapers), the Bulletin of the National Association of Patriotic Instructors, Immigrants in America Review, the Immigration Journal, the Journals of the State Teachers' Federation of Kansas and New York, the Baltimore Labor Leader, and the Bulletin of the New Jersey State Department of Education.

To stimulate the school attendance of adult immigrants over 100,000 "America First" posters, printed in English and seven prevalent foreign languages, were distributed in large numbers to superintendents of schools, industries, postmasters, miscellaneous organizations, and individuals.

The exhibit charts and publications of the division were shown in the following places: The National Conference on Immigration and Americanization at Philadelphia in January, 1916; the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at Washington in February, 1916; the Life Conservation Exhibit of the United States Government at the National Museum, Washington, in February, 1916; the National Conference of Catholic Charities at the National Catholic University of America, Washington, in September, 1916; the conference of the Illinois Valley Teachers' Association at Moline and also at La Salle, Ill., in October, 1916; the annual meeting of the National Education Association at New York City in July, 1916.

ORGANIZATION AND COOPERATION.

The division has cooperated with many private organizations by formulating programs of work and by making suggestions. Special assistance was rendered to over 25 chambers of commerce, over 200 industrial establishments, over 20 educational associations, over 50 religious and philanthropic associations, and to a large number of miscellaneous societies.

The division is now conducting a nation-wide "America first" campaign in cooperation with the Committee of One Hundred appointed by the United States Commissioner of Education. The specialist in charge of the division is the chairman of the executive committee and in charge of the publicity campaign. The object of the campaign is to aid schools, at their request, in reaching the 3,000,000 non-English-speaking immigrants.

COUNSEL UPON PRACTICAL METHODS.

This division has given and received counsel by participation in conferences, committee meetings, personal interviews, and correspondence with officers and representatives of teachers' associations, business women's associations, State departments of education, associations of commerce, social workers, women's clubs, college and university presidents and faculties, and numerous individuals. Members of the staff have addressed over 75 meetings during the past year. While engaged in giving information, they are also seeking light upon every phase of Americanization. It is a fundamental aim of the division to be of national service in dealing with the complex problem of immigration and to cooperate with every possible agency in effecting its solution. (Division of Immigrant Education Circular No. 21, Jan. 17, 1917.)

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Note the headlines, I beg the Senators, which I repeat in order to show the impossibility of doing any of the work proposed with so small an appropriation.

The Division of Immigrant Education pursues activities which may be classified as follows:

Surveys, field investigations, and research to ascertain conditions, facilities, and needs, in order to establish the basis for constructive National, State, and local work.

Again:

Publicity through news letters, circular letters, bulletins, articles in the daily and periodical press, exhibits, special reports, and by lectures and addresses.

Again:

Organization of cooperation among public and private agencies, by serving as a clearing house, by projecting plans of work, and by developing organized facilities upon request.

Again:

Counsel given through conferences, committee meetings, personal interviews, and correspondence.

Those are the headlines of the activities of this body under the Bureau of Education, and when you come to a detailed statement of each of these headings there is not any organization in the United States that is big enough to handle it.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator whether he is through enumerating the activities of the bureau?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. All I care to enumerate, but if the Senator has something in that line——

Mr. PENROSE. I know the Senator will be very much interested in knowing that after teaching agriculture and food conservation and social hygiene and a vast multitude of other matters, the bureau in its report for 1917 requests authorization to have control of 4,000 reindeer in Alaska, so that they may look to their better distribution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think, if the Senator really wants the activities of the Bureau of Education he could not get it in as small a space as he has there. I will say to the Senator that their activities extend over every field of American life.

Mr. PENROSE. I can picture the pedagogue in the frozen fields of Alaska herding reindeer.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not going into that further, but I am going just as deeply as I can to show that there is not any necessity for this bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. While the Senator is beginning that subject, I should like to call his attention to a statement made upon the floor this morning by the Senator in charge of the bill, which, if I understood him correctly, was that there are 700,000 drafted men of the United States who are illiterates. I should like to ask the Senator how many men have been drawn under the selective draft, as he is the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. How many altogether?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Altogether.

Mr. THOMAS. There are 700,000 subject to the draft.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Within the draft age.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Seven hundred thousand in the United States of the draft age, you say?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Who are illiterate?

Mr. THOMAS. Who can not speak or read the English language.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Who can not read or write.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course a greater number than that were actually drafted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have here the report of the Secretary of the Interior upon which the statement was based. He says that there are now nearly 700,000 men of draft age in the United States who are illiterate and who can not read or write in English or any other language.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Of the draft age?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of the draft age.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What is the number in the United States of the draft age?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. About ten million.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. About ten million.

Mr. PENROSE. I assume that these illiterates are largely foreigners.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Nearly altogether so.

Mr. PENROSE. Practically altogether so. There is nothing extraordinary in the fact that there are 700,000 illiterates of foreign birth.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I was surprised at the statement of fact; but taking the statistics of the last census I find that of the males of voting age there were only 8.4 per cent illiterate. Of course, they must be 21 years of age, and this classification includes all above that age. Of the negro race there were only 30.4 per cent; of those of foreign birth, only 12.7 per cent; and of the children of foreign and mixed marriages, only 1.10 per cent who are illiterate. It seems to me there must be some grave error in the statement which was made here regarding the proportion of the men of the draft age in the United States who are illiterate, and it seems to me a very unfortunate thing that any false impression should go out to the country regarding the character of the men who constitute our Army.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to read a little further from the statement of Secretary Lane. He says:

> There are 700,000 men who can not read or write who may be drafted within our Army within the next year or two.

Then I will read the balance of the figures which are given upon this subject by the Secretary:

> There are in the United States (or were when the census was taken in 1910) 5,516,163 persons over 10 years of age who were unable to read or write in any language. There are now nearly 700,000 men of draft age in the United States who are, I presume, registered, who can not read or write in English or in any other language. Over 4,600,000 of the illiterates in this country were 20 years of age or more.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. May I be allowed to attract the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and also of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]? I am satisfied that there has been a great error which has crept into the assertion of the Secretary of the Interior, the consequence of which he would not wish to be responsible for. It is equivalent to an allegation that we are about to put into our Army a vast number of men—the Senator from Georgia says 700,000?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Seven hundred thousand.

Mr. LEWIS. Seven hundred thousand human beings who have not enough intelligence to know what they are doing, why they are summoned, or for what they are fighting.

It also intimates that our country's system of education in our different States must have been so deficient as to have left us this relic of such a vast sum of human beings who are alleged to be illiterate. May I assume that there has been misapprehension; that the word "illiterate" in that sense was meant merely to convey that in the English language they were not learned? May I assume that the foreigners to whom the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has made allusion, may still be people of information upon general subjects, but happen not to have had an English learning, and are illiterate only in the sense that they are not scholars in the English language?

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Illinois permit a suggestion?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Perhaps many of these men suffer from what has been called a "meager education," but the figures undoubtedly have been grossly exaggerated to bolster up this fraudulent bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, of course I can not enter——

Mr. PENROSE. I do not mean to make any reflection upon the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I am a member—although I did not attend the meeting of the committee that reported this bill—or upon the Senator having the bill in charge, but I am convinced that the Superintendent of Education needs careful watching.

Mr. LEWIS. I have only to conclude with this statement: I do not know whence these figures came; of course, I could not know what the inference, but I must, from my general knowledge of my country, from the appreciation we all have of our institutions, deny that there can exist in the United States of America to-day, under our system, 700,000 men capable of bearing arms for the country who are illiterate and ignorant.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is entirely right. They are not there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have asked the Provost Marshal General and the Commissioner of Education regarding the matter, and I am trying to find out if either can give the information that is asked for, which I will insert in my remarks. Let me say this for the foreign-born illiterates who are in the United States Army: I was talking to a young colonel in the Army some months ago, who was being sent out to Chicago to train a regiment of foreigners. He told me that it almost broke his heart when he was instructed to go there and train those foreigners, because it had been his hope that he would have a distinctively American force in his command; but I saw him some time afterwards, when he told me he was perfectly charmed with the result of his effort to train those men. He said there were hardly any of them who could speak English when he assumed command, but that they immediately organized night schools in the cantonment, and the men promptly learned enough of the English language to obey every command of every officer who spoke English.

Not only that, but they showed their patriotic spirit when an announcement was read out at the head of the column to these young men—foreigners all them, Czechs, Poles, and men of every neutral nation represented around Chicago, where they came from—when this announcement was read out to them about the sale of liberty bonds they raised $80,000 in subscriptions to those bonds. So the taking in of these illiterates among our American troops is not a disadvantage to them, even in cases where they can not read or write. It will teach them to read and write. The fact that a man can not write does not in the least make him a poor soldier, for such a man is frequently the most gallant soldier in the world. He is not afraid to die for his country. Illustrations innumerable might be cited from the pages of history to sustain these propositions.

But now, Mr. President, getting down to the statement that this is simply a duplication of work, transferring it to a body that can not do it as well as it is now being done, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the public schools of the United States, in conjunction with the Bureau of Naturalization of the Department of Labor, have this work in hand. In April, 1914, after years of contact with the public schools, this bureau undertook to cooperate with them as to the education of illiterates.

A plan was proposed by the Bureau of Naturalization for linking together the public schools throughout the United States with the Federal Government.

I have found, Mr. President, in studying the work of this bureau that, without any additional appropriations from Congress, while carrying on its regular work the Bureau of Naturalization has been working in direct cooperation with the public schools during the last four years. At the present time in 1,797 cities, towns, and small communities, extending clear into the mining camps, the public schools of the United States have organized with the Bureau of Naturalization in teaching the candidate for citizenship the things he should know as an American citizen.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely want to suggest to the Senator, in connection with this subject, that the Bureau of Naturalization and also one of the intelligence bureaus of the War Department are trying to do this identical work for the foreign-born soldiers to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. And their representatives were in to see me this morning, as chairman of the Immigration Committee, insisting that certain additional facilities be afforded to do the work.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so. That is what I am calling attention to. There is a sleeper in the bill that is now before the Senate which provides that, before the Bureau of Education touches the patriotic side of this question—the illiterate soldiers and sailors—it must have the consent of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. That is a little more camouflage. The bill was not intended for the soldiers of the Republic who are illiterate. Behind it is an alleged benevolent organization that intends only to supplant existing systems of schools and to coordinate industrial life with the system it has in view. Let our public schools do the work that the framers of our State governments intended they should do and that has been recognized from the earliest days of the Republic that they should do. Any attempts to interfere with them, whether made by Mr. Claxton or any other body of men outside of the jurisdiction of the several States, will result in dislocating the public-school system of the country.

Now, to show you what the Bureau of Naturalization has been trying to do, I will state that in July, 1916, they held a convention here in the city which was attended by educators from all over the country. Superintendents of public schools of all the States were here. I remember very distinctly meeting Superintendent Alderman, a very distinguished educator of my State. There were men here from New England, from the border States, from the whole country clear down to Mexico. At this convention the work of the public schools, in cooperation with the Bureau of Naturalization, was fully discussed. The public schools had furnished the Bureau of Naturalization with the material for the preparation of a textbook for the purpose of developing a standard course in citizenship instruction.

The Commissioner of Education and the members of his bureau attended that convention. Why did he not cooperate with the system that was then in vogue and is now in vogue instead of trying to sidetrack it and go to another proposition and confuse the existing system? They fully discussed with the public-school officials and officials of the Bureau of Naturalization the textbook matter submitted by the public schools to the Bureau of Naturalization. This textbook, therefore, has been completed and is awaiting its publication to be distributed to the candidates for citizenship.

Mr. President, 438,000 foreigners applied for first citizenship papers last year. The Bureau of Naturalization has worked out a system, based upon the law, which gives it charge of all matters relating to the naturalization of aliens. Under this authority it has united the courts and the public schools with the bureau for the purpose of making it possible for candidates for naturalization to prepare themselves for the responsibilities of American citizenship. The Bureau of Naturalization received the names last year of approximately a million and a quarter foreigners. It has endeavored to induce these foreigners to attend the citizenship classes which the bureau has prevailed upon the public schools in nearly 1,800 cities and small communities to provide for them. All of this work has been carried on for four years without any additional appropriation for that purpose; yet, Mr. President, we are met here with a proposition for an appropriation of $100,000, and we will be met by appeals to Congress hereafter for millions of dollars to do the work which is being done now by appropriations which are made simply for the carrying on of the ordinary business of the Department of Labor.

It seems to me that the experience which has been gained by this branch of the Government should not be overlooked in considering a measure of this kind. It has in four years attained practical results which can later be made the foundation for any further and wider scope of effort in cooperation with the public schools of the United States.

I desire to submit here the names of the cities and towns by States, together with their population in 1910, as well as their foreign population and the number of foreigners in those places who declared their intention to become citizens from July 1, 1910, to July 30, 1917, showing that this work is not local but is general; it covers the whole United States. A system has been worked out which has not only proven advantageous in the last five or six years but will prove more so, provided we do not dynamite it with a bill that destroys the work which the Bureau of Naturalization has undertaken in cooperation with the courts and the public-school systems of the country.

Mr. President, I will explain to the Senate what is meant by cooperation with the courts. The court holds the application for citizenship up until the alien goes to a school—some night school, perhaps, connected with the public schools—and tries to qualify himself for the duties of citizenship, with the result that these men are absolutely prepared for citizenship before their final papers are issued.

Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, without reading, the data or statistics to which I called attention a few moments ago, so that the Senate may see at a glance to-morrow morning just what the States are doing and what cities and towns all over the United States are participating in this work in conjunction with the common-school systems and in conjunction with the courts for the purpose of teaching these people the duties of citizenship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns.

[Figures not available where blanks occur.]

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Alabama:
Birmingham (includes activities at East Lake, Ensley, Fairfield, Gate City, Pratt City, and Warrior)	132,685	5,700	2,944	1,179	523	125	60	13	4
Bessemer	10,864	341	196	94
Arizona:
Bisbee	9,019	3,474	2,023	558	145	130	42	50	33
Blue Bell Mine					70	36
Douglas (includes activities at Pirtleville)	6,437	2,250	919	186			13	23	17
Morenci					35	19		6	4
California:
Alameda	23,383	5,555	2,842	1,720			23	38	38
Berkeley (includes activities at Albany)	40,434	7,653	3,627	2,096			67	43	51
Emeryville	2,613	636	374	224
Colma							16		8
Corona	3,549	604	348	79	39	25
Eureka (includes activities at Elk River, Fairhaven, Freshwater, Ryans Slough, and Samoa)	11,845	3,600	2,228	1,076	161	49	8	9	8
Fresno	24,892	5,445	2,487	1,006	351	133	22	36	34

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
California—Continued.
Gilroy	2,437
Hollister	2,308				25	9	2	2	1
Long Beach (includes activities at Alimitos Bay, Seal Beach, and Wilmington)	17,809	1,942	901	470			9	2	7
Los Angeles (includes activities at Hollywood and Huntington Park)	319,198	60,584	29,576	14,097	2,814	1,163	383	343	324
Alhambra	5,021	983	585	174
Manhattan
Mountain View	1,161
Oakland	150,174	38,822	19,334	10,237	1,124	130	241	243	259
San Leandro	3,471	1,108	559	279
Ontario (includes activities at Alta Loma, Chino, Cucamonga, Etiwanda, Guasti, and Upland)	4,274	581	283	155	94	58	6	1	1
Oxnard	2,555	618	334	108	38	15		1
Pasadena (includes activities at La Manda)	30,291	4,297	1,772	1,101			23	17	15
Playa del Rey							1		1
Pomona (includes activities at Claremont, Lordsburg, San Dimas, and Walnut)	10,207	883	438	219			2
Redlands	10,449	1,343	649	372				2	2
Redondo Beach (includes activities at Hermosa Beach, Manhattan Beach, and Perry)	2,935	433	282	116
Redwood City	2,442						2	3	1
Riverside	15,212	2,168	1,035	454			3	5	4
Sacramento	44,696	8,885	5,331	2,424	416	178	53	84	49
San Diego (includes activities at Chula Vista, Coronado, East San Diego, and National City)	39,578	7,366	3,845	2,057	316	164	20	206	106
San Francisco (includes activities at Daly City)	416,912	130,874	75,768	39,375	5,280	2,383	1,942	1,104	894
San Jose (includes activities at Berryessa, Edenvale, Hester, Milpitas, and Sunol)	28,946	5,817	2,983	1,637	337	126	22	25	16
Santa Clara	4,348	1,135	597	287
San Mateo	4,384	1,031	538	333	238	103	7	15	10
San Pedro
San Rafael	5,934	1,747	932	466	95	39	1	9	4
Santa Ana	8,429	884	408	246	53	41	1	2	1
Santa Barbara	11,659	1,793	877	417	157	57	20	12	19
Santa Monica (includes activities at Sawtelle, The Palms, and Soldiers Home)	7,847	1,248	576	283			4		3
Santa Rosa	7,817	1,318	667	376	198	89	14	6	7
South Pasadena	4,649	558	254	149
South San Francisco	1,989
Stockton	23,253	4,478	2,679	1,074	244	79	36	25	23
Venice							4	7	8
Westwood					28	12		1	1
Wiseburn
Colorado:
Bowie
Broomfield	142
Central City (includes activities at Black Hawk, Nevada, Russell Gulch, and Tolland)	1,782				6	11
Colorado Springs	29,078	2,981	1,434	748	81	37
Cripple Creek	6,206	849	473	367	27	24
Delta	2,388				10	9
Denver	213,381	38,941	19,204	10,959	841	353	65	122	121
Fort Collins	8,210	893	373	156	40	35	108	7	4
Frederick	266
Gorham (includes activities at Marshall and Monarch)							23	1	1
Grand Junction	7,754	724	405	196	33	10	1
Greeley (includes activities at Evans, Kersey, La Salle, and Lucerne)	8,179	691	357	172	124	68	9	5	6
Hastings	693
Leadville	7,508	2,232	1,253	880	105	46	12	24	13
Louisville (includes activities at Monarch No. 2 and Sunnyside Mine)	1,706				35	20
Oak Creek	222
Pueblo	41,395	8,331	4,777	1,773	224	90	34	25	31
Rocky Ford	3,230	145	68	44	16	23
Salida	4,425	499	256	159	45	11
Somerset	527				11	11
Sterling (includes activities at Atwood, Crook, Graylin, Ileff, Merino, Padroni, and Willard)	3,044	418	185	45	33	26	1	3	2
Superior	349						25
Telluride (includes activities at Liberty Bell, Mine Smuggler, Smuggler Mill, Smuggler Mine, and Tomboy Mine)	1,756				42	16	4	1	1
Trinidad	10,204	1,203	654	368	149	39
Connecticut:
Ansonia	15,152	5,711	2,926	1,131			23	14	12
Avon	1,337						1		1
Bridgeport (includes activities at Long Hill, Nichols, Strentsfield, and Trumbull)	102,054	36,180	17,114	6,563	2,456	602	212	137	177
Fairfield	6,134	1,653	768	261
Stratford	5,712	1,199	545	287
Bristol (includes activities at East Bristol, Forestville, and Terryville)	13,502	3,982	1,985	695			15	9	16
Chester	1,419						5	4	2
Danbury	23,502	5,526	2,687	1,243			21	9	15
Bethel	3,792	502	248	161
Elmwood							2		2
West Hartford	4,808	1,319	560	254
Enfield	9,719	3,787	1,609	479
Greenwich	16,463	5,080	2,301	784			15	16	16
Hartford	98,915	31,243	13,975	6,294	3,134	682	212	115	157
East Hartford	8,138	1,487	686	348
Wethersfield	3,148	655	431	145
Huntington	6,545	1,758	788	340
Manchester	13,641	5,006	2,126	1,073			1	22	19
Meriden	32,066	9,390	4,346	2,308			18	12	13
Middletown (includes activities at South Farms)	20,749	6,398	2,804	1,025	228	58	9	11	5
Naugatuck (includes activities at Beacon Falls)	12,722	4,283	2,075	889			4	3	3
New Britain (includes activities at Newington)	43,916	18,015	8,843	3,054			114	42	56
Berlin	3,728	1,166	676	187
Plainville	2,882	528	264	119

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Connecticut—Continued.
New Haven	133,605	42,784	19,194	8,628	4,808	829	192	94	116
New London (includes activities at Mystic)	19,659	4,561	1,993	701			23	18	23
Groton	6,495	908	416	151
Montville	2,804	731	306	94
Waterford	3,097	571	390	88
Norwalk	24,211	5,686	2,473	978			15	7	17
Norwich (includes activities at Norwichtown, Taftville, and Yantic)	28,219	8,405	3,558	1,456	605	154	13	11	16
Poquonock
Rainbow
Putnam	7,280	1,780	801	284	305	85	20	6	20
Rockville (includes activities at Tolland)	7,977	2,764	1,238	686	248	42	2	5	2
Southington (includes activities at Cheshire)	6,516	1,724	855	239			1	1
Plainville	2,882	528	264	119
South Manchester							23	2	12
South Norwalk (includes activities at East Norwalk and Rowayton)	8,968						15	11	16
Westport	4,259	1,057	482	180
Wilton	1,706
Stamford	28,836	8,872	3,976	1,486			35	19	28
Darien	3,946	947	506	213
Suffield	3,841	874	467	107			2	3	3
Thompson	4,804	1,871	789	140				5	4
Thompsonville							21	23	25
Torrington (includes activities at Burrville, Torringford, and West Torrington)	16,840	6,064	3,003	1,198	439	74	9	9	4
Vernon (includes activities at Ellington, Talcottville, and Vernon Center, but not those for Rockville)	1,110	291	124	68			1	1
Stafford Springs	3,059	1,111	491	161
Wallingford	11,155	3,302	1,570	563			12	17	21
Waterbury (includes activities at Middlebury, Prospect, and Wolcott)	73,141	25,498	12,463	4,662			161	57	104
Watertown	3,850	974	328	109
Westport	4,259	1,057	482	180
Windsor (includes activities at Wilson)	4,178	786	379	125			3	2	1
District of Columbia:
Washington (includes activities at Hyattsville, Mount Rainier, and Rockville, Md., and Rosslyn, Va.)	331,069	24,351	11,738	6,474	726	340	97	77	83
Alexandria, Va	15,329	320	179	86
Florida:
Jacksonville	57,699	2,488	1,308	587	201	67	7	19	14
Georgia:
Atlanta	154,839	4,410	2,287	1,011	144	72	11	38	29
Idaho:
Boise	17,358	2,283	1,555	548	112	32	15	7	6
Illinois:
Alton	17,528	1,504	764	484	835	115	1	5
Arlington Heights	1,943							1
Aurora (includes activities at Montgomery and North Aurora)	29,807	6,702	3,566	1,795	348	136	28	89	6
Belleville	21,122	2,500	1,227	770			37	1
Benton (includes activities at West City)	2,675	229	122	17	284	105	120	8
Berwyn (includes activities at Clyde, Morton, Park, and North Berwyn)	5,841	1,570	751	536			6	6
Bloomington	25,768	3,407	1,612	1,152	56	29		5
Blue Island (includes activities at Burr Oak)	8,043	1,903	1,015	625			6	4
Harvey	7,227	1,784	974	385
Morgan Park	3,694	662	310	230
Buckner							58	1
Chicago (includes activities at Austin, Hawthorn, Jefferson, and Kensington)	2,185,283	781,217	379,850	190,693	38,269	8,895	3,162	3,153	3,032
Evanston	24,978	5,700	2,501	1,349
Chicago Heights	14,525	6,077	3,539	1,135				1
Christopher (includes activities at Hodgetown and Urbain)	1,825						98	4	2
Cicero	14,557	6,072	3,196	1,354			25	26	38
Decatur	31,140	2,422	1,127	694	84	14	40	6	17
De Kalb (includes activities at Cortland, Creston, Elburn, Malta, Maple Park, and Rollo)	8,102	2,584	1,478	637	107	41	5	9	8
Rochelle	2,732	420	195	126
Sycamore	3,926	686	349	234
East St. Louis	58,547	9,400	5,729	1,613	1,513	128	24	10	19
Galesburg (includes activities at East Galesburg)	22,089	3,590	1,844	1,192	54	22	6	8	6
Glencoe	1,899						1		1
Granite City	9,903	2,784	1,863	344			231	1	2
Harrisburg (includes activities at Carriers Mills and Ledford)	5,309	295	180	49	62	28	130	9	7
Herrin	6,861	1,080	565	205	131	26	51	10	39
Highland Park (includes activities at Highwood)	4,209	864	341	120			3	3	5
Johnston City	3,248	696	379	131
Joliet (includes activities at Rockdale)	34,670	10,441	5,877	2,483	455	112	62	23	43
Lake Forest	3,349	1,106	478	251
La Salle (includes activities at Utica)	11,537	3,442	1,722	888	381	122	14	9	13
Madison	5,046	2,512	1,845	60
Marion	7,093	294	140	31
Maywood	8,033	2,053	947	515			15	7	8
Melrose Park	4,806	2,204	1,284	413
Moline (includes activities at Silvis)	24,199	7,211	4,089	2,229	644	294	138	155	130
East Moline	2,665	1,232	851	134
North Chicago	3,306	1,325	738	246			10	8	10
Oak Park	19,444	3,325	1,380	934			14	9	16
Oglesby							8		3
Ottawa	9,535	1,502	745	532
Pana	6,055	1,098	516	287	102	26	86	4	3
Peoria	66,950	8,810	4,661	2,598	350	107	52	4	12
Peru	7,984	2,135	1,048	703			5	6	6
Rockford	45,401	13,828	7,102	4,094	367	145	78	65	61
Rock Island	24,335	4,922	2,537	1,491			36	33	40
Royalton (includes activities at Bush and Hearst)	357						50		1
St. Charles	4,046	1,572	877	381			17	5	45
Sesser	1,292
Springfield	51,678	6,900	3,356	1,940	423	173	20	59	4
Spring Valley (includes activities at Cherry, Dalzell, Depue, Ladd, Marquette, and Seatonville)	7,035	2,992	1,536	1,112	255	85	7	12	7

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Illinois—Continued.
Streator	14,253	3,432	1,705	1,063			5	1	4
Waukegan	16,069	5,624	3,176	1,087	450	142	18	32	28
Westville (includes activities at Georgetown)	2,607	1,253	720	389			23	16	25
Bridge Farm	967				99	37
Woodstock	4,331	658	354	217			9	3	1
Zeigler							88	7	5
Indiana:
Anderson (includes activities at Lapel, Middletown, and Pendleton)	22,476	977	548	255	72	25	45	5	11
Alexandria	5,096	451	248	151
Elwood	11,028	812	409	241
Frankfort	8,634	102	58	31
Clinton	6,229	1,805	937	171	188	23
East Chicago (includes activities at Indiana Harbor)	19,098	10,295	6,638	951	6,543	310	514	16	308
Elkhart	19,282	1,636	893	437	131	40	98		13
Fort Wayne (includes activities at Arcola, Huntertown, and New Haven)	63,933	7,204	3,785	2,459	599	391	35	26	22
Gary	16,802	8,242	5,693	1,008			1,402	93	665
Hammond (includes activities at Cambridge City and Centerville)	20,925	5,553	3,131	1,022			108	34	84
Indianapolis	233,650	19,767	10,407	6,088	1,227	332	312	56	162
Kokomo (includes activities at Center Township)	17,010	719	389	236	55	8	2	3	4
Laporte	10,525	1,954	1,083	522	277	72	61	11	9
Logansport	19,050	1,405	777	414	179	16	132	5	12
Mishawaka	11,886	1,803	977	346			63	12	30
Peru	10,910	687	363	211	18	13		2	2
Richmond	22,324	1,173	599	320	55	103	30	2	17
South Bend	53,684	13,420	6,787	2,226	1,111	398	164	24	86
Sullivan	4,115	88	51	17	29	7		2	1
Vincennes	14,895	816	438	321	163	17		3	1
Whiting	6,587	2,888	1,715	463			83	27	68
Iowa:
Burlington (includes activities at West Burlington)	24,324	3,938	2,037	1,283	31	10	106	8	5
Carney (includes activities at Delaware, Bloomfield, Enterprise, Oralabor, Saylor, and Swanwood)							1
Cedar Falls	5,012	753	356	261	112	30	31	4	4
Cedar Rapids (includes activities at Benson, Cedar Heights, Janesville, New Hartford, and Parkersburg)	32,811	5,321	2,619	1,531	201	57	6	36	26
Charles City	5,892	821	455	289	19	5	48		2
Cherokee	4,884	754	425	183	29	7
Clayworks
Clinton	25,577	4,880	2,615	1,697	88	32	89		1
Council Bluffs	29,292	4,268	2,309	1,302	126	49	34	10	10
Davenport (includes activities at Bettendorf and Rockingham)	43,028	8,101	4,132	2,597	219	65	11	22	22
Des Moines	86,368	10,395	5,231	2,807	392	109	42	39	35
Valley Junction	2,573	175	93	54
Dubuque	38,494	6,089	3,220	2,281			514	14	9
Fort Dodge	15,543	2,188	1,199	699	95	24	7	6	4
High Bridge					36	9		1
Lyons							2		1
Mason City	11,230	1,508	823	322	95	31	190	13	6
Muscatine (includes activities at Blue Grass and Fairport)	16,178	2,145	1,089	713	35	13	25	2	2
Mystic	2,663	522	283	99	45	27	6	1	2
Oelwein	6,028	929	565	202	58	16	58	3	1
Scandia
Sioux City (includes activities at Leeds, Riverside, and South Sioux City)	47,828	10,452	5,781	2,408	388	76	59	36	50
Waterloo (includes activities at Waterloo East Side and Waterloo West Side)	26,693	2,706	1,494	650			302	6	4
Yoder
Kansas:
Atchison	16,429	1,084	526	289	46	15	10	8	4
Barber
Caney	3,597	210	113	67	29	11
Capaldo
Carona (includes activities at Cokedale, East Mineral, Hamilton, and Mackie)					36	11	3	2	1
Cherryvale	4,304	176	108	29
Dearing	250
Edson					1		8
Fort Scott	10,463	386	209	106	7	2
Franklin							165		1
Frontenac	3,396	1,572	798	253			186	3	4
Gross							17
Horton	3,600	235	137	66	21	11
Kansas City	82,331	10,344	5,710	2,427	942	72	282	16	32
Parsons	12,463	463	259	133	9	1	1	1	1
Pittsburg	14,755	1,137	588	322	311	61	182		9
Radley							74	2	2
Ringo							9	1
Roseland	396						2
Salina	9,688	740	376	222	18	7
Skidmore							1
South Radley
Topeka	43,684	4,153	2,123	1,115	91	13	16	11	14
Wichita	52,450	2,855	1,591	653	103	40	124	11	6
Kentucky:
Danville	5,420	69	40	12
Lexington	35,099	936	509	330
Louisville	223,928	17,436	8,334	5,704	284	90	13	19	13
Newport	30,309	3,405	1,534	1,009	53	23
Louisiana:
Amite (includes activities at Gulette, Independence, Roseland, and Shiloh)	1,677				32	11
Hammond	2,942	154	72	18				1	1
Kentwood	3,609	150	72	8
Natalbany
New Orleans (includes activities at Algiers, Amesville, Chef Manteur, Gentilly, Gretna, Lakeview, Lee, Little Woods, McDonoghville, Milneburg, and Pontchartrain Grove	339,075	27,686	13,486	6,138	1,217	328	95	96	85
Shreveport	28,015	1,004	525	248	105	10

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Maine:
Auburn	15,064	2,574	1,090	454	209	70	3	6	4
Augusta	13,211	2,639	1,022	271	226	38	10	4	1
Hallowell	2,864	309	181	74
Bangor	24,803	4,280	1,883	610	364	52	9	7	11
Bath	9,396	1,315	526	210	84	30	8	7	4
Biddeford	17,079	6,761	2,537	823			4	3	7
Brunswick (includes activities at Topsham)	6,621	1,539	602	270			14	3	8
Foxcroft	1,867
Lewiston	26,247	9,418	3,502	1,406			9	29	18
Lisbon	4,116	988	427	165				3	3
Old Town	6,317	1,383	664	118				1	1
Orono	3,555	868	449	63				1	1
Portland	58,571	12,078	5,023	2,222	758	437	108	71	94
South Portland	7,471	1,003	415	147
Westbrook	8,281	1,744	748	347
Presque Isle	5,179	1,147	524	166	560	35
Rumford (includes activities at Mexico, Smithville, and Virginia)	6,777	2,634	1,280	192	111	51
Saco	6,583	1,168	463	158			2	1
Skowhegan	5,341	783	346	144	76	17
Waterville (includes activities at Winslow)	11,458	2,688	1,138	454			13	6	6
Maryland:
Baltimore (includes activities at Arlington, Brooklyn, Catonsville, Curtis Bay, Dundalk, Franklinville, Gardenville, Govans, Hamilton, Hillsdale, Mount Winans, Orangeville, Roland Park, Sparrows Point, Towson, and West Arlington)	558,485	77,043	33,638	16,643	3,674	860	221	212	230
Massachusetts:
Adams	13,026	5,097	2,042	766			10	2	8
Amherst	5,112	661	259	83			3		2
Arlington	11,187	2,758	1,157	602			24	10	20
Athol	8,536	1,638	779	176			8	6	7
Attleboro	16,215	4,453	1,919	808			32	16	31
Belmont	5,542	1,572	639	275			4	6	8
Beverly (includes activities at Hamilton and Wenham)	18,650	4,661	2,174	808			52	23	22
Danvers	9,407	1,908	790	385
Boston (includes activities at Allston, Brighton, Charlestown, Dorchester, East Boston, Mattapan, Mount Hope, Rosindale, Roxbury, South Boston, and West Roxbury)	670,585	240,722	103,160	47,791	16,169	4,148	1,172	625	697
Hyde Park	15,507	4,442	2,077	905
Bridgewater	7,688	2,317	1,623	482			10	8	7
Brockton	56,878	15,425	7,033	3,167	725	253	28	106	65
Brookline	27,792	8,345	2,307	1,274			87	19	26
Cambridge	104,839	34,608	14,636	7,162	898	214	126	62	85
Canton	4,797	1,156	489	252			7	14	13
Chelsea	32,452	13,748	5,883	2,133			83	55	66
Chicopee	25,401	10,036	4,330	1,280			22	15	19
Clinton (includes activities at Boylston, Lancaster, and Sterling)	13,075	4,798	1,916	1,029			6	13	10
Cohasset	2,585	520	217	85			4	2	4
Concord (includes activities at Bedford, Carlisle, and Lincoln)	6,421	1,649	738	292			4	5	4
Dedham	9,284	2,718	1,206	520	445	96	9	7	6
Douglass	2,152
Dudley	4,267	1,579	704	172
East Bridgewater (includes activities at Elmwood and Westdale)	3,363	547	253	113				1	1
East Falmouth
Easthampton (includes activities at Southampton)	8,524	3,077	1,227	404			2	9	8
Easton	5,139	1,371	698	380
Mansfield	5,183	1,020	470	141
East Weymouth							3	1
Everett	33,484	9,607	4,085	2,228			55	25	34
Fall River (includes activities at Swansea)	119,295	50,874	20,181	8,368	2,445	705	154	81	116
Somerset	2,798	706	295	102
Westport	2,928	591	261	68
Tiverton, R. I.	4,032	1,069	497	175
Falmouth	3,144	544	245	79
Fitchburg	37,826	13,611	5,933	1,950			9	13	14
Framingham (includes activities at Ashland, Hopkinton, and Sherborn)	12,948	3,158	1,341	557			24	5	9
Franklin (includes activities at Wrentham)	5,641	1,504	722	248			1		1
Medway	2,696	537	216	112
Gardner	14,699	5,312	2,703	762			5	14	11
Gloucester (includes activities at Essex)	24,398	7,484	3,980	1,743			9	13	14
Manchester	2,673	847	437	165
Greenfield (includes activities at Deerfield)	10,427	1,918	916	366	232	41	7	13	14
Hanover (includes activities at Norwell and Pembroke)	2,326
Haverhill (includes activities at Merrimac, Mass., and Newton and Plaistow, N. H.)	44,115	11,153	4,936	1,915			33	30	22
Amesbury	9,894	2,635	1,140	463
Hingham	4,965	943	388	153			5	3	6
Holyoke (includes activities at South Hadley Falls and Willimansett)	57,730	23,238	9,457	3,765			70	47	47
Hudson (includes activities at Berlin, Bolton, and Stow)	6,743	1,790	863	293			4	3	3
Ipswich (includes activities at Hamilton, Rowley, and Topsfield)	5,777	2,251	872	175				3	2
Lawrence	85,892	41,319	17,414	6,588	3,072	799	185	104	141
Leominster (includes activities at Lunenberg)	17,580	4,875	2,058	645			25	7	19
Lexington (includes activities at Bedford and Burlington)	4,918	1,143	517	242
Lowell	106,294	43,457	18,191	7,028			114	134	166
Dracut	3,461	1,035	482	231
Tewksbury	3,750	1,670	872	89
Ludlow	4,948	2,309	799	158
Lynn (includes activities at Nahant)	89,336	27,344	12,038	4,931			247	120	143
Saugus	8,047	1,750	751	416
Swampscott	6,204	1,369	580	250
Malden	44,404	13,430	5,404	2,941			47	67	63
Melrose	15,715	3,091	1,182	718
Marlboro (includes activities at Northboro and Southboro)	14,579	3,344	1,508	810			13	15	19
Maynard	6,390	3,002	1,403	349			11	5	9
Medford	23,150	5,126	2,134	1,196			58	44	63
Methuen	11,448	4,501	1,776	922			17	33	40
Milford	13,055	4,331	2,039	674			16	19	22

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalizaton papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Massachusetts—Continued.
Monson	4,758	904	399	156
Montague	6,866	1,936	923	375				4	4
Natick	9,866	1,997	926	499			4	4	4
Needham	5,026	1,584	644	268			7	4	6
New Bedford (includes activities at Acushnet and Freetown)	96,652	42,625	17,151	5,441			76	190	158
Dartmouth	4,378	1,072	488	116
Fairhaven	5,122	1,232	538	173
Newburyport	14,949	3,007	1,215	569				12	6
Newton	39,806	11,191	4,061	1,829			13	21	18
North Adams	22,019	6,046	2,561	1,266			4	8	7
Northampton	19,431	4,880	2,130	983	299	58	3	9	6
North Attleboro (includes activities at Plainville)	9,562	2,490	1,133	508			20	12	21
Northbridge	8,807	3,560	1,619	503				3	2
North Easton								1	1
Norwood	8,014	2,555	1,289	521			9	42	28
Palmer (includes activities at Bondsville, Thorndyke, and Three Rivers)	8,610	3,074	1,354	282			10	9	14
Peabody	15,721	5,341	2,931	783			10	25	9
Pittsfield (includes activities at Hinsdale and Lanesboro)	32,121	6,744	3,176	1,540	763	171	32	22	27
Dalton	3,568	462	199	138
Lenox	3,060	754	350	178
Plymouth	12,141	3,722	1,621	463			10	1	1
Quincy	32,642	10,875	4,996	2,367			86	51	72
Revere	18,219	5,331	2,400	1,407			78	48	71
Rockland	6,928	1,110	502	276				1
Abington	5,455	885	390	153
Weymouth	12,895	2,312	1,099	509
Rockport (includes activities at Pigeon Cove)	4,211	1,029	478	200			1
Salem	43,697	13,539	5,696	2,443			37	41	31
Shrewsbury	1,946						1	2	1
Somerville	77,236	20,751	8,814	4,263			101	77	83
Southboro
Southbridge (includes activities at Charlton and Sturbridge)	12,592	4,315	1,943	657			2	23	21
Springfield (includes activities at Long Meadow)	88,926	22,999	9,942	4,182	2,818	595	152	83	120
Agawam	3,501	826	378	155
Stoneham	7,090	1,362	615	316			4	1	5
Stoughton	6,316	1,439	666	266			2	4	4
Taunton	34,259	9,779	4,206	1,506			13	22	23
Uxbridge	4,671	1,243	601	144				2	2
Wakefield (includes activities at Lynnfield)	11,404	3,128	1,280	662			31	12	24
Reading	5,818	1,012	421	191
Walpole (includes activities at Norfolk)	4,892	1,306	635	230			4	7	9
Foxboro	3,863	698	377	125
Waltham	27,834	7,683	3,068	1,525			21	11	17
Watertown	12,875	4,057	1,773	804			14	10	10
Webster	11,509	4,006	1,839	680			1	10	7
Wellesley	5,413	1,559	550	234			1	1	2
Westfield	16,044	4,401	2,173	588			11	10	11
West Springfield	9,224	2,100	943	372			4	1	3
Whitman	7,292	1,108	481	218			2	3	3
Winchester	9,309	2,486	1,027	366			4	10	7
Winthrop	10,132	2,093	819	551			15	11	12
Woburn (includes activities at Burlington and Wilmington)	15,308	4,039	2,006	1,063			21	7	13
Worcester	145,986	48,492	22,816	9,126	3,283	704	161	153	146
Michigan:
Albion	5,833	775	421	245			5	3	2
Alpha (includes activities at Dunn Mine Location)
Baltic (includes activities at Atlantic Mine, South Range, and Trimountain)								1	1
Battle Creek	25,267	2,616	1,259	570	144	26	9	6	6
Bay City	45,166	11,027	5,213	4,009	205	141	48	67	63
Belding	4,119	351	130	66
Benton Harbor (includes activities at Coloma and Milburg)	9,185	1,187	538	340	174	61	15	18	25
Bessemer	4,583	2,144	1,260	427	426	117	47	11	17
Calumet (includes activities at Centennial, Centennial Heights, Kearsarge, Osceola, Tamarack, and Wolverine; exclusive of Laurium and Red Jacket)	20,097				632	206	90	65	77
Laurium	8,537	2,617	1,263	825
Red Jacket	4,211	1,953	1,151	357
Crystal Falls	3,775	1,501	818	358	274	73	12	6	1
Detroit	465,766	156,565	75,323	32,891	14,229	2,663	1,909	654	746
Diorite
Dodgeville
Dowagiac	5,088	471	263	88	12	6		3	3
Escanaba (includes activities at North Escanaba and Wells)	13,194	4,095	2,236	1,365	165	48	11	6	7
Flint	38,550	6,662	3,628	1,579	811	83	65	22	12
Gladstone	4,211	1,423	753	352			56
Grand Haven (includes activities at Ferrysburg and Spring Lake)	5,856	1,364	665	393	92	40	7	2	2
Grand Rapids	112,571	28,335	13,689	7,758	877	269	124	174	155
Gwynn (includes activities at Austin and Princeton)								1
Hancock (includes activities at Franklin Mine and Quincy Mine)	8,981	3,162	1,611	786			46	31	34
Hemlock
Highland Park (includes activities at Greenfield)	4,120	915	404	247			8	10	12
Hamtramck	3,559	1,261	568	262
Holland	10,490	2,465	1,162	764			17	4	2
Ionia	5,030	744	366	268	82	17	1	3	1
Iron Mountain	9,216	3,741	1,878	1,208	115	90	16	5	11
Iron River	2,450						14	27	19
Ironwood	12,821	6,234	3,651	1,259			78	31	48
Ishpeming	12,448	4,732	2,478	1,550			29	3	13
Jackson	31,433	4,307	2,182	1,180	254	32	19	12	19
Kalamazoo (includes activities at Comstock, Galesburg, Plainwell, Schoolcraft, and Vicksburg)	39,437	6,857	3,149	1,505	187	74	28	27	29
Lansing (includes activities an Bath, DeWitt, Dimondale, Haslett, Holt, and Masons)	31,229	3,973	2,006	1,029	524	42	43	11	15
St. Johns	3,154	192	97	55
Loretto (includes activities at Waucedah							2

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Michigan—Continued.
Manistee (includes activities at East Lake, File City, and Oak Hill)	12,381	3,610	1,828	1,480	39	21	7
Marquette	11,503	3,574	1,930	1,117	249	135	12	10	9
Mohawk (includes activities at Ahmeek and Allouez)					39	21	3
Monroe (includes activities at Erie and La Salle)	6,893	828	458	188	53	13		2	2
Muskegon (includes activities at Fruitport and Muskegon Heights)	24,062	6,252	3,092	2,070	216	34	22	10	10
Negaunee	8,460	3,862	2,207	869			32	48	46
Owosso (includes activities at Corunna, Morrice, and Perry)	9,639	1,352	674	398	98	18		5	4
Painesdale								8	7
Pontiac	14,532	2,683	1,290	619	274	48
Port Huron (includes activities at North Port Huron, Salt Block, and Upton Works)	18,863	5,979	2,541	1,917	187	24		1	1
River Rouge (includes activities at Ecorse, Ford City, and Navarre)	4,163	1,227	581	284			5	2	3
Saginaw (includes activities at Birch Run, Bridgeport, Burt, Carrollton, Chesaning, Fosters, Freeland, Merrill, Oakley, Swan Creek, and Zilwaukee)	50,510	11,701	5,584	3,799	339	108	42	14	36
Saginaw West Side							12	8	11
St. Charles	1,451
Scottville (includes activities at Amber and Custer)	891				19	12	3
Stambaugh (includes activities at New Caspian and Palatka)	1,322						19	7	3
Traverse City	12,115	2,009	1,042	634	16	9		1	1
Ypsilanti (includes activities at Saline and Wayne)	6,230	614	251	155	164	98		1	1
Minnesota:
Albert Lee (includes activities at Alden, Armstrong, Clarks Grove, Glenville, Hayward, and Manchester)	6,192	1,192	591	337	61	44	1	2
Aurora (includes activities at Adriatic, Messaba, and Stevens)	1,919						1	8	6
Austin (includes activities at Brownsdale, Lansing, Lyle, Oakland, and Waltham)	6,960	1,128	615	342	41	13	1	4	2
Bemidji	5,099	1,056	670	401	90	76	2	4	2
Biwabik (includes activities at Pineville)	1,690						3	9	9
Brainerd (includes activities at Barrows)	8,526	2,164	1,122	796	58	38	13	7	5
Buhl	1,005							7	4
Chisholm (includes activities at Hartley, Monroe Location, Myers, and Shenango)	7,684	4,469	2,936	551			13	25	27
Clementson							2	12	7
Cloquet	7,031	2,959	1,794	753	61	24
Coleraine (includes activities at Bovey, Calumet, Marble, and Taconite)	1,613						5	4	2
Crosby (includes activities at Deerwood and Ironton)							7	10	7
Duluth	78,466	30,652	17,663	8,359	3,360	703	146	140	140
Dunbar								3	2
East Grand Forks	2,533	773	422	220	63	44	1	4	2
Grand Forks, N. Dak	12,478	3,607	1,756	929
Ely (includes activities at Winton)	3,572	1,713	995	377			8	15	12
Eveleth	7,036	3,761	2,328	679			13	16	14
Fairmont	2,958	392	198	169	40	20	2	1	2
Faribault	9,001	1,443	695	445	40	17	5	4	2
Fergus Falls (includes activities at Battle Lake, Pelican Rapids, Rothsay, and Underwood)	6,887	2,418	1,288	494	73	54	4	9	8
Gilbert (includes activities at Elba, Genoa Mining Location, McKinley, and Sparta)	1,700						13	11	15
Graceton
Grand Rapids	2,230				103	57	2	3	1
Hibbing (includes activities at Alice, Brooklyn, Carson Lake, Dupond, Glenn, Kittsville, Lamberton, Latonia, Mace, Mahoning, Mabel Hill, Mitchell, Morton, Penobscot, Pool, and Stevenson)	8,832	4,342	2,879	730			13	15	17
Homestead
International Falls	1,487				90	30	12	7	5
Keewatin (includes activities at Bennet Mine, Bray Location, and St. Paul Location)	695						1
Kettle River
Kinney (includes activities at Lucknow, Sharon, and Spina							2	6	4
Linford
Little Falls	6,078	1,300	638	522	31	20	4	1	1
Little Marais
Little Swan
Mankato (includes activities at Eagle Lake, Kasota, Lake Crystal, and North Mankato)	10,365	2,070	1,018	814	91	33	9	6	4
St. Peter	4,176	1,260	635	254
Minneapolis (includes activities at Robbinsdale and St. Louis Park)	301,408	85,938	45,159	23,462	2,473	841	480	356	355
Montevideo	3,056	571	304	177	36	15	1	1	2
Moorhead	4,840	1,384	751	458	51	23
Mountain Iron (includes activities at Costin, Ellis, Hopper, Kinross, Leonidas Mine, and Parkville)	1,343						4	5	7
Nashwauk	2,080						5	4	3
Owatonna (includes activities at Bixby, Havana, Hope, Medford, Meriden, Merton, and Pratt)	5,658	1,104	520	400	36	9	4	2	1
Rosey
St. Cloud (includes activities at Sauk Rapids and White Park)	10,600	2,024	1,103	675			5	4	5
St. Paul (includes activities at North St. Paul)	214,744	56,524	29,048	17,071	1,709	483	146	140	126
Section Thirty
South St. Paul	4,510	1,723	934	423	24	15	2	8	5
Stillwater (includes activities at Oak Park and South Stillwater)	10,198	2,774	1,578	1,151	25	19	3	4	5
Tofte
Trout Lake
Two Harbors	4,990	2,114	1,265	466	297	37	10	9	4
Virginia (includes activities at Franklin and Northside)	10,473	5,340	3,397	958			17	27	22
Winger	728
Winona	18,583	3,858	1,929	1,586	60	19	15	4	2
Williams
Wilmar	4,135	1,281	631	434	34	28		4
Wrenshall (includes activities at Banker, Carlton, Huson, and Wingate)	755
Wright
Mississippi:
Greenville	9,610	296	185	86
Gulfport	6,386	269	164	64			6

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Missouri:
Cape Girardeau	8,475	375	208	162	7	2	.....	.....	.....
Ilasco
Kansas City (includes activities at North Kansas City)	248,381	25,327	13,052	6,953	1,050	204	184	101	156
Independence	9,859	412	203	116	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Rosedale, Kans	5,960	470	228	173	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
St. Joseph	77,403	8,113	4,281	2,256	246	39	476	5	11
St. Louis	687,029	125,706	63,440	33,081	6,827	968	1,038	377	612
Maplewood	4,976	505	267	191	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Sedalia	17,822	801	413	225	2	.....	8	1	3
Montana:
Great Falls	13,948	3,662	1,943	1,018	446	33	.....	16	9
Lewistown (includes activities at Glengarry, Hilger, Moore, and South Lewistown)	2,992	411	219	123	137	28	63	4	11
Miles City	4,697	852	555	166	192	14	61	10	4
Missoula	12,869	2,997	2,020	785	87	7	.....	1	.....
Red Lodge	4,860	2,099	1,314	420	53	12	3	8	7
Nebraska:
Elyria					24	10	.....	.....	.....
Fremont	8,718	1,369	686	457	78	47	81	2	2
Grand Island	10,326	1,561	869	541	80	12	90	.....	2
Hebron	1,778				17	13	.....	.....	.....
Lincoln	43,973	7,200	3,101	1,372	227	98	25	18	29
Norfolk	6,025	799	422	162	45	17	.....	.....	.....
Omaha (includes activities at Florence)	124,096	27,068	13,788	7,079	2,315	386	919	109	574
Benson	3,170	484	237	155	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
South Omaha	26,259	7,834	4,377	1,956	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Schuyler	2,152	.....	.....	.....	89	29	30	1	1
Wilber	1,219	.....	.....	.....	63	26	.....	.....	.....
Nevada:
Reno	10,867	2,059	1,239	591	95	23	140	13	9
Sparks	2,500	522	338	113	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
New Hampshire:
Berlin (includes activities at Gorham and Milan)	11,780	5,082	2,378	768	282	65	.....	36	26
Claremont	7,529	1,819	731	298	53	23	1	7	7
Concord (includes activities at Penacook)	21,497	4,309	1,984	962	310	50	9	21	14
Pembroke	3,062	878	358	230	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Dover (includes activities at Durham, Elliot, Madbury, and Rollinsford)	13,247	3,206	1,475	747	137	39	4	11	2
Newmarket	3,348	1,340	497	106	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
East Jaffrey					.....	.....	2	.....	.....
Franklin (includes activities at Northfield and Sanbornton)	6,132	1,613	596	262	.....	.....	1	.....	.....
Jaffrey	1,895	.....	.....	.....	103	17	19	2	15
Lebanon	5,718	961	395	153	.....	.....	.....	1	1
Manchester (includes activities at Auburn, Bedford, Bow, Candia, Chester, Grassmere, Hookset, and Weare)	70,063	29,692	11,486	4,566	694	285	40	108	84
Goffstown	2,579	515	265	66	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Nashua	26,005	8,957	3,748	1,190	.....	.....	43	40	49
Portsmouth	11,269	2,138	975	514	120	62	.....	2	1
Salem (includes activities at Hampshire)	2,117	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Tilton	1,866	.....	.....	.....	95	10	2	.....	2
New Jersey:
Atlantic City (includes activities at Ventnor City)	46,150	6,400	2,996	1,170	477	138	45	58	44
Pleasantville	4,390	304	170	55	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Bayonne	55,545	20,522	10,109	3,364	.....	.....	69	110	112
Bernardsville					.....	.....	6	3	5
Bloomfield	15,070	3,359	1,544	808	.....	.....	2	9	7
East Orange	34,371	5,677	2,079	1,187	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Boonton	4,930	1,090	505	207	.....	.....	6	.....	.....
Bordentown (includes activities at Roebling and White House)	4,250	349	162	63	244	64	3	.....	2
Bound Brook	3,970	1,242	606	212	289	49	5	5	4
Carneys Point					120	17	.....	.....	.....
Cranford	3,641	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Dover (includes activities at Bowlbyville, Denville, Kenvil, Mill Brook, Mine Hill, Rockaway, and Succasunna)	7,468	1,313	667	385	.....	.....	10	4	4
Wharton	2,983	1,133	732	169	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
East Newark	3,163	1,215	546	255	.....	.....	1	2	3
East Rutherford (includes activities at Lyndhurst)	4,275	1,187	561	297	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Carlstadt	3,807	1,272	591	331	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Wallington	3,448	1,365	618	199	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Elizabeth	73,409	23,894	11,713	5,036	1,757	494	77	68	80
Englewood	9,924	2,500	950	422	.....	.....	15	2	5
Florence	4,731	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Hackensack (including activities at Bogota, Maywood, North Hackensack, Oradell, Teaneck, and Woodridge	14,050	3,255	1,473	564	1,347	420	28	12	14
Harrison	14,498	5,257	2,503	1,046	.....	.....	39	39	39
Hoboken	70,324	27,668	13,562	5,796	.....	.....	92	100	93
Irvington	11,877	2,480	1,192	737	.....	.....	58	.....	.....
Jersey City	267,779	77,697	37,707	16,556	6,738	2,082	288	305	340
Kearney (includes activities at Arlington and North Arlington)	18,659	6,024	2,888	1,430	.....	.....	17	31	33
Leonia (includes activities at Palisade Park and Ridgefield)	1,486	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Edgewater	2,655	921	492	138	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Fort Lee	4,472	1,264	636	325	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Long Branch	13,298	2,529	1,250	496	324	90	15	20	24
Montclair (includes activities at Caldwell, Cedar Grove, Essex Falls, and Verona)	21,550	5,141	2,023	771	.....	.....	4	10	6
West Orange	10,980	2,850	1,336	628	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Morristown	12,507	2,657	1,115	562	453	114	12	11	8
Newark	347,469	110,655	49,674	21,427	4,190	1,470	312	272	197
New Brunswick	23,388	6,048	2,278	846	2,166	451	32	44	50
Orange	29,630	8,069	3,660	1,822	.....	.....	70	39	41
Park Ridge	1,401	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2	.....	.....
Passaic	54,773	28,467	10,920	2,967	.....	.....	40	53	61
Paterson (includes activities at North Paterson and Totowa)	125,600	45,398	20,182	9,817	1,477	619	96	157	156
Haledon	2,560	1,041	476	288	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Hawthorne	3,400	953	442	218	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Prospect Park	2,719	1,214	512	228	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Perth Amboy (includes activities at Fords, Keasbey, Sewaren, and Woodbridge)	32,121	14,288	7,201	2,231	.....	.....	.....	12	8

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalizaton papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
New Jersey—Continued.
Plainfield	20,550	4,144	1,670	830			9	7	10
Rahway	9,337	1,659	840	407			3	2	3
Red Bank (includes activities at Eatontown, Fairhaven, Little Silver, and Shrewsbury)	7,398	993	457	175			11	4	9
Ridgewood	5,416	768	316	162			4	3	6
Summit (includes activities at Chatham, Millburn, New Providence, Short Hills, and Springfield)	7,500	2,024	769	349			15	2	7
Tenafly	2,756	803	362	146
Town of Union (includes activity at Weehawken)	21,023	6,665	3,133	1,723			66	46	55
Trenton	96,815	26,310	12,938	5,253	1,605	401	205	204	283
Westfield	6,420	1,057	471	232			8	3	2
West Hoboken (includes activities at North Bergen)	35,403	13,713	6,177	2,905			32	49	52
West New York (includes activities at Union Hill)	13,560	3,556	1,712	920			12	25	29
Guttenberg	5,647	2,187	1,104	452
Woodbine	2,399				53	21	1		1
New Mexico:
Albuquerque (includes activities at Baralas, Martinez Town, and Old Albuquerque)	11,020	1,269	624	430	31	12	5	3	2
Santa Fe	5,072	196	108	70	15	3
New York:
Albany (includes activities at West Albany)	100,253	18,165	8,192	4,827	842	249	57	99	61
Albion (includes activities at Fancher and Hulberton)	5,016	995	454	327	135	45	66	6	3
Amsterdam (includes activities at Cranesville, Fort Johnson, and Hagaman)	31,267	10,624	4,691	1,808	596	86	57	26	51
Auburn (includes activities at Aurelius, Fleming, Melrose Park, Owasco, Port Byron, Sennett, Skaneateles, and Throop)	34,668	7,620	3,788	1,743	402	89	28	41	40
Ballston Spa	4,138	604	300	152	182	51		2	2
Batavia	11,613	2,133	1,026	474	111	25	4	5	6
Binghamton (includes activities at Endicott, Johnson City, and Union)	48,443	7,389	3,310	1,260	627	106	36	43	47
Buffalo (includes activities at Cheektowaga and Sloan)	423,715	118,444	56,337	29,409	4,897	1,556	341	309	442
Carthage	3,563	483	266	83			6	5	5
Cohoes	24,709	7,373	2,990	1,605			15	8	13
Corning	13,730	1,795	896	486	220	58	3	18	7
Depew	3,921	1,913	1,192	223			6	10	9
Lancaster	4,364	727	385	175
Dunkirk	17,221	5,146	2,548	1,067			33	11	41
Fredonia	5,285	1,187	536	268
Ellenville (includes activities at Greenfield and Napanoch)	3,114	316	157	112	187	77
Elmira (includes activities at Horseheads and Wellsburg)	37,176	5,259	2,494	1,648	188	64	4	22	14
Elmira Heights	2,732	325	155	76			3	2	1
Geneva	12,446	2,215	1,050	635	138	43	10	7	7
Gloversville	20,642	4,008	1,777	829	364	84	34	41	23
Hornell	13,617	1,272	627	450
Hudson (includes activities at Stottville)	11,417	2,209	1,142	336	141	43	3	11	6
Huntington	12,004				509	150	5	11	13
Ithaca	14,802	1,589	723	374	96	27	4	16	8
Jamestown (includes activities at Celeron, Falconer, Frewsburg, and Lakewood)	31,297	10,612	5,035	2,741	308	144	31	59	53
Lansingburg
Little Falls	12,273	3,915	1,832	581	378	90	25	18	28
Lockport	17,970	3,235	1,558	887	762	199	7	12	10
Lyons	4,460	808	387	266	172	89	42	6	5
Malone	6,467	819	346	205	79	19
Mamaroneck	5,699	1,641	781	344			12	8	10
Mechanicville (includes activities at Stillwater)	6,634	1,343	699	268			2	3	2
Medina (includes activities at Knowlesville and Middleport)	5,683	1,058	553	300			3	6
Mount Vernon (includes activities at Bronxville and Pelham)	30,919	8,029	3,612	1,950			23	35	37
Tuckahoe	2,722	1,140	543	202
Newark	6,227	759	325	176				14	10
Newburgh	27,805	4,823	2,241	1,125	465	209	9	19	21
New Rochelle	28,867	8,677	4,000	1,979			27	36	35
New York	4,766,883	1,927,703	828,793	318,091	82,009	27,077	2,807	9,162	6,192
Niagara Falls (includes activities at La Salle)	30,445	12,064	*5,755	2,082			83	130	120
North Tonawanda	11,955	3,628	1,887	765			10	5	5
Tonawanda	8,290	1,854	948	573
Olean	14,743	2,424	1,184	641	410	78	23	10	17
Oneida	8,317	876	422	234	99	22	9	2	2
Oneonta	9,491	741	428	200	47	15
Poughkeepsie	27,936	4,534	2,122	994	504	168	28	45	34
Rochester (includes activities at Irondequoit, Brighton, Chili, Clarkson, Gates, Greece, Hamlin, Henrietta, Mendon, Ogden, Parma, Penfield, Perinton, Pittsford, Riga, Rush, Sweden, Webster, and Wheatland)	218,149	58,993	27,067	13,003	2,937	891	387	384	392
Rockville Center (includes activities at East Rockaway, Lynbrook, Malverne, and Oceanside)	3,667	420	209	133	1,039	294	1	4	5
Rome	20,497	4,114	2,254	869
Schenectady (includes activities at Alplaus, Glenville, Niskayuna, and South Schenectady)	72,826	18,631	9,562	3,856	850	275	80	88	99
Scotia	2,957	374	186	105
Shaleton
Solvay	5,139	1,663	946	342			9	7	8
Syracuse (includes activities at East Sycamore, Eastwood, Liverpool, and Onondaga Valley)	137,249	30,781	14,944	7,036	1,395	347	89	87	88
Troy	76,813	15,432	6,554	4,388	357	115	29	33	35
Green Island	4,737	867	393	202
Watervliet	15,074	2,750	1,226	667
Utica (includes activities at Capron, Deerfield, New Hartford, New York Mills, and Whitesboro)	74,419	21,308	9,341	4,326	1,402	274	36	50	54
Watertown (includes activities at Brownville)	26,730	6,268	2,798	1,050	661	86	33	12	25
Westbury								1	1
White Plains (includes activities at Elmsford, Hartsdale, Kensico, Purchase, Scarsdale, and Valhalla)	15,949	3,898	1,914	777			26	33	37
Yonkers	79,803	26,590	12,295	5,629	3,249	1,131	52	145	118
North Carolina:
Concord (includes activities at Kannapolis)	8,715	21	14	7	5	1
North Dakota:
Bismarck	5,443	965	514	301	56	15	13	4	3
Devils Lake	5,157	1,236	652	255	67	17	8	5	2

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
North Dakota—Continued.
Dickinson	3,678	1,015	530	239	74	40	.....	9	7
Edgeley (includes activities at Berlin, Judd, and Medbury)	749	.....	.....	.....	53	11	.....	1	1
Fargo	14,331	3,200	1,669	1,011	171	57	16	21	11
Harvey	1,443	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Jamestown	4,358	878	426	203	97	25	2	5	4
Kulm	645	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
LaMoure	929	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Mandan	3,873	1,293	739	276	64	37	.....	.....	.....
Medina	343	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Minot	6,188	1,150	587	325	187	22	.....	.....	.....
New Salem	621	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	18	.....	.....
South Heart	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Valley City	4,606	1,072	540	317	81	22	3	3	1
Williston	3,124	653	364	171	82	49	57	.....	.....
Ohio:
Akron (includes activities at Kenmore)	69,067	13,241	7,051	2,459	1,156	217	1,526	131	48
Barberton	9,410	2,829	1,723	222	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Cuyahoga Falls	4,020	470	246	129	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Alliance	15,083	2,659	1,606	350	.....	.....	14	10	13
Ashtabula	18,296	4,710	2,382	1,108	178	66	12	29	25
Bucyrus	8,122	872	489	255	27	6	.....	.....	.....
Byesville	3,156	332	181	85	111	45	2	6	7
Canton (includes activities at New Berlin, North Industry, and Osnaburg)	50,217	8,648	5,010	2,005	517	131	34	60	61
Chillicothe	14,508	618	290	181	1	1	.....	1	1
Cincinnati	363,591	56,792	23,723	17,253	1,766	544	335	257	184
Cleveland (includes activities at Euclid, Royalton, Shaker Heights, and West Park)	560,663	195,703	94,431	40,482	15,040	2,922	1,055	1,290	1,267
Cleveland Heights	2,955	692	257	132	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
East Cleveland	9,179	1,418	557	397	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Lakewood	15,181	3,916	1,938	791	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Newberg	5,813	2,010	911	539	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Columbus	181,511	16,285	8,487	4,453	393	119	31	38	30
Conneaut (includes activities at Amboy, East Conneaut, and North Conneaut)	8,319	1,533	793	326	.....	.....	.....	2	1
Dayton	116,577	13,847	7,303	3,451	477	139	44	51	55
East Youngstown (includes activities at Hazletown and Lowellville)	4,972	3,866	2,814	107	1,292	360	154	38	38
Elyria	14,825	3,061	1,709	556	1,038	122	13	9	15
Forsythe	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Fremont	9,939	1,057	516	385	48	10	7	6	8
Hamilton (includes activities at Coke Otto, Fairfield Township, St. Clair Township, and Symmes)	35,279	3,309	1,703	1,042	224	38	3	6	5
Leetonia	2,665	647	375	103	.....	.....	1	1	1
Lisbon	3,084	261	158	61	171	59	2	.....	.....
Loraine	28,883	10,929	6,216	1,496	.....	.....	.....	23	20
Martins Ferry	9,133	1,540	787	348	445	131	3	5	6
Miamisburg	4,271	196	103	85	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Niles	8,361	2,502	1,437	399	258	55	4	8	5
Painesville	5,501	595	294	138	77	24	20	1	1
Piqua (includes activities at Bradford, Covington, Fletcher, Pleasant Hill, and West Milton)	13,388	752	379	195	33	7	3	1	2
Troy	6,122	179	88	59	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Robins	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Salem (includes activities at Beloit, Green, and Washingtonville)	8,943	1,239	703	234	.....	.....	48	3	3
Springfield (includes activities at Cold Springs)	46,921	3,156	1,662	916	56	10	4	5	3
Steubenville	22,391	5,214	3,103	589	431	102	14	12	9
Struthers	3,370	1,055	606	109	.....	.....	12	1	7
Tiffin	11,894	944	455	313	31	10	8	.....	.....
Toledo	168,497	32,037	15,826	8,752	1,887	328	323	186	182
Warren	11,081	1,352	667	275	.....	.....	4	2	1
Youngstown	79,066	24,860	14,027	4,268	.....	.....	91	47	61
Oklahoma:
Bartlesville (includes activities at Dewey and Smeltertown)	6,181	199	128	79	20	5	2	2	3
Coalgate	3,255	556	305	143	28	7	.....	.....	.....
Hartshorne	2,963	411	225	55	41	11	.....	.....	.....
Henryetta	1,671	.....	.....	.....	16	13	.....	.....	.....
Hugo	4,582	52	35	22	3	4	1	1	1
Lehigh (includes activities at Midway and Phillips)	1,880	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1	1
Moore	225	.....	.....	.....	1	1	.....	.....	.....
Tulsa	18,182	412	245	105	.....	.....	2	1	1
Wilburton	2,277	.....	.....	.....	13	11	.....	1	1
Oregon:
Astoria (includes activities at Hammond and Warrenton)	9,599	4,088	2,562	1,172	130	62	13	41	15
Portland	207,214	43,780	25,230	11,251	1,314	710	184	383	284
Pennsylvania:
Allentown	51,913	6,234	2,705	904	611	126	42	24	27
Altoona (includes activities at Logan Township)	52,127	5,212	2,757	1,083	227	91	28	41	36
Holidaysburg	3,734	138	76	35	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Juniata	5,285	206	117	44	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Barnesboro (includes activities at Cymbria Mines, Elmora, Emeigh, Garman, Marstellar, and Saxman	3,535	1,149	612	277	.....	.....	6	3	4
Spangler	2,700	647	337	116	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Beaver Falls	12,191	2,851	1,657	396	464	88	14	5	8
Berwick	5,357	365	218	43	71	16	.....	.....	.....
West Berwick	5,512	2,031	1,258	80	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Bethlehem (includes activities at Freemansburg and North Bethlehem)	12,837	797	378	233	767	130	.....	2	1
Braddock	19,357	7,299	4,103	929	.....	.....	79	43	60
Bradford (includes activities at Custer City, Dagolia, Derrick City, Gilmer, and Lewis Run)	14,544	2,180	1,046	600	72	35	2	6	7
Butler	20,728	3,510	2,050	380	381	92	129	2	2
Carrick Station, Pittsburgh	6,117	924	454	329	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Chambersburg	11,800	172	87	60	9	5	1	3	2
Charleroi	9,615	3,356	1,679	448	199	22	4	9	9
Chester	38,537	6,673	3,476	1,137	659	151	31	35	22
Connellsville (includes activities at South Connellsville)	12,845	1,587	793	343	.....	.....	3	10	9
Corry	5,991	569	283	114	.....	.....	1	.....	.....
Dubois (includes activities at Big Run, Falls Creek, and Sandy Township)	12,623	2,122	1,128	540	347	142	3	11	9

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Pennsylvania—Continued.
Duquesne	15,727	6,381	3,604	760	.....	.....	26	26	33
East Lebanon	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Easton (includes activities at Glendon, Redington, West Easton, Williams Township)	28,523	3,122	1,452	646	.....	.....	29	23	17
East Pittsburgh	5,615	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	16	14
Eddystone	1,167	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1	.....
Ellsworth	2,084	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	70	.....	.....
Ellwood City (includes activities at Hazel Dell and Wurtemburg)	3,902	1,067	686	125	.....	.....	7	10	12
Erie (includes activities at Lawrence Park and Wesleyville)	66,525	14,943	7,562	3,348	546	176	42	54	68
Farrell	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	10	1	.....
Ford City (includes activities at Cadogen and Manorville)	4,850	2,314	1,361	256	286	104	22	23	29
Girardville	4,396	988	568	248	754	438	6	.....	.....
Glenlyon	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Greenville	5,909	373	203	88	.....	.....	7	.....	1
Harrisburg	64,186	4,134	1,979	917	.....	.....	6	4	6
Hazleton (includes activities at Hazle Township)	25,452	5,994	2,972	1,457	.....	.....	23	22	32
Indiana	5,749	214	113	33	230	56	5	3	1
Jeannette (includes activities at Grapeville and Penn Manor)	8,077	1,774	914	312	1,034	416	10	10	10
Jenkins Township (includes activities at Inkerman)	4,196	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	16	12
Johnstown (includes activities at Conemaugh, Dale, Ferndale, and Franklin)	55,482	15,316	9,225	1,621	900	344	142	46	44
Kingston	6,449	1,884	1,005	369	.....	.....	12	19	22
Kittanning	4,311	353	195	77	259	112	.....	.....	.....
Lancaster	47,227	3,203	1,472	1,028	77	36	14	23	25
Lansford	8,321	3,154	1,833	325	240	92	26	10	23
Larksville	9,288	3,099	1,646	645	.....	.....	6	10	14
Lebanon (includes activities at Lebanon Independent Borough, North Cornwall Township, South Lebanon, and West Lebanon)	19,240	1,254	750	205	55	6	10	2	4
Lehighton	5,316	344	209	67	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
McKeesport (includes activities at Dravosburg, Elizabeth Township, Port Vue, and Versailles)	42,694	12,631	6,551	2,548	.....	.....	48	44	60
Maltby	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Midlands	1,244	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1	1
Monessen (includes activities at Rostraver Township)	11,775	5,475	3,210	462	.....	.....	30	71	62
Monongahela City (includes activities at Courtney, Finleyville, Hazel Kirk, Milesville, Manown Mines, and Sunny Side)	7,598	1,487	795	272	.....	.....	14	8	9
Mount Carmel (includes activities at Atlas, Diamondtown, Keiser, and Kulpmont)	17,532	4,927	2,727	1,286	209	110	18	17	13
Mount Oliver Station	4,241	672	328	270	.....	.....	.....	3	3
Mount Pleasant (includes activities at Moorwood and Standard)	5,812	1,107	583	219	.....	.....	48	16	19
Bridgeport	3,860	853	376	117	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Nanticoke	18,877	7,187	3,923	1,935	.....	.....	59	35	54
New Brighton	8,329	865	482	148	.....	.....	3	3	4
New Castle	36,280	8,620	4,707	1,326	401	64	16	19	21
New Kensington	7,707	2,376	1,389	227	.....	.....	18	23	19
Norristown	27,875	4,015	1,691	477	447	105	25	19	16
Oakdale	1,353	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	38	5	2
Old Forge	11,324	5,168	2,741	897	.....	.....	12	23	24
Parsons	4,338	1,216	656	325	.....	.....	1	.....	.....
Philadelphia (includes activities at Germantown)	1,549,008	382,578	167,072	69,415	14,906	4,490	1,664	1,396	1,686
Pittsburgh	533,905	140,436	70,148	28,797	12,295	3,626	442	508	451
Aspinwall	2,592	225	101	82	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Bellevue	6,223	656	261	136	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Crafton	4,583	451	184	118	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Homestead	18,713	7,068	3,942	835	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Portage	2,954	805	393	146	.....	.....	172	.....	.....
Presston (includes activities at Pittock and Stow Township)	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
McKees Rocks	14,702	6,068	3,617	632	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Ramey	1,045	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Reading	96,071	8,812	4,528	1,430	385	81	29	36	27
St. Clair	6,455	1,827	1,103	243	.....	.....	3	.....	.....
St. Marys	6,346	780	431	208	120	19	31	.....	1
Scranton	129,867	35,112	17,461	7,930	1,643	973	117	151	158
Shamokin	19,588	2,788	1,517	867	.....	.....	16	17	12
Sharon	15,270	3,819	2,249	519	.....	.....	8	.....	3
Sharpsville	3,634	892	543	72	.....	.....	8	.....	.....
South Bethlehem	19,973	8,362	4,423	655	.....	.....	10	12	10
Tamaqua	9,462	753	392	203	.....	.....	.....	1	.....
Tarentum (includes activities at Creighton, East Deer Township, Glassmere, and Hite)	7,414	1,677	891	337	.....	.....	.....	2	2
Brackenridge Borough	3,134	455	249	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Taylor	9,060	3,369	1,796	652	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Throop	5,133	2,361	1,213	545	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Titusville	8,533	1,554	805	452	77	19	1	4	2
Trafford City	1,959	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	39	4	1
Uniontown	13,344	1,447	717	243	1,157	379	28	21	29
Warren	11,080	2,035	951	583	77	37	7	4	2
West Hazleton	4,715	1,556	802	282	.....	.....	2	3	4
Wheatland	955	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	4	.....	1
Wilkes-Barre	67,105	16,078	7,899	3,754	2,449	926	82	57	76
Williamsport (includes activities at Newberry)	31,860	2,332	1,153	723	53	24	1	4	3
Woodlawn	1,395	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Rhode Island:
Bristol	8,565	2,951	1,203	419	.....	.....	.....	1	1
Burrillville (includes activities at Harrisville, Mapleville, and Masonville)	7,878	2,454	1,090	528	.....	.....	.....	1	1
Central Falls	22,754	10,664	4,391	1,870	.....	.....	58	69	91
Coventry	5,848	1,346	513	217	247	20	.....	2	2
Cranston	21,107	5,674	2,646	1,310	.....	.....	2	8	7
Cumberland (includes activities at Ashton, Lonsdale, Manville, and Valley Falls)	10,107	3,678	1,569	787	.....	.....	.....	1	.....
Lincoln	9,825	4,181	1,687	780	.....	.....	.....	2	2
Newport (includes activities at Jamestown and Middletown)	27,149	6,256	2,925	1,672	428	111	42	31	27
Portsmouth	2,681	770	384	74	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Pascoag	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Providence	224,326	76,303	32,863	12,988	5,955	1,537	237	293	349
East Providence	15,808	3,380	1,595	681	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Johnston	5,935	2,313	981	379	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Rhode Island—Continued.
Warren	6,585	2,303	1,011	383				2
Westerly (includes activities at Ashaway, Bradford, and Stonington)	8,696	2,347	985	410	186	85	5	7	7
Woonsocket	38,125	16,539	6,540	2,300			17	18	24
South Carolina:
Columbia	26,319	446	227	103	12	2		2	1
South Dakota:
Aberdeen	10,753	1,865	897	509	107	22	104	7	4
Huron	5,791	822	498	216	41	10	47	2	8
Irene	263
Lead (includes activities at Central, Terraville, Terry, and Trojan)	8,392	2,336	1,447	547	121	106	77	29	33
Sioux Falls	14,094	2,215	1,119	658	144	13	14	5	2
Vermilion	2,187				23	15
Yankton	3,787	791	355	248	43	15	10	1	2
Tennessee:
Memphis	131,105	6,467	3,403	1,664	186	54	44	31	33
Nashville	110,364	2,993	1,436	951	132	35	3	6	3
Texas:
Dallas	92,104	5,219	2,811	1,501	254	91	7	19	10
Galveston	36,981	6,164	3,503	1,962	392	123	35	9	12
Houston	78,800	6,318	3,466	1,754	435	165	21	37	29
San Antonio	96,614	17,407	7,354	3,114	381	206	21	31	27
Victoria	3,673	329	156	98	30	10
Utah:
Logan	7,522	1,518	656	399	41	35		1
Park City	2,439	725	394	307	17	6
Salt Lake City (includes activities at Midvale)	92,777	19,035	8,675	4,335	864	257	44	67	60
Murray	4,057	1,303	703	236
Vermont:
Bellows Falls	4,883	996	503	219	5
Bennington	8,698	1,103	470	365	14
Bethel	1,943				8			1	1
Rutland	13,546	1,767	807	498	942	330		2	1
Virginia:
Harrisonburg	4,879	60	39	27	12	2
Lynchburg	29,494	450	250	130	16	16	5	7	3
Norfolk	67,452	3,564	1,820	931	714	210	77	20	20
Richmond	127,628	4,085	2,040	943	253	121	12	13	11
Roanoke (includes activities at Vinton and Virginia Heights)	34,874	770	414	212	37	14	7	8	6
Salem	3,849	19	12	6
Washington:
Bellingham	24,298	5,152	2,818	1,439	167	60	52	36	41
Black Diamond (includes activities at Franklin)	2,051						5	15	13
Blaine	2,289						6		3
Burnett	396
Cle Elum	2,749	1,145	705	207	163	56	3	3	1
Clipper
Everett (includes activities at East Everett, Lowell, and Pinehurst)	24,814	5,472	3,294	1,673	237	113	57	39	31
Lynden (includes activities at Everson, Glendale, and Ten Mile)	1,148							1	1
Olympia	6,996	829	467	239	49	15
Renton (includes activities at Earlington)	2,740	1,003	588	263
Roslyn (includes activities at Beckman, Mine 5, and Ronald)	3,126	1,556	934	301			57	36	28
Seattle	237,194	60,835	36,097	16,438	2,543	873	399	406	314
Spokane	104,402	21,220	12,389	5,495	1,296	226	120	79	78
Tacoma	83,743	21,463	12,191	5,808	707	242	194	117	120
Walla Walla (includes activities at College Place)	19,364	2,361	1,239	682	90	25	18	16	19
Wilkeson	899
West Virginia:
Charleston	22,996	1,014	543	242	80	20	7	1	2
Clarksburg (includes activities at Adamston, Glen Falls, Henzibah, Meadowbrook, North View, Reynoldsville, in Tincher, and Wilsonburg)	9,201	481	256	112	130	52	4	17	12
Fairmont	9,711	630	370	127	93	45	1	9	4
Huntington	31,161	514	304	175	22	6	17	3	3
Jenkinjones					93	32	2
Keyser	3,705	130	56	20	18	6
Logan	1,640				35	6	8	5	8
Morgantown (includes activities at Sabraton and Westover)	9,150	1,113	567	196	69	16	7	7	5
Parkersburg (includes activities at Belpre and South Side)	17,842	560	278	180	30	6	2	3	2
Piedmont (includes activities at Beryl)	2,054						5	1	1
Thomas (includes activities at Ben Bush, Copeton, and Pearce)	2,354				29	16	50	9	6
Wellsburg (includes activities at Beech Bottom and Follansbee)	4,189	262	122	55	40	21	5	4	5
Wheeling (includes activities at Bridgeport, Elm Grove, and Warwood)	41,641	5,418	2,679	1,413	247	55	11	19	15
Benwood	4,976	1,846	1,124	159
McMechen	2,921	213	105	35
Williamson	3,561	227	147	16	16	12	7		1
Wisconsin:
Appleton (includes activities at Kaukauna, Kimberly, and Little Chute	16,773	3,257	1,573	1,287	114	93	3	3	5
Ashland	11,594	3,475	1,864	1,299	173	74		11	5
Barron	1,499				61	51	1		1
Beloit (includes activities at Rockton, Ill., and South Beloit, Ill)	15,125	2,395	1,307	654	210	118	37	8	16
Chippewa Falls (includes activities at Cornell and Irving)	8,893	2,155	1,118	836	78	36	7	2	2
Cold Spring
Cudahy (includes activities at Fernwood, St. Francis, and Stormy Hill)	3,691	1,684	901	203			5	1	4
Eau Claire	18,310	4,245	2,173	1,411	109	54	14	13	12
Fond du Lac	18,797	3,062	1,585	1,035	204	149	10	8	9
Grand Rapids (includes activities at Bison Village, Port Edwards Village, Rudolph, Saratoga, Seneca, and Siegel)	6,521	1,152	589	368	67	59	9	11	9
Green Bay (includes activities at Duck Creek)	25,236	4,056	2,078	1,524	130	117	12	10	10
De Pere	4,477	942	472	263
Janesville	13,894	1,997	979	646			15	4	7
Kenosha (includes activities at Pleasant Ferry and Somers)	21,371	7,642	4,141	1,401	534	183	100	64	75
La Crosse (includes activities at La Crescent, Minn., Onalaska, and West Salem)	30,417	6,043	2,965	1,759	120	111	15	23	26
Madison (includes activities at Burke, MacFarland, and Sun Prairie)	25,531	4,174	2,105	1,174	238	160	22	15	12
Manitowoc	13,027	2,534	1,258	789	136	56	9	9	10
Marinette	14,610	4,027	2,059	1,544	71	68	7	22	15
Menasha	6,081	1,420	661	257				1

Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910, naturalization papers filed in fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, and names furnished, by States and cities or towns—Continued.

State and city or town.	Population, 1910.		Foreign-born white males of voting age, 1910.		Naturalization papers filed in county July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917.		Names furnished.
	Total.	Foreign-born white.	Total.	Naturalized.	Declarations.	Petitions.	Declarants.	Petitioners.	Candidates' wives.
Wisconsin—Continued.
Menomonie	5,036	1,258	640	421	51	47	2	5	4
Milford
Milwaukee (includes activities at East Milwaukee, town of Greenfield, and town of Lake)	373,857	111,456	56,101	26,155	3,824	1,223	831	540	542
Wauwatosa	3,346	681	325	211
Neenah	5,734	1,313	637	438			4	9	11
Oakland					8	12
Oshkosh	33,062	7,406	3,598	2,106	212	157	44	28	41
Port Washington	3,792	889	534	251	34	27
Racine (includes activities of Lake Side)	38,002	12,509	6,590	2,834	721	229	115	87	89
Rhinelander	5,637	1,366	753	336	40	19		1	1
Rice Lake (includes activities at Cameron, Canton, and Haugen)	3,968	708	381	258			1	1	2
Rome
Sheboygan (includes activities at Howards Grove, Kohler, and Mosel)	26,398	8,667	4,359	2,061	273	80	26	23	26
Shell Lake	902				15	11
Stevens Point	8,692	1,712	856	516	41	41	2	8	10
Superior	40,384	13,772	8,201	3,735	384	142	29	66	40
Two Rivers	4,850	836	461	117			4		2
Washburn	3,830	1,158	631	438	96	55		1
Watertown	8,829	1,949	914	608	135	250
Wausau (includes activities at Rothschild and Schofield)	16,560	3,918	1,920	1,310	157	117	7	2	5
West Allis (includes activities at West Milwaukee)	6,645	2,420	1,491	386			12	20	11
Wyoming:
Crosby					32	3
Hanna (includes activities at Elmo and Evansville)
Hudson					26	21
Kemmerer (includes activities at Conroy, Diamondville, Elkol, Frontier, Glencoe, Oakley, Quealey, and Sublet)					88	31	30	1	1
Laramie		1,153	713	378	21	7	125	1	1
New Castle					23	8
Rawlins		794	547	256	19	12
Sheridan		809	540	272	123	29
Sunrise					13	8	23
Superior (includes activities at South Superior)					139	57	6
Total		8,528,196	4,013,125	1,774,947	395,682	112,163	44,433	35,200	34,457

RECAPITULATION.

United States proper	91,972,266	13,345,545	6,646,817	3,034,117	437,368	131,982
Cities listed	32,984,575	8,528,196	4,013,125	1,774,947	395,682	112,163	44,433	35,200	34,457
Balance	58,987,691	4,817,349	2,633,692	1,259,190	41,686	19,819

NOTE.—The total population, 32,984,575, includes population of places shown in parenthetic notes wherever such figures are available.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, we have in the Bureau of Naturalization an established agency, presided over by Mr. Richard K. Campbell as commissioner and Mr. Raymond F. Crist as deputy, two splendid men, who are doing most excellent work in this line, whose hearts are in it, and who have developed it to a wonderful degree in the past four years. I was handed this morning a pamphlet prepared by Mr. Crist entitled "An Outline Course of Citizenship to be Used in the Public Schools for the Instruction of the Foreign and Native Born Candidate for Adult-Citizenship Responsibilities." I am going to ask to have it printed in the RECORD, so that people may see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oregon is agreed to.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AN OUTLINE COURSE IN CITIZENSHIP TO BE USED IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR THE INSTRUCTION OF THE FOREIGN AND NATIVE BORN CANDIDATE FOR ADULT-CITIZENSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES.

[Prepared by Raymond F. Crist, Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization.]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, BUREAU OF NATURALIZATION,
Washington, January 12, 1916.

To superintendents of schools and others concerned:

The Bureau of Naturalization transmits herewith an outline of a course in citizenship, which is designed for use in the education of aliens to prepare them for citizenship.

While this course in citizenship is prepared for the use of aliens who have indicated their purpose to seek American citizenship and since the functions of the bureau with respect to aliens begin at the time they indicate such purpose, it is nevertheless equally useful in preparing all aliens in such an intelligent comprehension of the principles of our Government as will give on the one hand some assurance of their good behavior while in the state of resident aliens and on the other hand will enable them at any time thereafter to acquire citizenship with a due understanding of the significance of such step. Furthermore, it is no less useful in the training of native-born citizens, who, upon reaching their majority, and without exertion on their part, will be clothed with all the rights of American citizenship. Its use, however, otherwise than in the education of the aliens who have signified a purpose to apply for naturalization, is a matter that is outside of the authority of the Bureau of Naturalization.

The Bureau of Naturalization is the only Federal bureau which, by express provision of law, is given administrative authority over "all matters concerning the naturalization of aliens." The matter most intimately concerning the naturalization of aliens is such an understanding of the principles of the Constitution as to make credible the declaration that he is "attached" to those principles; for unless a court is satisfied in the case of any applicant by affirmative evidence that he is so attached, that court has no authority to naturalize such alien. It is to insure the possession of this qualification by the only known means, to wit, that of appropriate training, that the Bureau of Naturalization, realizing its responsibility, has prepared this outline of a course for instruction. Since it is given, in the language above quoted, an express authority upon this point, and therefore an express duty which excludes any other agency of the Government from such specific undertaking where such other agency has a general authority over the subject of education, the bureau has adopted this procedure.

In every other vocation or calling of life great effort has been put forth to insure a complete mastery of its details. This is true of every profession, trade, occupation, or calling save that highest of all professions, the profession of self-government. You, and the schools under your supervision, are in cooperation with the National Government, through the Bureau of Naturalization, in a systematic effort for the education in civic duties of the coming citizen. The cooperation is only partially complete. You are receiving the names and addresses of the candidates for naturalization, but there has been no course prescribed for their instruction.

The candidates have come to school with the statement that they have come because the United States Government wrote them letters and asked them to come. They will come all the more readily and give more thoughtful attention to the studies when they understand that the United States Government, through the same bureau which invited them to go to school, has sent to them a course of instruction. They will be further stimulated in their application to their studies and in their efforts toward proficiency when you tell them, through the teachers, that the United States Government, through the Bureau of Naturalization, will present a certificate of graduation to each student, man or woman, who attains proficiency in this course—both in English and in civics, including domestic arts and science—upon a satisfactory report of the appropriate United States naturalization examiner, who is the field representative of the Bureau of Naturalization. This examination will be made at the time the foreign-born resident files his petition for naturalization at the completion of this course of studies.

You are strongly urged to call upon the teachers to make careful notes of their experiences in the application of this course during the present scholastic year. It is desired that these notes be formulated in a report by you upon this course, and that this report be forwarded to the Bureau of Naturalization at the end of the present scholastic year. Assurances have been received from the superintendents of the schools of the principal cities of the United States that reports will be made by them. These reports will be assembled and presented in consolidated form in this bureau. It is purposed to call together the teachers and superintendents in all of the cities and towns in cooperation with this bureau in convention in the city of Washington during the week of July 10 next to formulate a course in citizenship representative of their best thought. This course will be based upon the experience of this year's observations.

The week of July 10 is selected because the National Education Association convention is to be held in New York during the preceding week of July 3 to 8. The railroad fare to New York and return by way of Washington City will be no greater, except in the eastern parts of the country, than the round-trip fare, with returning stopover privileges in this city. In addition to formulating a perfected course in citizenship instruction, it is also desired to exhibit the work of the students who have pursued this course of citizenship instruction, and you are requested to preserve samples of their penmanship, original composition, and other work and submit them with a brief sketch of the life of the candidates performing the work.

It is also desired to exhibit photographs of the classes and of the entire school body in general assembly in any building. If arrangements can be made to assemble the entire student body in an out-of-doors gathering for photographing, this should be done. The bureau is preparing to furnish motion-picture exhibits of naturalization proceedings and of various phases of immigrant life from the landing of the immigrants at the ports of entry through their various stages of work in the shops and factories and in their homes to show conditions of improvement that have been accomplished through community development in various parts of the country.

It is intended to make suitable awards to the students upon the samples of their work submitted, with prizes to the teachers who evidence the highest interest in this course in citizenship in its application as shown by the proficiency of the students and by their recommendations for strengthening and bettering the course as submitted. You are therefore urged to support the Federal Government in this plea from the Bureau of Naturalization by your hearty, complete, and full cooperation in all of the matters presented in this letter and the accompanying course in citizenship instruction.

Very truly, yours,

RICHD. K. CAMPBELL,
Commissioner of Naturalization.

AN OUTLINE COURSE IN CITIZENSHIP TO BE USED IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR THE INSTRUCTION OF THE FOREIGN AND NATIVE BORN CANDIDATES FOR ADULT-CITIZENSHIP RESPONSIBILITIES, PREPARED BY RAYMOND F. CRIST, DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF NATURALIZATION.

This course is offered with the understanding that in many respects it is imperfect. It is in part a compilation of practices which have been in use for some years in various public schools. This course presents the mature conclusions of the National Government, as represented by the Bureau of Naturalization, after a study of over a decade of the existing relations of the Government with the resident foreign body. A new relationship must be established. It should be based upon intelligent mutual understanding and knowledge of the respective hopes and aims of the resident alien and of the Government. Restriction and repression, entirely out of all proportion to their importance, have been in evidence. The purpose of this outline is to lead to the establishment in the curriculum in each of the public schools throughout the entire country of a course in citizenship training applicable to the candidate for adult-citizenship honors, privileges, and responsibilities, from whatever origin he may come. It is a recognition of citizenship and an emphasis of the mutual helpfulness, assistance, and aid inherent in this National Government rather than of restrictive and repressive forces of government.

This course is submitted in response to the demands upon the Bureau of Naturalization to prepare a standard course in citizenship. These calls have been presented to the Bureau of Naturalization by public-school authorities, chambers of commerce, and by patriotic, labor, fraternal, industrial, commercial, and other organizations from many parts of the country. It is issued by the Bureau of Naturalization in conformity with the authority conferred upon it by the United States Congress by the act of June 29, 1906, as amended, which provides that "the Bureau of Naturalization shall have charge of all matters concerning the naturalization of aliens." Of paramount concern in the naturalization of aliens is their better equipment to supply their daily needs and for the assumption, with intelligence, of the sovereign rights, privileges, and prerogatives which attach to the high estate of American citizenship. In no vocation open to manhood or womanhood is the calling as high as that of self-government. In every other calling the highest development of specialized training has been attained that intelligent effort can accomplish. The didactic and laboratory elements of instruction are mandatory for any vocation. In the graded schools, business, manual, domestic arts and science training supplement the three rudiments of education. This is the laboratory of the secondary schools. In the higher schools the laboratory is highly developed in applying the precepts of the rostrum in chemistry, physics, bookkeeping, stenography, banking, commercial life, carpentering, mechanical and electrical engineering, and other vocations. In the universities the laboratories again make possible the professions of engineering, theology, medicine, law, pharmacy, farming, stock raising, truck gardening, etc., but nowhere has there been a laboratory for practical training in the highest profession conceived by the mind of man—the profession of self-government. This outline presents for the first time to the public schools of the United States a course designed to establish a citizenship laboratory in each public-school building. As this deals with citizenship, it properly comes from the National Government through the only Federal bureau specifically authorized by the law to deal with the question of citizenship within the Nation.

Much of the success which will attend the adoption of this course will be dependent upon the spirit with which it is received and applied. The interest and enthusiasm of the teacher will in a large degree reflect the attitude of those in higher authority in school administration. It is urged, therefore, upon all to whom this course may come, including the boards of education, superintendents of schools, supervising and other principals, as well as teachers of the public schools, that it be received in the spirit in which it is submitted—to wit, an earnest purpose for united cooperation between the public schools and the National Government for the solidarity of American citizenship—because of such features of value as it possesses notwithstanding the admitted presence of defects. All are urged, therefore, to become fully conversant with this outline, so that in its application to the student body it may be broadened in its scope and applied so as to arouse among them an enthusiastic response. By the loyal and faithful support of the public schools to the United States in this the first cooperative movement ever perfected for them with the National Government the value of this course will be increased, its weaknesses strengthened, and the undesirable portions eliminated. All branches of pedagogics owe their present perfectness to that same devoted intelligence to which this course is intrusted.

It is undesirable that instruction in any part of this course be given save through the medium of the English language. It should not be interpreted through a foreign tongue. It is intended to make possible a mastery of English speaking, reading, and writing, and by gradual steps to lead into a realization of the full sense of the sacredness of the greatest rights of sovereignty which attach to the estate of American citizenship.

While this course is intended primarily for the candidate for citizenship by naturalization, its application to the curriculum of high schools and public schools is strongly urged, so that on the attainment of their majority all may have a full grasp of the functions of citizenship such as no preceding generation of the Nation has ever possessed. Let this course be applied in such a manner as to evidence to all that a cooperation in a national sense may be possible, and from such cooperative effort the maximum of good can result. The subject is citizenship. It is therefore as large as the country. No nation is larger than its sense of citizenship, be that sense great or small.

There is no intention to attempt a system or to require any particular form of instruction. Results are desired. The best results can be obtained by following the prevailing local system. The sole purpose of this course is to submit text and subject matter for thorough application. Thorough application will lead to the strengthening and the development of desirable and the elimination of undesirable features of the text. Through the laboratory of the schools perfection of the text will be accomplished.

Do not be deterred from undertaking full cooperation through fear that the schools will be overcrowded by the large number of eligible aliens. It will take a long-continued struggle to induce even a fair proportion of the foreign resident body to attend. Information regarding any additional subjects or parts of subjects which have been taught in your schools will be gladly received and brought to the attention of all to whom this course has been sent.

It is urged that the public schools be guided fully by this course for the present year and that full and complete notes be made upon it as it is developed; that these notes be submitted to the appropriate school authorities for forwarding in approved form to the Bureau of Naturalization at the termination of this scholastic year. These reports coming from throughout the United States will be assembled in working form and a convention called by this bureau to be held in Washington City immediately following the National Education Association convention in New York City. Its purpose will be to enable the officers and teachers of the public schools to formulate a course representing their best thought in this most vital field of instruction. It is believed such a course can be distributed both to the teachers and students without cost, or at most at the bare cost of publication under plans which the Bureau of Naturalization is now perfecting.

It is desired to direct attention to the cards and the method which has been proposed to superintendents of schools in some of the large cities and adopted by them to secure the maximum attendance with the least expense and clerical labor. The cards are sent to the superintendent of the schools, who has them assorted according to the various school districts, being guided by the addresses on the cards. The cards relating to any district are then sent to the supervising principal of that district and by him sorted according to the addresses and sent to the various schools under his supervision. The principal of the school hands them to the teacher of one of the classes, who retains the cards that bear the names of the students in that class. The other cards are then sent from class to class until all of the cards bearing the names of students have been removed. The names on the cards that are left are then called off to the students, and where they are known, such cards are taken out and the students urged to prevail upon the candidates to attend the classroom on the next class night. When this has been done in all of the classes the remaining names are assigned to the students by nationalities and location of residence and the students instructed to visit the candidates whose names they are given and induce them to come to the school at the earliest possible moment. This is done with all the candidates for citizenship, whether they need the course of instruction or not, so as to complete the records in the cases where the course is not needed by the candidates.

By this means the work of securing the attendance of the candidates for citizenship is distributed so that no one feels the work to be a burden. This builds up a personal contact between the United States Government and the alien candidate for citizenship through the Bureau of Naturalization, the public-school authorities, the public-school teachers, the student body, and the individual student. Through this personal contact the attendance of all the candidates for citizenship who need instruction will be assured. This will embrace, however, but a small portion of the resident alien body in any community. Many of the foreigners are anxious to increase their understanding of our language, but for many reasons and because of many influences upon them are unable to do so.

The bureau therefore proposes as a measure for the betterment of each community that the school authorities secure copies of cards 1 and 3, have the names and addresses of the parents of the foreign-born children in attendance upon the day and night classes transcribed thereon by their teachers, and have them distributed to the classes for adult foreigners, in order that the foreign student body may be prevailed upon to secure the attendance of their friends and members of their nationalities. If this be continued with vigor, there will be launched in this manner an active campaign, with the personal touch in direct evidence, for the betterment of the entire resident foreign body of the country. The simplicity of this plan, its freedom from any great expense and the good that will flow from it must commend itself to every thinking person.

GENERAL CLASSIFICATION.

The true basis for classification of adult foreign-born students is their educational development. Students should not be classified by nationality. A great deal has been expressed in favor of the classification of students by nationality and their instruction by one of their nativity by reason of the bond of sympathy of the common tongue. The inherent, fundamental weakness of this is shown by stating that such segregation means perpetuating the national groupings instead of merging them into one common American nationality. No greater bond is recognized than that of a common tongue. None has a stronger desire for the development of that bond than the non-English-speaking foreigner. No greater tie of sympathy can be found than that which grows up between the intelligent, patriotic, and devoted American school-teacher and his foreign-born non-English-speaking students through the acquisition of our tongue. We do not need to import individuals to teach American institutions and instill American patriotism in the mind of the candidate for citizenship. Segregation imposes an unnecessary burden. The student has far more interest in learning what the teacher has to impart than what nationalities his fellow students represent.

The students should first be assembled regardless of sex or nationality, although the women may be separately taught where conditions admit. The classification should be (1) those who can not speak English, and (2) those who can speak English. A closer subdivision can later be resorted to if desirable. Those who can not speak English will be found unable to read or write in our language. Those who can speak English may or may not be able to read or write. Soon the necessity will arise for a regradation—elementary, intermediate, and advanced. Upon this basis the following outline is submitted.

THE ELEMENTARY GRADE.

Knowledge, elementary.

Purpose, equip as quickly as possible with a practical working vocabulary.

Individual notebooks should be obtained immediately and copious use early required.

BRANCHES FOR STUDY.

1. Conversation.
2. Reading.
3. Language forms and idioms.
4. Phonics.
5. Spelling.
6. Writing.
7. Memory gems.
8. Simple number work.

CONVERSATION.

This should be conducted by the object and action method. Begin with the names of objects nearest at hand that may be seen and handled. The human form is the most ready of use. Write the names of the parts on the blackboard, as head, eye. Drill in pronouncing and identifying names with parts. Point and have the students point at parts. "This is my ———. That is your ———, his ———, her ———," etc.

When a vocabulary of nouns and verbs has thus been systematically built up, enabling the pupils to understand simple statements about objects in the schoolroom and in the building, gradually extend the vocabulary to the larger environment outside, being careful to confine such vocabulary to the field of simple daily experiences. New words, as rapidly as given, should be written on the blackboard and in notebooks and from the beginning should be put into sentences.

READING.

The conversation and blackboard work, as above suggested, naturally will carry over to reading from the printed page, charts, and textbooks. The aim, of course, is to give command as quickly as possible of the printed page. Have the pupils each bring a copy of the same edition of some daily newspaper to the classroom to read and to discuss the topics read. Let discussions be undertaken at the earliest moment. The subject matter of the printed page should also be used in conversation in order to be sure that the students are comprehending the thought and not merely pronouncing the words. Biographies of foreign-born Americans of former days should be read and discussed to inspire the student to his maximum interest and effort.

LANGUAGE FORMS AND IDIOMS.

These should be carefully noted both in the conversations and in the reading and should be written upon the blackboard and in the notebooks. The students should be drilled on model forms of simple language, both in speaking and in writing, using blackboard and notebooks. Here the teacher should commence the mind training in the discriminative selection of healthful reading matter, beginning with the daily press or other simple subject matter. Discussion of the comparative values of the best newspaper and other articles with the worthless should follow under the guiding intelligence of the teacher. The teacher should assign topics to the students for discussion, laying the foundation for future debates upon public questions in the succeeding periods of study. The newspaper should be used constantly in language lessons. It is universal in subject matter and most inexpensive

PHONICS.

The analysis of words by sound can begin profitably much earlier in the teaching of the adult classes than with children. It is imperative that it be undertaken from the beginning and that upon such analytical work there be daily drill upon the sound values of both vowels and consonants. In teaching sound values there should be kept upon the blackboard a considerable list of words containing the particular letter whose sound is being taught. Excellent books on enunciation and articulation are available for the teacher. It is essential that the teacher articulate slowly and distinctly, especially all final consonants, whether at the end of syllables or of words. In learning to pronounce the English language it is vital that the correct relation of the letters to the words be learned at the beginning. To train the ear, the individual should repeat the word after the teacher until the ear catches the true sound and it is reproduced by the student. Every foreigner wants to learn to speak English with the American accent.

SPELLING.

The words chosen should be those used in conversation and in reading. Dictation should be freely resorted to. The words taught should be carefully listed by each teacher and student. Emphasis should be placed upon words in common use. A list of such words as a measuring scale of ability in spelling, issued in 1914 by the Russell Sage Foundation, has been recommended. Spelling bees are used with excellent results.

WRITING.

This can be taught from the blackboard, but should be supplemented by the use of leaflets showing penmanship forms to be furnished each student and used in home work. Startlingly rapid progress is made through the home practice work. In the elementary schools the principle of home work which is early applied in the training of the adolescent mind is no less applicable to the adult mind. Practical tests in writing dictation in language work and original composition should be practiced later.

MEMORY GEMS.

These are of much value for pronunciation and for the acquisition of a vocabulary. They should be chosen with special reference to the building up of high ideals of character and of conduct in the minds of the students. Patriotic poems and songs should be learned, and the singing of "America," "Hail Columbia," etc., should occur at each session.

SIMPLE NUMBER WORK.

This should be given not for the teaching of arithmetic in itself merely, but for the teaching of the language of numbers to the advantage of the students in their daily experiences.

THE INTERMEDIATE GRADE.

The same general methods should be followed in this grade as in the elementary grade, selecting for instruction subjects of a more advanced nature.

CONVERSATION.

The topics of conversation naturally will be chosen from the reading matter and from the daily experience of the students. Conversation lessons are extremely important and should receive careful daily preparation on the part of the teacher. Periods of open conversation among the students on topics of common concern will be found to increase the interest of the class, and produce the desired spirit of homogeneity and congeniality, and lay the foundation for their American unification. Continue the use of the daily press, broaden the scope in American biographical studies, and at the same time require the students to read from the various readers.

READING.

In this grade the pupils should read from the somewhat advanced readers that are prepared for teaching English. Geography and history, especially United States history, are of absorbing interest to the students. Patriotic poems should be read, studied, and the best of them memorized.

LANGUAGE FORMS AND IDIOMS.

In this grade emphasis should be laid as early as admissible upon the correct use of words and upon the inflections of nouns and pronouns, etc. Letter writing, consisting of simple business and social letters, will be found desirable along with reproduction exercises.

PHONICS, SPELLING, AND WRITING.

These subjects in advanced form should be presented as in the elementary grade.

MEMORY GEMS.

These should be taught as in the previous grade, but with a broadened scope.

UNITED STATES HISTORY.

The teaching of this should be based upon reading elementary histories of the United States. The teacher should cause discussions of various chapters of American history. This will develop the instinct for the further use of the schoolroom for discussions of public questions and will be aided by the assignments of students and topics. The students should be stimulated to select their own topics from each subject and full discussions of these selections obtained.

CIVICS.

This chapter should be very generally presented by the teacher solely as preliminary to the course in citizenship for the advanced student, so as to enlarge the field of vision preparatory to full participation by the members of the student body in the activities of the citizenship course embraced in the year preceding admission to citizenship. The entire student body should be urged to obtain from the libraries such books as present the principles of the three branches of our Government.

The following outline is submitted as an indication of the subject matter for the teacher in presenting the subject of civics:

1. General principles of government: Necessity of laws for establishment and development of government, protection of society and individual; its purpose to aid in matters of health, life, property, business, education, surroundings, and environment. Sources of laws: Constitution, franchise, legislation, administration, adjudication, citizenship, political parties. General governmental divisions: City, county, State, Nation.

2. The city government: Executive—The office of mayor or commissioner and its functions; various departments and their functions. Legislative—Aldermanic or councilmanic. Judicial—Courts of the city.

Emphasize conditions to naturalization, suffrage qualifications, and the obligation resting upon each individual to perform his part as a good citizen.

THE ADVANCED GRADE.

CONVERSATION.

The students in this grade should be able to carry on, with a fair degree of facility, conversation concerning any topic with which they are familiar. Use topics of current events having a bearing upon good citizenship as subjects for discussion and debate. Make a persistent and free use of that inexpensive medium, the daily newspaper, for topics for frequent discussions, making them short and pointed, to develop powers of ready expression of the mind.

READING.

Students of this grade should be able to read with a fair degree of proficiency. Train more or less in silent reading and test the comprehension of the reader by requiring him to tell the class what he has read. Supplementary readers in civics, American biography, geography, history, literature, and science are useful for this class. Guide the students to the selection of good books from the public libraries; encourage them to bring such books to class, to report to the class the general plot, and especially interesting and important parts of the books in which they are interested. Do not abandon the daily newspaper.

LANGUAGE.

The elementary principles of grammar may be effectively taught from the language lessons, both oral and written, and by continuing drills in models of ordinary English develop a keener sense of sound discernment to operate in correcting their English and producing the American accent. The essentials to be taught are the different kinds of sentences and the adjective and adverbial idea in the use of words, phrases, and clauses; different parts of speech and their functions; inflections of nouns and pronouns; the principal parts of the more common irregular verbs. Grammar thus taught becomes not an end in itself, but a means to show the students why they use the kind of English they have been taught to speak. Instruction should be oral, with outline placed on blackboard to be copied in notebooks by the students.

PHONETICS, SPELLING, AND WRITING.

These subjects should be presented as in preceding grade. Occasionally there should be a few minutes' drill on the more difficult sounds of the English language by means of word lessons involving these sounds. Be particularly careful not to let incorrect articulation, enunciation, or pronunciation pass unnoticed.

MEMORY GEMS.

As in preceding grades.

UNITED STATES HISTORY.

This should include the study of more advanced textbooks. Care should be taken to emphasize the more important steps of development in our country's history and to leave in the minds of the students a clear picture of its several periods of development, as (1) the early history and settlement of America; (2) the Revolutionary War, its conditions and causes; the Declaration of Independence should be read thoroughly and its principles discussed; (3) the formation of the Constitution of the United States and the development down to 1860, including (a) means of transportation, (b) inventions, (c) increase in manufactures, (d) growth of population; (4) the economic development of the North and South, contrasted in the light of slavery, as a background to conditions and causes leading up to the Civil War; (5) the Civil War, its causes, results, and significances; (6) the development of our country since the Civil War, politically and industrially; emphasize the significance of immigration in this development not only from the standpoint of our industries but from the standpoint of our political institutions; (7) encourage the students to use the public libraries in consultation of historical authors; endeavor in the teaching to raise problems of interest for discussion by the students; this can only be accomplished in full by their consistent participation in free and mutual discussion of each topic as it is presented and studied.

CIVICS.

Review briefly the topics of the previous grade. Let the presentation of each of these subjects be free discussion by all. Make assignments to students who are not participating.

1. Explain the naturalization laws.
2. The qualifications of a voter.
3. Primary and final election laws, and the importance of independent judgment on the part of each citizen in registering at the primary and final elections his choice of candidates for the various offices.
4. The short ballot and its significance; the Australian ballot.
5. The significance of the initiative, referendum, and recall.
6. Extend the relation of local government to the (a) county, (b) State, (c) National Government, explaining the forms and functions of each kind of government.
7. This will lead naturally to the study of the Constitution of the United States, (a) its origin and (b) its provisions.
8. Compare our form of representative government with the forms of government of the leading nations of Europe and explain the full meaning of democracy.
9. From such comparison deduce the responsibility resting upon every citizen of this Nation to see that able and honest men are put into office.

In teaching civics the chief emphasis should be laid not upon the forms of government but upon its functions and its practical workings.

CITIZENSHIP LABORATORY.

CITIZENSHIP IN THE CITY.

Assemble the classes of each school building in one room, men and women together, and tell them that they represent the city, that they will soon become citizens of the United States, and that they are to learn how to assume the responsibilities and rights and perform the duties of citizenship. For this purpose they are to be considered as the entire adult voting population of the city. Briefly outline the form of government in the city, defining the offices of mayor or commissioner, councilman, alderman, or their local equivalents, the various administrative departments of the municipality, and describe the city judiciary. Explain how these offices have been filled by their incumbents and the relation of the individual voters to the incumbents.

DUTIES OF OFFICIALS OF CITY.

The mayor and other officials of the city government should be prevailed upon to define fully the duties of their respective offices. All of this will be most interestedly and profitably received by the students, who should be encouraged to make as extensive notes as possible, and will prove a source of inspiration to those officials who are prevailed upon to address the student body upon the duties of their respective offices. The President, in his address to the newly naturalized citizens in Philadelphia on May 10, 1915, said, "I feel that it has renewed my spirit as an American to be here."

DISCUSSIONS.

Discussions of the subject of each of these addresses should be engaged in by the student body after each talk, and the duties of the offices debated so as to fix them in the minds of the prospective citizens. Outline for discussions will be found later in this course.

FRANCHISE AND BALLOT.

After the duties and responsibilities of the different offices of the city government have been described by the incumbents of these offices or their representatives, and the student body has fully discussed these subjects with evident understanding, the students should be assembled for instruction in the franchise, its rights, powers, purposes, and uses. The ballot, in the exercise of the franchise, both in primary and final elections, should be made known to them and the necessity for purity in its use fully dwelt upon by the teacher, followed by discussions upon the franchise and the ballot and their relation in this country to government and to the individual citizen; the good that will flow from its wise and proper use, and the evil from its unwise and improper use emphasized; the purposes and powers of the ballot and its relationship to the election of municipal, State, and National officials clearly shown.

Each of these subjects should be fully discussed and debated by pupils. In their treatment the teacher should always keep prominently in mind the necessity for developing the sense of individual responsibility and relationship to the whole political organization. Assignments of subjects should be made by the teacher so as to include and stimulate the diffident and backward to a participation in this work.

NOMINATIONS AND ELECTIONS.

When understanding has become general throughout the student body its members should be required to put into practice the lessons which they have learned. The necessity for purity of the ballot should again be fully emphasized. As an entire body they should be told that they will be expected to make use of their knowledge of the franchise and of the use of the ballot and will be guided through the steps of electing the city government, commencing with the mayor or the local equivalent. The local form of nomination may prevail, but as they have been taught both the convention and primary methods they should be allowed and urged to exercise the utmost freedom in their choice of method.

Self-government should be the keynote in this entire course and should be developed to its fullest possibilities consistent with intelligent progress. The teacher should not dominate but steady and guide the students in their endeavors to emerge from their ignorance of our institutions into an intelligent comprehension of them. The only functions which the teacher should exercise in this stage of the course are to insure regularity and purity in the entire proceedings, to stimulate the backward ones to participate in some manner in the consideration of the subject, and to urge full discussions of both the qualifications of the candidate and the duties of the office, so as to bring out prominently the cardinal purpose of each election—the selection of the candidate best suited to the office.

The teacher or principal should preside over this meeting. Tellers should be appointed for the election, both for the primary and final elections if the primary form of nomination should prevail. The purpose of this election is to remove the preconceived notions of government and former national prejudices and to unify and harmonize the different national views into one national spirit to accord with the spirit of our Government. The choice made will represent not a nationality but an expressed desire of a majority of the entire student body. The successful candidate should be only the one having a majority over all. The plurality should not be sufficient. The object of an absolute majority over all is to prevent the domination by one nationality by sheer preponderance of numbers.

City chief executive: Nominations from the entire student body for the position of mayor should be invited. From three to five or more candidates should be placed in nomination, the number to be based by the teacher upon the size of the student body. But one candidate should be allowed for each group or nationality. The candidates for election should be the three receiving the highest number of votes on nomination. All should be encouraged to participate in the submission of names in nomination and to engage in large numbers in urging the qualifications of their respective candidates.

In the entire student body assemblage activity should be stimulated by the principal, supplemented by each teacher individually endeavoring to inspire confident activity in the members of his individual class. This activity should take the shape of speeches in favor of the respective candidates whose names are put in nomination not only by the one nominating and the one seconding the nomination, but generally throughout the entire student body. The individual teachers should devote their attention to the members of their respective classes and an effort should be made to elicit some expression from each member of each class, and in this way from each member of the student body. The greater participation on the part of the students the greater will be the influence of the spirit of the occasion on the entire body and correspondingly or each and every individual. The enthusiasm of the teachers will be reflected in the enthusiasm of the students. In proportion to the sympathetic interest of the teacher will be the response of the individual. The development of the responsibility of the individual to the entire State and entire Nation underlies all of this participation. The principal and teachers of the various classes should only guide in an advisory capacity.

As but one candidate may be chosen and must receive a majority over all, it will at once be evident that at this point will commence the obliteration of the various national lines and prejudices. At this stage of this course in the laboratory of citizenship the school is a crucible in which the polyglot elements of American society have been placed in a scientific flux and are being fused in the refining fire of intelligent patriotic influences into true, comprehending, and hence loyal American citizens. The melting pot is what has been used in the past. There has been nothing but a dumping of the elements of society into the pot, with the resultant nondescript conception of our institutions. It should be abandoned and the crucible, with its scientifically prepared flux, substituted to produce the pure and unalloyed American citizen. Assimilation of the fundamental idea of American government is here effected through the requirement of the various nationalities present to unite upon a representative, regardless of nationality, in the choice of their presiding officer. The common choice will force the obliteration of the national lines. The selection should be upon merit and an effort made to prevent the development of vote trading or other practices. Corruption of the ballot should be eliminated not only from the actions but from the thoughts of the candidates and their supporters.

If the interest, enthusiasm, or circumstances be sufficient to warrant a unanimous rising vote, it may be taken upon explaining the circumstances under which such action occurs and to remove from the minds the possibility of confusion from regarding this as usual in general elections.

Induction into office: Upon election the mayor should be escorted forward by members of the student body and with suitable ceremony inducted into office by the administration of the oath of office by the teacher. The custom usually prevailing should be followed, and the oath to well and faithfully perform the duties of the office should be administered in the presence of the entire school body. The teacher should place the burden of the responsibilities upon the student body and the mayor, who should preside at all subsequent general assemblages of the student body as one of his official duties.

Election of other city officials: As they have all learned of the duties of the officials of the departments of city government, the members of the student body should next select their city legislators and organize the appropriate departments of city government and select their respective heads. This should include at least the health department, police department, and judicial department, with such others as local conditions may justify. In the election of the aldermen or city legislators the unit of representation should be the classroom, one or more representatives from each class being determined by the mobility and efficiency of the entire body.

Duties of city legislative body: The legislators should formulate rules of government for the observance of the student body. These rules should apply to the conduct of the students in and around the school buildings, relate to the disposition of their outer clothing, deportment in the classrooms, promptness and regularity of attendance, participation in debate (to insure sharing in the exercises by each member of the entire school body, even though but slight participation should result on the part of some of the most backward and diffident), and with special attention to rules requiring the students to bring in the large number of alien residents to the night schools. The advantages to be gained from this are too great and vital, too far-reaching in their effect for most substantial good, to pass by without a consistent emphasis being laid upon its accomplishment. The teacher should have papers prepared and debates arranged upon such topics as "Why should each student bring a new student?" and kindred topics. They should formulate rules governing their conduct in the places of their vocation, in their homes, and on the street, and rules relating to sanitary habits and practices.

Discussions: These rules should be discussed as much as possible in the entire assemblage. They may be worked out, however, in committee. The students should be given to understand the various methods and be permitted to follow their own choice of proceeding as long as progress is made.

Papers dealing with housing, with especial reference to tenements, large and small, should be prepared and read by the students. This is referred to because of its intimate relation to the resident foreign body. The laws governing tenement houses, especially with relation to sanitation, should be made known to them and their merits discussed, in order to bring home to the individual his relationship to this phase of law and order for the betterment of his home life.

The police department should be required to see that the rules are observed and the judicial department to impose penalties for failure of observance of the rules. The development of a regard for law and order and individual responsibility for their maintenance should be established.

Other branches of government of intimate concern to the resident foreign body, such as recreation grounds and park commissions, should be brought prominently before the students.

Appointive offices: When appointive offices are to be filled by the mayor care should be taken to see that national lines do not influence the selection, but that, so far as possible, the class standing should have its place.

SUMMARY.

From the foregoing it is seen that the laboratory has been made possible. The efficiency of its working is dependent largely upon the inspiration received by the students from the school authorities. This is the first opportunity presented to the entire system of the public schools for a direct cooperation with the National Government where the efforts of these two agencies are linked together. Each superintendent of schools, each principal of schools, each teacher of the public schools is called upon to lend his highest and most intelligent effort to the perfection of this course by its thorough application. This call is made with the full knowledge that there is sufficient patriotic devotion to the cause of citizenship in each public-school teacher to insure its success and the development of this course to that state of high efficiency which characterizes every other vocation and profession except that of the profession of American citizenship. With the combined effort of all public-school authorities with this branch of the National Government success is assured.

The students should be taken into the public buildings and administrative offices of the city, so that they may become actually acquainted with the purpose of the buildings and the machinery of the municipal government.

No elaboration has been undertaken of county, State, and National Governments, partly because the new citizen will exercise the rights of citizenship oftener in the city in which he lives than in any other relation to government. The analogy of county, State, and National Government can readily be shown, so that he will not lose sight of his vital relation to the State and Nation.

CLASS ALUMNI.

When the students have completed their course and become citizens their experiences in the classrooms should induce them to return and further participate in this work, so that the schoolhouse may be felt by them to be the legitimate place of assemblage for discussion of questions of public policy. This spirit should be inspired by the teachers during the early period of this course and be so developed as to bring about this result. Alumni or other public nonsecret organization should be encouraged to implant in them a love for this, the alma mater of their school of American citizenship.

The public schools have taught virtually every other subject relating to the vocations of life and they have developed these courses to the highest efficiency. These various phases of the city government are outlined generally with the knowledge that the local offices of the city government may differ in principle as well as in particularity. This is submitted, however, for adaptation to local conditions.

Outline of topics for presentation by officials and discussion by student body.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH.

Mayor: Duties and responsibilities, patronage, veto power, general powers. Relationship to board of aldermen, common council, or similar body regarding commission form of government. Relationship to Chief Executive of Nation and State.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH.

The common council, the general lawmaking branch: Composition, total membership, number for each ward, how chosen, term of years, powers and functions. City ordinances: Ordinances relating to welfare, business, property, and finances of community; preservation of order; suppression of vice; regulation of places of amusement, saloons, weights and measures, building operations, charitable organizations; licenses of vehicles, pawnbrokers, etc. Relationship to revenues and expenditures, to various administrative departments of the city, to State legislative power.

JUDICIAL BRANCH.

Administrative head: Magistrate courts, police courts, higher courts, juvenile courts. Describe each court; show necessity for maintenance of public order; benefit to city; to individual. Jurisdiction of courts; source and tenure of office; source of revenues; method of expenditure; relationship of individual to revenues and expenditures.

Jury: Qualifications, duties, individual privileges, rights, and responsibilities of juror in determining facts; relationship to the court in defining and determining questions of law in a given case.

SOME TYPICAL DEPARTMENTS OF THE CITY GOVERNMENT.

Police department, fire department, health department, street and park department, education department, water department, tax department, excise department, law department.

Police department: Administrative head. The individual policeman's duties as a guardian of safety rather than a minion of the law, the oneness of purpose of the police officer and law-abiding, peace-loving individuals. Location of precincts. Individual protection at home, in the shops, on the street, at night; benefits to the individual; necessary for life of city. Penal institutions, their management, purpose, necessity, source of revenue, method of expenditure, relationship of individual to revenues and expenditures. Bring in the police to aid firemen in fire drills for better acquaintance with helpful side of police force.

Fire department: Administrative head. Fire chief, duties and powers. Firemen and duties. Safety first—care of matches, care of inflammable and combustible material; safety in keeping matches in receptacles away from children; teach fire precaution. Have fire drills under personal supervision of member of fire department for double purpose of training the foreigners to escape from a burning building and of allowing them to become closely associated with firemen in order to teach them calmness in time of fire. This latter is very desirable, as over 80 per cent of our foreign-born residents are employed in factories, mills, mines, etc., where at times the loss of life in fires on account of panic has been appalling. Location of fire-alarm boxes; demonstrate how to ring and call by phone.

Health department: Administrative head. Collection of refuse of various kinds; sanitation in the schoolrooms, homes, workshops, and on the streets; ill effects which will follow failure of these activities. Source of revenues, method of expenditure, relationship of individual to revenues and expenditures. Safeguarding health of communities and individuals by requirement of pure food; enforcement of regulations regarding contagious diseases; medicine and medical aid to indigent sick; free hospitals and free clinics. Emphasize personal cleanliness by elaboration, individual observance of health regulations, and practical benefits in avoidance of ordinary sickness and contagious diseases.

Street and park department: Administrative head. Personnel, source, and tenure of office. Functions: Traffic regulations, opening of new streets, repairing pavements (both street and sidewalk), franchises for street railways, public lighting, antispitting regulations, street cleaning, public recreation grounds, city beautifying, trees, etc. Attitude of individual to civic cleanliness, keeping streets clear of skins, paper, and other waste; benefits derived by the individual as well as the municipality. Source of revenues, method of expenditures, relationship of individual to revenues and expenditures.

Education department: Administrative head. Constitution of department. Source and tenure of office; powers and duties; provide school buildings and their equipment; teachers; textbooks and other supplies; course of study and general administration; source of revenues, method of expenditure, relationship of individual to revenues and expenditures; construction and relationship of entire system. Board of education, general superintendent, day superintendent, night superintendent, supervising principals, principals of schools, teachers, students. Present in a practical manner the advantages of public-school instruction to the individual and its relationship to their everyday life, explaining any embarrassment as to insufficient funds, the necessity for extending the night schools to the same time that is devoted annually to the day course, with special relation to citizenship and the system of the Bureau of Naturalization, based upon the monthly filing of declarations of intention and petitions for naturalization and the monthly transmission of the names of these to the school authorities, so as to show the necessity for and advantages of conducting the schools from the 1st of October until the end of June, all leading to the objective of having certificates of graduation and annual commencement functions.

Schools: Free libraries, books for coming Americans, and other literature without cost. Vocation and industrial work, community centers, wayward or incorrigible children. Teach regularity and promptness of attendance and show advantages in business resulting from this habit.

Water department: Administrative head. Water supply, wastefulness, economy in use, individual responsibility, source of revenues, method of expenditures, sewer system. Relation of individual to revenues and expenditures.

Tax department: Administrative head. Revenues, sources, necessity, relationship to individual.

Excise department: Administrative head. Control over issuance and revocation of licenses for intoxicating liquors; cost of licenses.

Law department: Administrative head. Relationship to contracts for public construction and prosecution for the people of offenders. City comptroller; source and tenure of office; functions. City auditor; source and tenure of office; functions. City treasurer; source and tenure of office; functions. Advantages of and necessity for observance of law.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT.

Teach geography, nature of various industries. Teach city and county government, showing lines on which they parallel and analogies of laws Administrative officers, their sources and tenures of office, their functions. Describe governments of communities throughout county and their relationship to the entire county organization, county roads, bridges, buildings, hospitals, development, control, and management, both as to personnel and methods, ways and means of administration of county government.

STATE GOVERNMENT.

Analogy to city and county governments, respective jurisdictions, and rights and powers of each. Location of State capital.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH.

Chief executive; source and tenure of office, authority, functions of office, constitutional and legal functions, and authorities.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH.

Period of meeting. Functions of the legislature. Following course of bill from introduction through the various stages to the final enactment and approval by the chief executive.

Houses of legislature: Upper house (senate): Presiding officer, composition of membership, source and tenure of office, representation of the State, extent of constituency, districts. Lower house (house of representatives, assembly, house of delegates, etc.): Apportionment of members, source and tenure of office, composition of assembly as to numbers, and apportionment to population.

JUDICIAL BRANCH.

Courts of original, appellate, and supreme jurisdiction.

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

Analogy to State and city governments; respective jurisdictions; rights and powers of each. Location of National Capital. Source of power. Outline colonial history, period under Articles of Confederation, period under Constitution, using textbooks approved by local educational authorities.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH.

The President; voters' Electoral College; tenure of office; Cabinet advisers; powers and duties of the President.

Executive departments: Department of State, Department of the Treasury, Department of War, Department of Justice, Post Office Department, Department of the Navy, Department of the Interior, Department of Agriculture, Department of Commerce, and Department of Labor.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH.

The Congress of the United States, two Houses. Periods of meeting. Functions of Congress as a whole. Trace course of bill through both Houses, showing origin of all revenue measures in the House of Representatives, and various stages through to Executive approval of each bill in its enactment into law. Powers of Congress. Place of meeting in Washington, the Capital of the Nation.

Senate. Presiding officer: composition of membership; source and tenure of office; Members representatives of the States; functions.

House of Representatives: Apportionment of Members by population; Members representatives of the people; source and tenure of office, presiding officer, functions.

JUDICIAL BRANCH.

Supreme Court of the United States, nomination by President, confirmation by Senate. United States circuit courts of appeals, United States district courts. Court of Claims, Territorial court, United States commissioners. Jurisdiction of various courts.

POLITICAL PARTIES.

Relationship to individuals, powers of their expression of desires for specific laws and on political questions. Nominations by convention, by direct primaries; platforms, registration, the ballot. Necessity for parties in representative government. Distinguish between local and National Government; show need of intelligent citizens.

The interest of the National Government in the well-being of the candidate for citizenship should be pointed out, dwelt upon, and kept constantly before the student body, as the influence of national government is strong upon all foreigners by reason of its general absoluteness and force as felt by the subject of any nationality in his relation to government in the old countries. The importance of the certificate of graduation which the Bureau of Naturalization will furnish, and its issuance by the Federal Government jointly with the State government should be so presented that regard for it will be enlarged and the highest enthusiasm and interest stimulated in the candidate by the receipt of this certificate of graduation. Students should be given to understand that it will represent efficiency on their part and will be given only to those who are proficient. Its presentation should be understood as carrying a high reward and high recognition by the National Government of their individual efforts. They should be led to realize that the Federal Government will be ready to stand by all who pursue the entire course and attain high proficiency in speaking, reading, and writing our language and acquire an intelligent understanding of our institutions; that it will bring them to the attention of their employers to secure recognition of their higher efficiency, and will also endeavor to aid them in their ambitions and advancement not only in this but in bettering their condition in other fields of activity. The importance and value to the individual in relation to his personal advancement of a thorough mastery of English and the citizenship branch of this course should be constantly held before them to stimulate them to the highest degree in both attendance upon the classes and attention to the studies. *

Fundamentals for the American home.

Women should be encouraged to participate in all of the foregoing as far as practicable in common with men. This applies to all places, regardless of whether the women have the right of suffrage, but particularly where women are voters. It is not the purpose to develop the desire of suffrage, but to bring the women out of the European and foreign atmosphere into the very heart and soul of things American. Emphasis is laid particularly upon this so as to insure an extension of the influence of the school to the other foreign-born women with whom the women in the classes come into daily contact and to have them inspired to enter the sphere of this Americanizing influence.

DOMESTIC ARTS AND SCIENCE.

The following course in domestic arts and science is a presentation of the subjects which are now actually being taught in the most important cities of the United States and some of the smaller but more advanced cities and towns. No instance, however, is known to this bureau where a city or town is teaching all the subjects presented herein. The Bureau of Naturalization is therefore fulfilling its function as announced by the Department of Labor "as a clearing house of information on civic instruction."

For convenience this chapter is presented under the two heads of "Domestic arts" and "Domestic science."

DOMESTIC ARTS.

Plain sewing, advanced sewing, dressmaking, costume designing and coat making, tailoring, millinery, crocheting (elementary and advanced), art needlework, lace making, embroidery.

Plain sewing: (a) Elementary work for beginners in cutting, fitting, and constructing simple garments; patching; darning. (b) Advanced work—Dressmaking, waists, skirts, dresses, buttonholes, ribbon and flower work.

Sewing—Hand and machine work: (a) Elementary—Sewing and adjusting of commercial patterns; cutting and fitting new and renovating and remodeling old garments. In this work the individual should bring her own garments or those of her family. The following is a suggestive list: Waists, using thin material and demonstrating buttonhole work; petticoats, ruffling; skirts, outside and of wash material; seam finishing and fastening; children's plain garments; corset covers and underwear; household articles. (b) Advanced—Making new garments of cotton and woolen material and renovating and remodeling; tailored shirt waists; plain dresses of wash material; tailored skirts of woolen material; advanced and original work in one-piece dresses of gingham, percale, cotton, cotton voile, lawn, poplin, linen, foulard, and woolen materials; children's plain garments.

Millinery: Making and trimming hats. Instruction should be under competent and experienced trade milliners, to equip the student to become a more intelligent judge of materials and of values and costs. Demonstrations should be made of various articles both in millinery and in piece goods. A cost system should be evolved. A value should be placed upon the time of the student, to be computed in the cost of production of the article. The most practical step toward the development of American appearance will be a discussion of the benefits of remodeling and renovating of millinery. The individuals should be led to use their own hats in work, after the method prescribed in the sewing classes. Interest will at once be aroused in the transformations in the headwear and clothing when the possibilities are ascertained and accomplished under the guidance of the milliner and sewing teaching.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE.

Table service; bread making, cake making, family cooking; elementary food selection (buying and preparing taken up by meal sequence); advanced cookery, fancy cookery practically taught, invalid cookery, nurse cookery, quality cookery; home economics; household chemistry and physics and sanitation; catering; homemaking and housekeeping; household accounting; furnishing and decorating; music, dramatics, household arts; physical culture.

In practically every school where domestic science is taught a well-formulated plan has been adopted. The Bureau of Naturalization therefore recommends the continuance of the prevailing plans with enlarged scope, and that a chapter be devoted to domestic arts and science in the reports (for which desire has heretofore been expressed) to be made by the schools to the superintendents and by them forwarded to the Bureau of Naturalization at the termination of the present scholastic year.

The branches of domestic science in themselves suggest too clearly the line of development to necessitate a detailed presentation in this outlined work.

Neatness and hygiene in the home and of the person should be taught. Emphasis should be laid upon commencing in earliest childhood.

The following publications are available upon application to the Bureau of Naturalization: Prenatal Care, Infant Care, Baby-saving Campaigns (for cities), Baby-saving Work (for small towns and rural districts), Child-welfare Exhibits.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is not any suggestion in that document to indicate that they have interfered with the normal-school courses in this country; there is not any suggestion that they try to teach the colleges of the country what sort of a curriculum they shall have; it is simply a plain statement of the duties of citizenship addressed to the plain man, the uneducated man, if you please, the laboring man, the man who has not the time to figure on colleges and on the schools or anything else, but simply wants to learn the fundamentals of the American Government and citizenship, so that he may get out his final papers and so become a useful American citizen.

Mr. President, I have already taken more of the time of the Senate than I ought to have taken. I am going to move to amend this bill at the proper time, to carry out the suggestion which I have in mind, and that is to eliminate everything from it except the skeleton of a bill, which will not interfere with or conflict with the law now on the statute books that provides for the education of aliens under the act of June 29, 1906, as amended by certain later acts authorizing the Bureau of Naturalization, under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, to take charge of these matters.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not do that; I hope he will vote with, I think, a majority of the Members of the Senate to defeat this bill, as it ought to be defeated, and then, if necessary legislation shall be required, that a proper measure, after due consideration, may be brought out for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I shall follow that course, but it is perfectly proper to try to amend the bill so as to make it as good as possible, and then vote to defeat it.

May I say in conclusion that the Provost Marshal General advises me that he has no statistics as to illiterates of the draft age, but I have obtained the following from the office of the Commissioner of Education:

Forty-one thousand nine hundred and fourteen of those certified in the first draft were unable to speak English or needed English instruction in order to make military training effective.

Sixty-eight thousand nine hundred and eighty-seven of those likely to be certified will be unable to speak English. This is estimated, and is based on statistics of the 1910 census.

Non-English-speaking drafted men.

Camp Upton	1,275
Camp Devens	2,482
Camp Gordon	381
Camp Meade	1,331

Mr. President, with these remarks I submit the matter to the Senate. I feel that if the Senate will give it their earnest consideration they will vote to defeat this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire me to yield to him?

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to make a few further remarks on the bill for three or four minutes, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate very long. I have only a word or two to say.

Following the last suggestion made by the Senator from Utah and the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, there is quite an extensive legislative proposition submitted by the Bureau of Naturalization undertaking to deal with this subject matter, so far as it affects aliens and people who are applying for citizenship in this country. It is pending now before the Committee on Immigration, and we hope at an early day to be able to give that bureau certain additional machinery and certain additional money to carry on this great, and I think necessary, work; but it does look to me like if we start now another bureau to do the same kind of work it is going to be more or less of a duplication.

I have been very much impressed with the suggestion that we either ought to stop the Bureau of Naturalization from doing the work that has been committed to it by statute laws here through many years, by different Congresses, or keep this Bureau of Education out of it. We ought to do one or the other, and avoid duplication.

I do not feel, and I never have felt, that vocational or any other sort of education was a proper function of the Federal Government. I think we have now at least enough ways to spend our money without embarking in that particular field of expenditure; and it certainly seems to me that only some of the duties and rights and responsibilities of the States ought to be left, but also some of their opportunities to attend to matters of this sort. I think from the beginning one line of demarcation has been that the course of education itself should belong to the local authorities, and the responsibility should rest on them.

Therefore, for every reason—first, because generally the Federal Government ought to have nothing to do with this sort of matter; second, because so far as concerns the particular way in which this thing is sought to be applied now, the Naturalization Bureau of the Department of Labor is already undertaking this work; third, because so far as the soldiers in the Army are concerned the bureau is already trying to do everything that can be done in the short time at hand; and, fourth, because we have not time now, with the emergency that is on us, to start to educate these soldiers in much except how to shoot straight and shoot quick. I do not think I can support this bill. Of course, since my colleague offers it, it is unpleasant to have to oppose it; but my judgment is against it, and upon all of those grounds I shall, therefore, oppose it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have only a few words to add to what I have already said, because after the very elaborate and clear explanation of the Senator from Oregon it seems to me that further comment on this bill is unnecessary.

I offered an innocent little amendment that no part of this appropriation should be applied to salary increases or to the creation of permanent positions, and I immediately encountered the indignant opposition of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] on the ground that I was engaged in taking all the perfume from the rose and destroying the bill. It seems to me, Mr. President, that if there ever was a measure that was presented to this body under a false aspect, it is this bill.

All this talk about the 700,000 illiterates, repeated throughout the country without the slightest foundation, has only one purpose—to bolster up this measure and get $100,000 out of the Treasury. I have here a memorandum from the Provost Marshal General's Office, sent here at the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], in which he states that they have not collected any data on illiterates in connection with the draft; but it requires a universal genius, like Mr. Claxton, to discover these startling figures overnight.

But the cause is not difficult of ascertainment, Mr. President. It is found in this wail which we frequently hear from the administrative officers of the Government, and is thus stated in the report of the Commissioner of Education:

> The statutory salaries of the administrative officers of the bureau are conspicuously low; they have remained unchanged for many years. The chief clerk of the bureau, who is the administrative head of the office and acts for the commissioner in the latter's absence, receives $2,000. The editor, who must have, in addition to the technical editorial qualifications, a clear conception of Government policies—

It would require a great editor to have a clear conception of Government policies just now—

> And a broad knowledge of the special field of pedagogy—

Which will ultimately include herding reindeer in Alaska—

> Sufficient to enable him to review critically the work of highly trained specialists in the office and prominent educators outside, is also paid $2,000. The specialist in higher education, whose business it is to judge of university and college standards—

A rather vague line of business—

> To report upon academic policies and to analyze institutional management—

High-sounding phraseology, Mr. President, which does not convey to my mind any clear idea of the arduous duties imposed upon this gentleman.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. KING. What authority has Dr. Claxton, or any representative of the Government, to analyze the duties and responsibilities and the methods of teaching of the various States, or the institutions within the States?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, there is apparently no limit to the universal genius possessed by Dr. Claxton. Any man who can teach gardening in Baltimore, and herd reindeer in Alaska, and compete with Hoover in food conservation has as universal a talent as was possessed by Shakespeare or any of the great men in history.

This man, with these high-sounding duties—

> Whose business it is to judge of university and college standards, to report upon academic policies, and to analyze institutional management—

A most arduous task—> for the largest as well as the smallest college plants in the United States—

Think of it—to analyze their institutional managements, great and small—this man receives a salary of only $3,000, Mr. President, under the act of Congress—

> The statistician, in charge of the bureau's fundamental task of collecting educational statistics for the entire Nation, receives $1,800.

Here Dr. Claxton is not fair to himself, because he undertakes to collect similar statistics from every civilized and uncivilized nation in the world.

The whole report is one continuous wail about low salaries; and yet the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. President, has fixed these salaries. They are thought to be commensurate with the duties performed, and analogous to the salaries of similar positions in other branches of the Government.

It is lamentable, Mr. President, to read in the report that—

> The position of specialist in foreign educational systems, replete with enormous possibilities for leadership in the development of American education and industry on the basis of foreign experience, pays $1,800.

To think that the man who tells us what they are doing in Japan and Burma and Siam and Haiti should only receive, for this notable consecration to the public service, $1,800!

Who can not sympathize with the lamentations contained in the report, wherein it says:

> The situation with regard to salaries paid under lump-sum appropriations is only slightly better.

I had thought, Mr. President, that the possibilities of the lump sum were limitless; and it is some comfort to me, in these day of enormous expenditures, to find that the lump sum has its limitations.

With great regret, Dr. Claxton says that—

> The limit of $3,500 placed upon salaries paid out of these funds means that the bureau can not expect to secure and hold permanently men who have a right to speak with authority in their special fields.

That is the real underlying motive behind this measure, in my opinion, Mr. President, and the reason why my amendment was so strenuously objected to, which endeavors to hold at least the present salaries and the present places down to their statutory status, and not permit the bureau to run riot, raising salaries and creating additional places.

Look at the recommendations in the report. There is hardly a recommendation here that does not relate to an increase in the salary of some employee in the department or which does not relate to the creation of an additional place. I shall not detain the Senate by more than referring to this highly interesting phase of the aspirations of the Bureau of Education, which seem chiefly to relate to salary raises and additional places.

Mr. President, from the fraudulent and false-pretense aspects, we conclude with the ridiculous when we read in the report that the bureau should be authorized to sell some of the 4,000 reindeer belonging to the Government in Alaska and to distribute the remainder to the fields wherein they shall be herded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have listened to the speech of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and also to the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with surprise.

As I understood the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, it forbade the use of any of this money in paying employees. I may have misunderstood him.

Mr. PENROSE. The amendment provided that no part of this appropriation should be applied to increasing salaries or creating permanent salaried positions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not understand it, then. I thought it was to prohibit the use of any of the money to pay employees. That, of course, would destroy the bill. I have no desire that any of the fund shall be used to increase the pay of present employees of the bureau, and would have no objection to such a direction with reference to the fund; but, of course, if the fund could not be used to pay employees hereafter to be employed, or employees assigned to this special work, nothing could be done under the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Nothing will be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Something will be done. I enter my opinion against that of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I think mine is worth at least as much as his upon this subject.

I am very familiar with the work of the Bureau of Education. I know it has done a vast deal of good. I know it has not interfered with the work in the States. I know it has not assumed the task of education which has belonged to the States. On the contrary, it has cooperated with State superintendents; it has cooperated with city superintendents; but, of course, wih county school commissioners; it has been a clearinghouse of information, gathering material that they needed from all parts of the Union, and furnishing it to them to help them advance in the splendid work of training the boys and girls of our country. This is a subject which to me has always been most dear, and to which I have given a great deal of attention, one that always delighted me, one where I feel that the broadest opportunity for public service is furnished.

Now, what is this bill? This bill is not to place the Commissioner of Education in the States to teach the illiterate of mature years. It is not that. That never has been the province of the Bureau of Education. It has not been the province of the bureau to teach the children; but it has been the province of the bureau to be a clearing house of information and help the State officials to gather the information they needed and contribute to their work, helping to unify the work of the entire country and advance it in its breadth and in its strength.

What is this bill? This is a bill to authorize the Bureau of Education to go among the adult illiterates, to help prepare plans to strengthen the adult illiterates, to help by furnishing plans the work to be done by the State officials, the work to be done by the State commissioners of education and superintendents and the city commissioners of education and superintendents and the city and the country teachers. But the Bureau of Education here, national in its scope, is to help prepare the line, to help point the way, to help stimulate the work. It may go further. It will help stimulate the good women in the cities and the good men in the cities and in the country to take up this problem of adult illiterates and help reach out to them and organize day and night movements to remove illiteracy among the adults.

Where does this bill come from? Senators have ridiculed the source of the bill. They charge the Commissioner of Education with seeking to build up a new, great bureau. Why, he already has the bureau. The bill did not come to us from him. It came to us from one of the broadest and best men in our country, the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane. Let me read to you a sentence from his letter. I introduced the bill because the Secretary of the Interior sent it to me and wrote a letter upon the subject which appealed to my judgment. He called attention to facts that appealed to my judgment. Let me read a line or two from his letter. Before I do so, I challenge the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania that there are not in this country 700,000 persons of draft age unable to read and write.

Mr. PENROSE. What does the Senator found his statement on?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will give the Senator my facts. That is the reason why I challenge his statement.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator does not give me any facts.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am going to, if the Senator will sit down and listen to me.

Mr. PENROSE. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are 5,516,163 adults in the United States who can not read and write, according to the census of 1910.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, let me correct my friend from Georgia—above the age of 10.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Above the age of 10; yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Has the Senator any evidence that they are males or females, or both?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am going on with my statement. I again suggest to the Senator that he sit down.

Mr. PENROSE. I was making a civil inquiry of the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not finished. I will give the Senator all my information.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator says there are 5,000,000 men and women who are illiterates.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true over the age of 10 years.

Mr. PENROSE. That is not a question involving the draft age.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; that furnishes information about the draft age also, because the proportions run through. The percentage is about 8. Now, then, there are 10,000,000 within the draft age, or about 10,000,000. That percentage makes those within the draft age over 700,000. The Senator asks for the calculation for his information, and that is the calculation made by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, found in this letter, and that is what the Secretary based his letter upon, that there were approximately 700,000 within the draft age subject to the draft who could not read and write. Now let me read the conclusion of the letter of the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, while I have the floor I wish to finish the line I was presenting.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator want to speak on this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I will speak on the bill that was before the Senate before the unfinished business came up.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can not speak unless he speaks on this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think I know my rights, and I shall use them.

I desire to call attention very briefly to one or two more things, and then I intend to defer my further remarks until a later time.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator intend to try to get a vote on the bill to-day?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I can not. I wish to complete at this time my reference to the statement by Secretary Lane, and my answer to the efforts to prejudice this measure upon the theory that it originated with the Commissioner of Education in an effort to enlarge this bureau. The conclusion of the letter of Secretary Lane to me is in this language:

> What I have said here leads to a respectful request that you give early consideration to House bill 6490, which provides for a modest appropriation for the Bureau of Education to begin and conduct a vigorous and systematic campaign for the eradication of adult illiteracy. If the bill can be passed soon, special attention can be given to teaching illiterate men of draft age, and especially those who are classified in Class A.

So, Mr. President and Senators, this bill came from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane. It came in a letter from him to me, and also a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Education in the House. He pointed out the extent of illiteracy above the age of 10 in the United States, 5,500,000; he pointed out the illiterates within the draft age, 700,000; and he appealed to us for this meager sum to be used by the Bureau of Education that it might speedily begin work to organize and stimulate work that as far as possible illiteracy might be removed from the boys in the cantonments and from those of draft age.

One more word and then I shall defer my further remarks until the bill is formally before the Senate.

The Senator from Oregon called attention to a picture the use of which he seemed to condemn, and he said it was being sent in great quantities from New York by the National Americanization Committee for the United States Bureau of Education. It is true, I presume, that this picture is being distributed generally throughout the United States among those who can not speak English. It is probably true that the Bureau of Education has stimulated the work of the National Americanization Committee, and that this committee is spending vastly more in this work than we have contributed to the Bureau of Education for leading in such work. If so, I congratulate the country on the work of the Bureau of Education cooperating with the National Americanization Committee. What is this circular? What is this picture? It presents Uncle Sam shaking hands with an immigrant laborer who can not speak English, and Uncle Sam is inviting the immigrant to do what?

> To learn English; to attend night schools.
>
> The circular tells the immigrant to do this because—
>
> It means a better opportunity and a better home in America.
> It means a better job.
> It means a better chance for your children.
> It means a better America.
> Ask the nearest public school about classes.
> If there is none in your town, write to the National Americanization Committee or the United States Bureau of Education.

Senators, can anything but good come from the circulation of matter of that kind? Does anyone question the value to the Nation of inducing immigrants to learn English and attend night schools? If that is the kind of work Dr. Claxton and the Bureau of Education are doing, then I ask you, Can we not well encourage them to do more of the same work? We spend a few dollars on the Bureau of Education, but under the leadership of the bureau large sums are contributed by which great service to our Nation is accomplished.

I shall not detain the Senate longer now, as the unfinished business is the regular business, and we should proceed with it.

REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on yesterday. The speech entire is as follows:

Tuesday, April 2, 1918.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in my humble judgment, the bill now under consideration has been very much misunderstood. A remarkable thing happened in connection with it. It was introduced one afternoon about 4 o'clock, and the next morning, almost before the bill had even been printed, and before anyone could have read it, there were great headlines in the newspapers and interviews with various gentlemen denouncing the bill. That was an astonishing thing to me, but as Senators and Members of the other House have read and understood the bill it has come into very much stronger favor than it was before, and when Senators come to consider this bill as it has been amended I do not see how any Senator can oppose it. There are no horns in this bill.

I desire now to come to a discussion of its provisions. I wish to discuss the precedents for it; I wish to discuss its limitations, and I wish to show the absolute necessity for this legislation.

The President of the United States is the executive officer of the Government, made so by the Constitution. He executes the law. Under the Constitution, under our form of government, Congress makes the law, the Supreme Court of the United States declares what the law is, and the President is charged with the execution of the law. The pending measure does not propose to give the President any substantive power whatever. Congress, in its wisdom, has passed certain laws which, under the Constitution and by virtue of his great office, the President of the United States is charged to execute. The question is, How shall he execute the laws which Congress has enacted? That is the only question before the Senate. Shall he be authorized to execute them in the best interest of the Government and in order to fight the war more efficiently?

The Constitution prescribes the duties of the President. Senators, of course, are familiar with the provisions of the Constitution, but I will read a portion of section 3, Article II:

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may on extraordinary occasions convene both Houses—

And so on.

The President is charged, under a joint resolution which we have passed declaring war, to prosecute that war to a successful termination. The declaration of war was in the following language:

Resolved, etc., That the state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial German Government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

So, it is made the President's duty to fight the war not only by the joint resolution declaring war but by the authority granted to him under the Constitution as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He has sent to the Senate, the same as if it were a message to Congress, a request for certain authority—the authority which is conferred in this bill. The question with the Senate is whether in this emergency, in this great crisis of our country, when men are fighting and dying, and the world is, as it were, burning up, and democracy and liberty itself hangs in the balance, will we grant to the executive head of this great Nation, whom by joint resolution we have charged to fight this war, not any new power, but the authority he asks for. He says it is necessary and tells you he must have this authority. Shall we give it to him?

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, even if these were not war times, I would be in favor of this bill. Everybody familiar with the history of this country knows, and especially, perhaps, I will say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and those 18 members of the Appropriations Committee, with whom I have the honor to serve, know that there is the most utter confusion and great duplication of work among the departments of this Government. No man knew that or could know it better than former President Taft. Before he became President of the United States he had been Solicitor of the Treasury; he had been Secretary of War; he had been Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and he knew the conditions existing.

In January, 1912, he sent to Congress a message, in writing, in which he said that the departments, bureaus, and agencies of the Government had been built up by Congress during a hundred years without any system, without any coordination, and that there was utter confusion and duplication of work everywhere. In response to that message, in which he asked for a hundred thousand dollars to appoint an efficiency commission to look into the matter, the necessary legislation was enacted, and subsequently a report was made by the commission. After reading that report, Mr. Aldrich, a great Senator from the State of Rhode Island, said upon the floor of the Senate that if we would carry on the Government as any business concern is carried on we could save the enormous sum of $300,000,000 annually. Mr. President, if this Government was run according to business methods, he was not far wrong in this statement.

Mr. President, in time of war we ought not to be too sensitive or squeamish about these things. In time of peace I introduced a resolution, which the Senate passed and which I am going to read, which practically gave the authority now sought by the pending measure, but in relation to one subject only. Time and time again, as I am going to show, Congress has acted upon this question and given this authority for special objects.

Mr. President, we have got to give the President power in these times to carry on the war in order that it may be carried on successfully. We have got to stand by him. President Lincoln——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOX in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina said a few moments ago that the President had asked for the power which this bill would confer upon him. Will the Senator from North Carolina point out the message of the President to which he referred in making that statement?

Mr. OVERMAN. I said it was the same as a message in writing. The bill was advocated by the President and sent to me by the President, and I have no hesitation in saying so.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not quite gather that qualification, and I simply wanted it to appear before we proceed further that the President had not communicated to Congress any desire for the power which is conferred by this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, everybody has been making criticism about the "red tape" in the departments. The President wishes to cut it. Let us give him the scissors with which to do so.

Mr. President, before I show the action of President Taft in these matters, which I want to read, let us see what the provisions of this bill are. It has certain provisions and certain limitations. What does it propose to do? Simply, during the term of the war, to redistribute functions. What functions? New functions? No. What functions? Functions that Congress has enacted; functions that it is the duty of the President, as Commander in Chief and as President, to discharge in executing these laws. How shall he execute them? He tells you how he wants to execute them. He does not want new laws or any substantive power, but he wants the authority simply to redistribute these functions so that he may coordinate the great machinery of this Government, which is now loose, with a monkey wrench in it, with no lubricating oil, and running rusty. He asks you to give him the authority to redistribute these functions, and also authority to transfer certain agencies and to transfer certain persons from one bureau to another. That is about all there is in the bill, with what limitations, Mr. President? Let us see what the limitations are.

It is provided—

That the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war.

I thought, Mr. President, that the language of this bill was sufficient without that clause, as the following language in the first section of the bill is a limitation simply for the period of the war:

That for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces, the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions—

And so forth. But some Senators on the committee said, "That limitation is not sufficient. We want to make it more explicit, so as to confine it absolutely to the war," and therefore I accepted the amendment that the authority by this act granted should be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war in order to make the limitation more explicit.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In view of that amendment proposed at the close of section 1, what effect has the preceding provision—

That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for one year after the termination of the war.

It seems to me that those two provisions are really contradictory.

Mr. OVERMAN. So far as the committee is concerned, that is only a question of detail. The idea of making it 12 months was, as there is another provision in the bill requiring that these functions should go back to where they were before they were redistributed, that there should be sufficient time for adjustment of those matters where changes had been made. There is a provision that—

Upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agents, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore * * * provided.

So that if the President should redistribute any of these functions or the duties of these officers, they should go back. The only question is, How long would it take to do it? So we made it 12 months; and if the Senator desires a shorter time, I have no objection to it. We only want time enough to enable them to readjust these matters after the war.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President; this is all that I was trying to get the view of the Senator upon: It seems to me that those two provisions are contradictory. If you have a provision that this act shall remain in force for one year after the expiration of the war, it seems to me that carries the authority to act for a year after the war; and yet you put in an amendment providing that the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war. Now, the war ends, and the conduct of the war ends, with the treaty of peace; and I just wanted to ask whether the Senator regarded those two provisions as contradictory?

Mr. OVERMAN. They would seem to be somewhat inconsistent; but when you take them in connection with the language I have already read, it will take some time to readjust matters. This certainly is not intended to confer any authority to act after the war is over.

Now, there is another limitation, Mr. President. The limitation is:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, any moneys heretofore and hereafter appropriated for the use of any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer shall be expended only for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

The President is not only given no new power or new function, but he is limited to spending only the money appropriated and only for the purposes for which it was appropriated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator inform the Senate as to his definition of the term "governmental agency"?

Mr. OVERMAN. Any agency established by Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the entire definition the Senator wants to give?

Mr. OVERMAN. Or any other agency that the President has established himself, if he has any power and he has established any agency.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There comes a very important distinction.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. NELSON. The bill has been amended so that it refers only to governmental agencies established by law. It is limited to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; it is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Apparently the chairman of the committee did not know that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I remember the Senator's amendment. So those limitations are there, Mr. President. It is limited to governmental agencies established by law. It is limited to expendng money only for the purposes for which it was appropriated. It is limited to using only the functions which Congress already has established.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I was going to ask, in a specific case, if the Senator will be good enough to answer, Does the Senator consider that the War Industries Board is a governmental agency under that definition?

Mr. OVERMAN. If it was created by an act of Congress, it would be created by law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a close question in my mind, and I am really in doubt about it. The Council of National Defense was established by an act of Congress, and so, as I understand, was the Advisory Commission. They, in turn, created the War Industries Board. Is that a governmental agency established by Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this language is "now existing by law." It does not say "established by law." If it was legally created, without regard to an act of Congress, it would exist by law, though not established by a statute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The thing is exceedingly important, because there are a large number of subcommittees of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense; and I should like to have their status thoroughly understood, in order to understand what this bill applies to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, Congress passed what is called the national defense act, and the national defense act confers no power whatever. It authorizes the President to establish this council. It authorizes certain agencies to be established; and, acting in accordance with this act passed by Congress, conferring no power, the great business heads of this country were summoned to Washington. Advisory committees were established, agencies were established; and there, as the Senator from New York has so vividly set forth, has been the trouble. They took this evidence before the committee, Mr. President—I wish the Senators would read it; the Senator has quoted very largely from it—in which it was testified that the best business men in America came here, as patriotic men, to help fight this war, and they had an act before them which gave them no power whatever, and the bureaus and agencies did not comply with their demands, and there was confusion everywhere.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there is a little confusion about the immediate subject of which the Senator from North Carolina is speaking. It is true, as the Senator from North Carolina says, that the law confers no power upon the Advisory Commission or any of the committees created through it or under it; but the Advisory Commission is a governmental agency existing under the law, and by the terms of this bill the President can take any department, any commission, or any office, no matter how extensive its functions and its powers may be, and transfer those functions and powers to any committee of the Advisory Commission, even though the latter now has no power or function at all save an advisory one. That is the exact situation. The power here is to transfer from one department or office of the Government to another. I am sure the Senator from North Carolina will agree with me.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator. He has a right to transfer.

Mr. CUMMINS. For instance, under this bill the President can transfer all the powers and functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or the Federal Reserve Board, or the Federal Trade Commission, or the Federal Farm Loan Board, to any officer of the Government, or to any agency of the Government, or to any department of the Government, or to one of these committees created under the Advisory Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, I want to ask the Senator a question which he asked me when I had charge of the espionage bill. The Senator asked me when that bill was up for consideration if it was absolutely necessary in order to fight the war successfully and save the Union and the Constitution, whether I would be willing to prohibit the publication of newspapers. Now, I want to ask him this question: If it is absolutely necessary, in order to save the Union and to fight this war successfully, to transfer the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to some other department or service, would the Senator be willing to do it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Why, Mr. President, there is but one answer to that question. If it is necessary to save the Union, I would be willing to abolish permanently the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal Trade Commission. I would be willing to abolish any agency of the Government. But it is for me, as a Senator, when I cast my vote to determine whether it is necessary, in order to save the Union, that the President be granted the power to transfer the functions of one of these tribunals, independent in their character, to another officer of the Government When I am convinced that it is necessary to save the Union that this sort of power shall be given to the President, I am willing to give it, and would without hesitation give it; but I not only believe that it is not necessary to grant such power to the President in order to save the Union, but I believe that if granted it would be an influential step toward destroying the Union.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has answered the question as I did, with one exception. He would do it in order to save the Union; he would do it in order to fight a successful war; but he must exercise his own judgment here, and practically say: "I distrust my Commander in Chief; I have no confidence in his judgment. I am afraid he will do so-and-so." We have our Commander in Chief; we have instructed him to fight the war; and does the Senator think he would do that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not press me too closely and too far with regard to my trust or confidence in the President of the United States. I have the utmost confidence in his good intentions; but I answer him by saying that I would not grant this power, unless I was convinced that it was necessary, to any man, whether this President or any other President, whether of my own party or of any other party.

The very moment that the Senator from North Carolina can convince me that to prosecute the war successfully, to save the Union, and to save free institutions and to save civilization, it is necessary that this power shall be conferred upon any man in the Republic, famous or obscure, I will be the first to grant it; but the task is first upon the Senator from North Carolina to convince me that any such power as that is necessary in order to conduct the war properly.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me answer the Senator from Iowa first.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will allow me just a moment more, I want to say that, so far as concerns every illustration which has been given to the committee of a need of further power in the hands of the President, there has been no difference of opinion whatever among the members of the committee. I stand ready to give to the President, so far as Congress can give it, every power which has been specified by the advocates of this bill; but I am unwilling to extend that grant into a nameless, undefinable ground, so that the President, under the guise of transferring power in order to properly prosecute the war, may transfer it for another and a different purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. Notwithstanding, Mr. President, there is a limitation in this bill that provides that he shall do nothing, he shall exercise no authority, except in matters relating to carrying on the war and necessary for the public defense—there is a limitation—yet with this limitation in this bill which says that the President shall have no authority to do anything not relating to the war, the Senator says the President will exercise that power, notwithstanding he has sworn not to do it. The Senator would not trust him. I have a different opinion of the President, and I am willing to give to him this general authority both as Commander in Chief of the Army and as the great executive head of this Nation, elected by the people to execute the laws.

Why, sir, in 1861 Congress met, and adjourned in August, and left President Lincoln to do things; and for what he did do he was denounced as a dictator and a czar, and yet he saved the Union. He signed without any authority whatever the emancipation proclamation. There was no law for it, but he did it to save the Union; and every man, North and South, today indorses that great act. Mr. John Hay said that like a tycoon he went about doing things without regard to law or the Congress; but President Wilson does not do that.

It has been said in our committee by some Senators that the President having been given the right to fight the war with the Navy and the Army, he can perhaps do all these things anyhow; but instead of doing them, he comes to Congress, and says to Congress: "Instead of being called a dictator, as Lincoln was called, I would rather have the authority of Congress to exercise my judgment in matters relating purely to the war"; and yet Senators say, "I can not trust him. He may do something he should not do." All the law says is: "You shall not exercise this authority except in relation to war matters."

That is the difference between the Senator and myself. The Senator has stood faithfully with the committee for all matters except his pet measures, which are amendments relating to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, I believe, the Department of Justice. He has stood with us on everything else. I am glad he has, but I do not want him to make those exceptions. I do not want him to assume that the President of the United States will disobey the law, violate his oath, and do an unconstitutional act. That is the reason why I do not agree to those amendments.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I want to remind the Senator from North Carolina that practically the Senator from Iowa was willing to give all the powers granted in this bill with regard to all the departments of the Government except the Department of Justice, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Federal Reserve Board. He was willing to give all these powers, and he did not have the compunction of conscience that he has indicated now about the dangers of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Minnesota is wrong——

Mr. NELSON. I am not wrong.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I am sure he will admit in a moment.

Mr. NELSON. No, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Minnesota will remember that before the committee I took the position that the power which the President desired should be specified, and, if we believed it to be necessary or helpful in the prosecution of the war, that we ought to grant it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a minute.

Mr. NELSON. Did not the Senator offer an amendment to the bill to that effect?

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will just sit down a moment, I will tell him just what I did. That view was not accepted by the committee; and in order to limit the powers which we are asked to grant within at least those fields that have hitherto been recognized as executive fields, I offered an amendment in which I proposed to give these powers to the President so far as all the executive departments are concerned—that is, the departments of which Cabinet officers are the heads—with the exception of the Department of Justice, and I included also the United States Shipping Board.

I would go with great reluctance to that extent, but I will go, although it does not meet my approval. But when it is proposed to extend this power so that the President may abolish every other agency of the Government and transfer those agencies to any officer or department whom or which he may select—agencies over which the President has no control, agencies that he ought not to attempt to influence in any way whatsoever—I found it impossible to bring my judgment to approve a course so radical and, as I thought, so unnecessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the Senator stood in the committee and advocated an amendment to the bill that would have given the President all the authority granted in this bill, except with reference to the judiciary—and that is very important—and the Treasury Department, and the Interstate Commerce Commission. The truth about it is, my countrymen and Senators, we are too squeamish about these things. Let me tell you: I stood here for three long weeks and contended for the passage of a bill known as the espionage bill, and yet here to-day we are coming back because, under the condition of things, by reason of certain words being stricken out, we can not punish anybody. We come back and ask for amendments to that bill, contained in a bill which I have introduced here to-day, in order that we may punish men for these things. Yet some people want to use the word "intent" when men are destroying the property of the United States, and we have got to come back here and strike out certain words in a bill because Senators in time of war, when the world was on fire, came here and said: "We must protect the liberty of the citizen."

Mr. President, the liberty of the citizen must be protected; but in times of war we must do all those things that are necessary to bring about a successful conclusion, and we must trust the man that the Constitution and the people of these great United States have trusted to be the Executive of this country. The Constitution makes him the Commander in Chief. Miller, in his work on the Constitution, says that the reason the Constitutional Convention put in the words "Commander in Chief" and made the President the Commander in Chief was because Senators and Members of Congress were denouncing George Washington, the Father of his Country, all over the floors of Congress and hindered him at every step; so, in order to give him the power to fight the war successfully, the Constitution itself made the President the great Commander in Chief. Now, being the Commander in Chief, and with this joint resolution passed putting upon this good man the terrible burden of fighting this war, you propose to deny him certain authority that he says he must have. Why? Because you can not trust him. It is your duty as a patriot to trust him. If he does wrong, we can deal with him afterwards. If he does things contrary to law and does not confine his action to matters relating entirely to the war, and no others, then we can deal with him. I, for one, believe that we ought to trust him with this power, and that he will exercise it according to the law of his country. That is the difference between the Senator and myself. The Senator says that if it is necessary, in order to save the Union and fight the war successfully—I do not know whether it will be necessary or not, and the Senator does not know—to transfer the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, he is willing to have that done. But if it should be necessary, and you have not given to him that power or any other power, what is he to do? He is to do like Mr. Lincoln did, I suppose, and then he will be denounced as a usurper. Whether some Senators trust him or not, the people of this country trust him, without regard to party, as no other President has been trusted in our past history.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator be so kind as to point out to us how, by any possibility, it would be necessary for the President to wipe out the Interstate Commerce Commission in order to win the war?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not intend to do it. I say he will only exercise powers according to this bill, which confines him to using those powers only in matters relating to the war.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. Many things might happen of which I can not conceive at this time. Why, the Senator from Missouri has asked me time and time and time again to show him what the President wants, and said that he might grant it.

Mr. REED. Yes; and the Senator has been as mum as the proverbial oyster when the question was asked.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ah, I will show the Senator why I can not do it. There is something arising every day in connection with which the President ought to have a right to transfer and redistribute these powers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us what has already arisen during this year?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will tell the Senators. Wait until I get to it. I have had contests with these three Senators for about three weeks. I know what they are asking. The committee has reported out this bill and asks the Senate to pass it. I know what you are going to say about it. I expect you to make a speech along that line on this floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. REED. Sometimes we get help by direct questions. If the Senator has been asked these questions for three weeks he ought to be able at the end of that time to answer some one of them. The question I am asking him is to point out to the Senate how, by any possibility, it is necessary to take away the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission and transfer them to some individual? It might be Mr. Creel or it might be Mr.——

Mr. OVERMAN. Still "harping on my daughter."

Mr. REED. No; he is no relative of mine, either male or female; but that witticism was worn out weeks ago. Now, I want the Senator, who has had three weeks to think it over, to answer the question how it is necessary, in order to win the war, to take the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission and confer them on some other individual? I think the Senator ought to answer that question or else say he can not answer it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to be frank with the Senator. I can not see why he would.

Mr. REED. Then, if the Senator can not see how it is possible, why did the Senator refuse to vote for my amendment, offered in the committee, to eliminate the Interstate Commerce Commission from the remarkable provisions of this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because we limited it purely and solely to fighting the war and let the President decide that question.

Mr. REED. But the Senator's argument now is that it is not included.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think it is.

Mr. REED. If it is not included, why did the Senator vote against an amendment that a considerable number of the members of the committee thought was necessary in order to make it plain that it was not included?

Mr. OVERMAN. As I said to the Senate, because I wanted to give the President this general power that he has asked, trusting that he will comply with the law, trusting him as the people of the United States have trusted him, trusting him as two-thirds of the Senate, I believe, are going to trust him with this matter, that he may exercise the power in his own good judgment. If he thinks it necessary to use it, he will do it; but he will have a good reason for doing it, and it will be in the interest of the national defense.

Mr. REED. The Senator first states that he can not tell us any reason why it is necessary to interfere with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then he tells us that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not included in the bill at all, and that that is the reason why he objected to excluding the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then he tells us finally that he wants to leave in the power just because he wants to trust the President to do everything. Now, I want to ask the Senator if he did not change this bill himself by his own amendments not less than five times from the original draft?

Mr. OVERMAN. I read the limitations, and one of them was the limitation I am talking about, that it must be limited to fighting the war.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do I understand the Senator to claim that the bill gives the President the power to transfer the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. OVERMAN. I say it gives him the power, just what it says, to distribute the functions of any department in this country for war purposes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now, one further question. I suppose the Senator is aware of the fact that in the railroad bill, after a discussion for many days, both the Senate and the House voted to leave the power ultimately to fix rates in the Interstate Commerce Commission. Is there any reason why the Senate and the House should reverse their action on that proposition in this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill does not reverse it.

Mr. KELLOGG. It gives the power to the President.

Mr. OVERMAN. It gives him power if necessary to save the country and more efficiently fight the war. That is what it does. That is the authority given.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that this assumption that because we give the President the power and the authority to consolidate these departments therefore he has the power and will exercise it and discontinue and dismantle the departments is a most violent assumption. Under the Constitution and the law we give the President plenary power to make war after we have declared war. What is to hinder the President to-day, if he saw fit to exercise the power, to direct Gen. Pershing over in France to surrender our Army to the Germans and leave that country? There is nothing in the law to prevent it, but we know that the President will not do anything of that kind.

In respect to the Interstate Commerce Commission, we have in another bill given the President the power to take possession of and regulate the railroads and to fix the rates. Now, why should not the President in connection with that have the authority to utilize the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with the rate-making power? We have no right to assume that because he will utilize some of the employees of the Interstate Commerce Commission he is going to wreck and dismantle and destroy that commission.

This opposition is founded on the assumption that the President from first to last will do nothing but wrong; that he will discontinue and dismantle all the departments instead of the proper assumption that he will utilize them to the best of his ability to carry on the war successfully.

Let me illustrate it, if the Senator from North Carolina will yield to me another moment. Take the matter of sending supplies to Europe. There are three or four branches of the Government interested in it. The Shipbuilding Board is interested in it, the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Department of Commerce, that has to do with exports. Those departments and the Shipbuilding Board are all interested in this matter. In order to carry on the transportation of food and supplies to Europe it is necessary to have all these branches of the Government function and work together. That is all there is in this bill, and there is no use of slandering it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the President wanted to remove some of the best-trained men in the United States and call them in to serve in some department of the Government from the Interstate Commerce Commission, why should he not have the power?

Mr. CUMMINS. I, for one, am willing to give it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, the Senator is willing to give nearly everything except his one pet measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. OVERMAN. As the Senator pointed out that the President may have to use that power, but he will never use it unless it be for war purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from North Carolina will allow me a moment, I am not proceeding upon the theory that the President will do what he thinks is wrong. I think the President will do what he thinks is right. But this legislation is my responsibility, and not his. I can no more assume his responsibility than he can assume mine and obey the Constitution. The Interstate Commerce Commission is entirely removed from the executive departments of the Government. It is wrong for the President to attempt to influence it at all. It is purely a legislative function. It is an administrative commission organized by Congress for the purpose of administering the will of Congress, and the President has nothing whatsoever to do with it.

Now, I have no objection to giving the President the power to reach into the personnel of the Interstate Commerce Commission and transfer any man from that employment to any other employment of the Government. As the Senator from North Carolina knows, I have no objection to that; but we have charged the commission with certain functions. I happen to speak of that, but there are other commissions and tribunals just as important and to which all that I say about the Interstate Commerce Commission will apply with equal force. We have charged that commission as a legislative matter with the duty, for instance, of valuing all the railroad property of the country, and it has proceeded now for about four years in that work.

Mr. OVERMAN. And it is money absolutely wasted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know something about the controversy that has arisen with regard to the continuation of the work, and every Senator who is abreast of the time knows something about it. Is the Senator from North Carolina willing to give the President power to transfer the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the valuation of railroad property to any person whom he may select for that purpose? Is any Senator willing to destroy the labor already done and vest in some other unknown, unnamed man the vast power of determining the value of the railroad property, which before very long it is quite likely the Government will be called upon to acquire?

I simply instance these things. The President might not do that. I do not know whether he would or not; but whether he would or not, we are recreant to our duty if we give any man the power to transfer a function of that kind to some one who is unknown to us, and who may or may not discharge that duty under the high sense of responsibility which we have a right to expect from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

That is but one of the functions of that great tribunal. Another is the right to review the rates fixed by the President. Now, see what an illogical and absurd position we might create. We have given those who are interested the right to appeal from the action of the President in fixing rates to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Suppose the President transfers the function of reviewing rates from the Interstate Commerce Commission to the same person who fixed them originally, what a position would be created for the edification of our enemies!

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator thinks the President would utilize some other body than the Interstate Commerce Commission to value the railroads. So far as I am concerned, I have seen $12,000,000, and I think the Senator will agree with me, generally wasted in the valuation of the railroads. The waste is going on. What will you do after you value them? You would have to value them every five years.

But talking about power, the Senator was on the great Committee on Interstate Commerce—I think the Senator says he did not vote for that provision, but you have given more power to the President of the United States in your railroad bill than is proposed to be given him in this bill Ah, you say that was for a special object Yes, and this bill is for a special object. For what? That was to run railroads and this is to fight the war.

Now, let us see what power you did give. It was more vast than that given in any other bill that ever passed Congress.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to ask the Senator from North Carolina, likewise the Senator from Iowa, to this consideration. When we had peace and the railroads were in the management of private interests we created a government as an agency for their regulation. We called that agency the Interstate Commerce Commission. But when we came to war and the President took charge of the railroads the relation the Interstate Commerce Commission had borne in peace times came to an end to the extent of its previous control over the railroads.

Why, therefore, under this bill should not the power be in the hands of the President since he must control the railroads with respect to rates and management, which control is given him by Congress for the benefit of the war? Why should we have the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other agency with the privilege to interrupt and obstruct the cause? I agree with the Senator from North Carolina that in many instances the commission would show that it would be an obstruction and would defeat the very object of the bill that put the railroads in the hands of the President.

I wish to express my concurrence in the view of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that the privilege that remains in the hands of the President under the bill presented by the Senator from North Carolina should not be interfered with by any power previously granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator allow me to ask if the act does, in effect, give the President power to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LEWIS. I hold that the law which gave the President the right to take charge of the railroads, in effect, repealed any provision that existed giving the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction in any matter that conflicts now with the new law that gives the President the control of the railroads.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not yield further right now. I have been very much diverted from the line of thought I expected to follow, but I welcome questions from any Senator upon the floor. We have had quite a controversy here about a matter that I probably would have reached before this time. I did not expect to speak for more than an hour, but I have been diverted. I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that the powers given in the railroad bill were far greater than anything granted in this bill, because this bill does not grant any substantive power, but only authority to act in regard to laws already passed. That is the only authority granted here. Under the railroad bill the President may "call upon any department, commission, or board of the Government for such service as he may deem expedient," and the President in addition is given "further power necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred." It gives him all sorts of power, any power he wants. Yet when we propose here to give him authority and not a power to fight the war, we have this great opposition from certain Senators who would be denying him the authority that he has as the great Commander in Chief.

I want both sides without prejudice or partisanship to study this bill and see if there is any unusual grant of power in it. Study it and think about it. Do not go according to the headlines in the newspapers, or the talk about the cloakroom, or the talk and lobbying here among Senators, but let us get down and study the bill and see what it means.

I was going on to say when I was interrupted that the former President of the United States, Mr. Taft, indorsed this bill practically, although there was no bill before him then, and I am going to read you from the great speech of Associate Justice Hughes last September before the Bar Association of the United States, in which he indorsed such power as this granted to the President in time of war. I will show you from great magazine writers and university professors, and take up the history of our Civil War, and other wars that we have had in this country, that the President should be given this authority.

It is said that the Constitution did not make the Union—that the Union made the Constitution. Therefore your great Commander in Chief must have powers not outside the Constitution, but the Constitution must be construed during war in connection with war power, as Mr. Lincoln did when he signed the Emancipation Proclamation. He had no authority to do it except the power that was given him as Commander in Chief to fight the war, and he exercised it, although men charged him with being a usurper and a traitor and a dictator, and he was denounced from one end of this country to the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield for just one more question, and it shall be purely a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa, or anyone else.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why does not the Senator from North Carolina include in this bill power on the part of the President to transfer the legislative functions of the Government to some other office or officer, if necessary, in order to successfully prosecute the war?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is already answered by the asking. This is a different department of the Government. As I started out to say, the Constitution of the United States divided this Government into three great divisions—the legislative, which makes the law and raises the money to equip armies and to levy the taxes necessary to fight this war; the President executes these laws; the Supreme Court decides what is the law. If Congress did not act, history would repeat itself and some one would charge the President with being a usurper and a dictator. You have charged him with going ahead and not consulting Congress, and now he comes and asks Congress for power. He is treating this coordinate branch of the Government fairly. He says, "I do not want to do anything that savors of dictatorship, and you say you will not trust me. In effect, I am charged to fight this war to a successful end, and this is what I need. Come to my help!" That is all he asks, and that is what you ought to give him without question.

Mr. President, before I was interrupted I was going on to state that in times of peace I would be willing to give this power, trusting to the President to do right, without limitation, and believing that he would do those things only which relate to the war. This has been agitated by Senators who realize the situation, and I introduced an amendment to an appropriation bill giving practically this power. It passed the Senate. The distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], always looking out for the interests of his country, diligent and untiring in his devotion to it in legislation, and knowing the financial conditions and the confusion existing in the departmens and how they are handled and the trouble we have in all the departments, introduced the same bill. After the President of the United States had sent in the report of the Efficiency Board everybody felt that many customhouses should be abolished in the interest of economy; that the officers were getting large salaries and were receiving no fees. But you could not do it. Why? Because every time it came up a Senator wanted to protect his man and to keep him in.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] knows how that is. Every Member of the House wanted to keep in his man. After the diligent and active and able Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], then a Member of the House, introduced that bill, authorizing the President not only to coordinate but to abolish the customhouses, Congress passed it and gave the President the power to abolish them. This bill does not give the President any such power as that. The President did, in accordance with that act, abolish the customhouses, and it saved the country every year $350,000.

But it is said that that was for a special purpose. Yes; but for no more special purpose than this bill. That bill was to save money. This bill is to fight the war.

Now, I am going to tell the Senate what the then President of the United States, Mr. Taft, said, who, I say, knew more about this Government and its intricacies than any man probably who has ever been President of the United States, from the fact that he was so long Secretary of War, and also Solicitor and President, and had looked into these matters.

For 100 years these departments have been built up with bureaus and agencies having no relation to each other. I say in time of peace they ought to be corelated and coordinated and brought together, and that duplication should stop in this country.

This thought occurred to me when the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was discussing the educational bill this morning. The Commissioner of Education, I understand, is given authority to teach aliens to speak the English language. There is a bureau in the Department of Labor for the purpose of educating the immigrants who come here. The truth of it is we could save millions and millions of dollars if we would stop this duplication and take from the Department of Labor and put in the Bureau of Education this work of educating and teaching English to aliens.

You have another bill here of duplication. You are passing them at every Congress.

Now, let us see what Mr. Taft says about it. You can never get Congress to do it unless you give the President authority to do it. That is the reason why I said in time of peace I would be willing to give just the authority this bill gives:

> There have been no adequate means provided whereby either the President or his advisers may act with intelligence on current business before them—

This was in 1911—

> There has been no means for getting prompt, accurate, and correct information as to results obtained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator tell me from what he is reading?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am reading from the message of President Taft delivered March 3, 1911—

> Estimates of departmental needs have not been the subject of thorough analysis and review before submission; budgets of receipts and disbursements have been prepared and presented for the consideration of Congress in an unscientific and unsystematic manner.

Senators, look at these bills that are coming here, estimates by the millions and the billions, made by some department's chief. The President can not look over them. He does not have time to scrutinize them, and he can not do it. That is what Mr. Taft was talking about. The President can not know what is going on. There is nobody to revise what they do—

> Appropriation bills have been without uniformity or common principle governing them: there have been practically no accounts showing what the Government owns, and only a partial representation of what it owes; appropriations have been overencumbered without the facts being known; officers of Government have had no regular or systematic method of having brought to their attention the costs of governmental administration, operation, and maintenance, and therefore could not judge as to the economy or waste; there has been inadequate means whereby those who serve with fidelity and efficiency might make a record of accomplishment and be distinguished from those who were inefficient and wasteful; functions and establishments have been duplicated, even multiplied, a using conflict and unnecessary expense; lack of full information has made intelligent direction impossible and cooperation between different branches of the service difficult.

I could stand here and read the report of this commission that Congress created, appropriating $200,000, and showing the confusion existing and woeful wasting of money by duplication of work. I wish Senators would read it to show the confusion and the want of correlation and coordination in every one of these departments, bureaus, commissions, and agencies, which Congress has from time to time established without any scientific ideas of government. We have the most unscientific Government in the world.

I want to stop here, Mr. President, to say that France and Great Britain have given Lloyd-George and Clemenceau greater powers than we propose to give the President, because we give no substantive power; we only give him authority to redistribute powers or functions already granted by Congress. I could stand here and read what I have on my desk to show what England has done to give power to Lloyd-George, not the commander in chief but the premier, and Clemenceau, the President of France, without stint, let, or hindrance. They can change every cabinet minister to-morrow; they can change the commander in chief to-morrow. Yet when we ask for a little authority here to coordinate the departments for the interests of the Government Senators would deny it to our President.

Mr. REED and Mr. KENYON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri first.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator when he first heard of this message of President Taft? It was about 1911, was it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; somewhere about that time.

Mr. REED. The emergencies existed then, and they have existed ever since?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED. I want to ask where the gallant Senator from North Carolina was during all the intervening years that he did not act?

Mr. OVERMAN. I fathered a bill through the Senate trying to correct it, and it failed in the House because some Members of the House thought that men in whom they were interested were going to be interfered with. The Senator knows how hard it is to get such a bill through both Houses.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator say he opposed the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to answer the question of the Senator from Missouri. I recall very distinctly that the Senator from North Carolina did offer an amendment to an appropriation bill granting to the President some such powers as are contained in this bill, and after a prolonged controversy the amendment was agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; and I had the valuable assistance of the Senator from Arkansas in getting it through.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it is not improper to say that I make this statement in reply to the innuendo of the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from North Carolina long deferred action on this matter after he knew the necessity existed. I think the Senator from North Carolina has been very diligent.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator from Arkansas was sufficiently plain without his explanatory note, but I venture the assertion that the Senator from North Carolina has never brought forward a general plan proposing to have the departments of the Government reorganized. If he has, it never reached such a stage as to generally challenge the attention of Congress. It may have been offered as an amendment to a bill.

Regardless of that, I want to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he is undertaking to say to Congress now that the real purpose of this bill is to accomplish the kind of reorganization that President Taft had in mind, and if it is now proposed during this war to undertake a general reorganization of the departments of the Government to carry out the kind of purpose President Taft had in mind?

Mr. OVERMAN. The President wants to do it, so far as the war is concerned, to help him better fight the war. But I was stating what we did. The Senator talks about plans. He does not remember the great debate here and the speech of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the speech of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and the speech of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], advocating the amendment which passed the Senate but went out in conference. I did get up a plan in time of peace to do just what this bill provides for.

But it is not proposed to do that now because we have placed a limitation on the President. It has all got to go back after the war. It can only be done while we have the war, and he can not expend a dollar for any other purpose than it was appropriated for.

Mr. ROBINSON. The authority sought to be conferred on the Executive in the provision which was adopted in the Senate a year or two ago was broader than the authority which is proposed to be conferred here.

Mr. OVERMAN. That allowed the President to act and it gave Mr. Taft power to act. This does not give the President any power to act except as Congress gives him power to coordinate and bring together the departments.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mean to say that this bill does not give him power of action?

Mr. OVERMAN. It says he has the power to coordinate and bring them together in a scientific manner to fight the war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from North Carolina give the date of the amendment which he offered?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I will come to it directly. I have been diverted or I would have done so long ago. I will come to those matters. I want to read what Mr. Hughes said; but, first, I want the Secretary to read one paragraph from Mr. Taft's message. It is marked.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What volume is it in?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Secretary to state that. I was reading from the message under date of March 13, 1911. That was the next year.

The SECRETARY. Reading from volume 1 of House Document 104, No. 1252, Economy and Efficiency Report, Miscellaneous, Sixty-second Congress, third session, page 2:

> This vast organization has never been studied in detail as one piece of administrative mechanism. Never have the foundations been laid for a thorough consideration of the relations of all of its parts. No comprehensive effort has been made to list its multifarious activities or to group them in such a way as to present a clear picture of what the Government is doing. Never has a complete description been given of the agencies through which these activities are performed. At no time has the attempt been made to study all of these activities and agencies with a view to the assignment of each activity to the agency best fitted for its performance, to the avoidance of duplication of plant and work, to the integration of all administrative agencies of the Government, so far as may be practicable, into a unified organization for the most effective and economical dispatch of public business.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think I will read along that line, as to the powers which Congress ought to give to the President in time of war, extracts from an address of the late Republican candidate for President, who was an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, as everybody knows, and who is recognized as a great lawyer. This is an address which was delivered by Mr. Hughes on September 19, 1917. It seems as though it were prophetic, and reads as if it was an argument for this bill. This address was delivered before the American Bar Association.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir; gladly.

Mr. KNOX. Before the Senator reads that extract from the address of Mr. Hughes I should like to make an inquiry in relation to the message of Mr. Taft. Is this not the difference between what Mr. Taft proposed and what this bill proposes: Mr. Taft proposed that there should be a readjustment of administrative officers by legislation, while this bill proposes that it shall be done by Executive order? Is that not the difference between the two?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; I think not. I will show that Congress is not carrying out the recommendations of the President as to giving him power.

Mr. KNOX. What I mean is this: Mr. Taft did not request Congress to give him the power to make this redistribution of functions between the different administrative officers of the Government, as I recollect.

Mr. OVERMAN. He asked that power, I think.

Mr. KNOX. In the position in which I happened to be in Mr. Taft's Cabinet at the time—although I do not claim any special recollection of the circumstances—as I understood it, Mr. Taft desired that Congress should provide a new system predicated upon a report of a board of experts. That board was appointed, and he reported the findings of the board to Congress through this message.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not deny that. As the Senator from Pennsylvania says that was his understanding, of course I will not take issue with him. Now, here is what Mr. Hughes says:

> Each of these powers, that of Congress and of the President, is the subject of a distinct grant; each is the complement of the other, and together they furnish the adequate equipment of authority for war. There is no more impressive spectacle than that of the President of the Republic in time of war, when, in addition to the other great powers of his office, he acts in supreme command of the armed forces of the Nation and conducts its military campaign. It was under this power that President Lincoln defended the Proclamation of Emancipation. * * *
>
> It is also to be observed that the power exercised by the President in time of war is greatly augmented outside of his functions as Commander in Chief through legislation of Congress increasing his administrative authority.

It looks as though he were talking about this bill when it was introduced nearly a year afterwards—

> War demands the highest degree of efficient organization, and Congress, in the nature of things, can not prescribe many important details as it legislates for the purpose of meeting the exigencies of war.

That is just exactly this case. The President finds something occurring every day as to which he would like to have authority to coordinate certain departments. There are 7 great auditors; 12 great supply-purchasing bodies; and he is met with them beating against each other—jealous of each other.

> Never is adaptation of legislation to practical ends so urgently required—

Is not that pretty good authority?

> Never is adaptation of legislation to practical ends so urgently required, and hence Congress naturally in very large measure confers upon the President the authority to ascertain and determine various states of fact to which legislative measures are addressed. Further, a wide range of provisions relating to the organization and government of the Army and Navy, which Congress might enact if it saw fit, it authorizes the President to prescribe. The principles governing the delegation of legislative power are clear, and while they are of the utmost importance when properly applied, they are not such as to make the appropriate exercise of legislative power impracticable. The legislature can not delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government. There are many things upon which wise and useful legislation must depend which can not be known to the lawmaking power, and must, therefore, be a subject of inquiry and determination outside of the halls of legislation.

Many things occur every day that are not known to the lawmaking power; and right here, Mr. President, if you will pardon me for diverging, some Senators say, "We want to know what the President wants to do; tell us what he wants, and we will give it to him." That was one of the arguments before the committee. Why, Mr. President, the President does not himself know. What he desires is to be in a position to act, and to act quickly, when it is necessary to act.

Why, let me tell you this: They have been shooting popgun bills through the Senate and the House of Representatives. It is the hardest matter to get them through, but they have been shooting them through here day after day; 8 or 10 little popgun bills have passed here. But, if the President had the authority which this bill is designed to give him, what was desired to be accomplished by those bills could have been attained without delaying Congress. If you want him to come to Congress every time he desires to act, and have one Senator standing up here and talking for an hour, and another, maybe, talking three hours, and then there be an adjournment on him, the war would be over before you passed the legislation. That is the history of these bills. Let us give him the general authority to act, and save time and money and enable the Commander in Chief to efficiently fight this war.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I simply desire to call attention to exactly what Mr. Taft did ask. Here it is:

> My desire is to secure and to furnish to the Congress a scheme of organization that can be used as a basis of discussion and action for years to come.
>
> In the past, services have been created one by one as exigencies have seemed to demand, with little or no reference to any scheme of organization of the Government as a whole. I am convinced that the time has come when the Government should take stock of all its activities and agencies and formulate a comprehensive plan with reference to which future changes may be made. The report of the commission is being prepared with this idea in mind. When completed it will be transmitted to the Congress. The recommendations will be of such a character that they can be acted upon one by one if they commend themelves to the Congress and as action in regard to any one of them is demed to be urgent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that was the first message sent to Congress in order to get the authority to appoint this commission of 12 men. Then there came back this report, which I had read from the desk, to Mr. Taft. Not only did Congress act in one case but acted in two or three instances, as I am going to show. There is precedent for this all along the line in time of peace and in time of war. You will not deny this power to him. What, then, does Mr. Hughes say? He says:

> Congress can not be permitted to abandon to others its proper legislative functions; but in time of war, when legislation must be adapted to many situations of the utmost complexity, which must be dealt with effectively and promptly, there is special need for flexibility and for every resource of practicality; and, of course, whether the limits of permissible delegation are in any case overstepped always remains a judicial question. We thus not only find these great war powers conferred upon the Congress and the President, respectively, but also a vast increase of administrative authority through legislative action springing from the necessities of war.

The action we ask here is just that which Mr. Hughes says the President must have in order to successfully fight the war. That is all we ask.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to ask the Senator a question. He conceded that for the purpose of waging war more effectually it is desirable to confer on the President this flexibility of administrative power and the power of reorganizing the bureaus and the departments that are directly or even remotely connected with the waging of war. How does that argument apply at all to a bureau or department of the Government, like the Post Office Department, utterly disconnected with the war and dealing only with civic affairs of the people?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am going to show the interrelation of the Post Office Department with the carrying of the mails to the soldiers.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, well, that is such a remote connection——

Mr. OVERMAN. I will show to the Senator that every one of the departments has some connection directly or indirectly with war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, if the Senator is going to contend that everything on earth, every activity, civil and everything else, is connected more or less remotely with the war, I am not inclined to dispute that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going to show the Senator directly, when I come to it, that every one of them is directly related to the war in some of its functions.

Mr. HARDWICK. Therefore, this bill includes everything?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the exception amounts to nothing.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; the exception is not worth while, because the bill means to include everything.

Mr. OVERMAN. What exception?

Mr. HARDWICK. I refer to the limitation proposed to be put on this power with relation to matters connected with the war. It amounts to nothing under the broad construction laid down by the Senator from North Carolina. The bill is a blanket that covers everything in this country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is not limited to war activities at all, but covers every civic function.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it only covers matters in the departments relating to the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Senator says everything is related to the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said every department has something in it that is related to the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Therefore, all the departments are included in the terms of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; all of the departments, more or less, in some way, through one or more bureaus or agencies, are connected with the war.

Why, Mr. President, I was criticized for stating here once that the Agricultural Department had nothing to do with the war. It has not, outside of the question of food production. A gentleman came to me the other day from up North—the president of a great manufacturing concern. He said he went before a little fellow sitting up in the Quartermaster's Department, having been sent for in order that the Government might find out how much caustic soda could be obtained and where it was manufactured. The Government official turned around and said, "What do you mean by caustic soda, anyhow?" Yet caustic soda is one of the ingredients of the greatest explosive known to the world in making picric acid. If we had a right to coordinate the Chemical Bureau of the Agricultural Department, the Chemical Division of the Bureau of Mines, and the chemical bureaus of some of the other departments, we would have one great bureau or agency to help in the discovery of these explosives and to consider their possibilities, instead of having different bureaus considering this subject scattered around, having men doing one thing in one department and something else in another department. They should be coordinated in one great department or bureau.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me see if I understand the Senator, because it affects very vitally my own position on this matter. The Senator has just told me that, in his opinion, practically everything in this country——

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I did not say that.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator said "everything."

Mr. OVERMAN. I said there was some agency or bureau in each department of the Government which was directly connected with fighting this war.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not want to be captious in any way; but I think the Senator's statement went even further than that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not intend to go further.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well, I accept the Senator's modified statement, then. Now, under any such broad construction as the Senator indicates and under any such broad latitude of power as the Senator lays down, there will be practically nothing that is exempt from the operation of this proposed law, and many things that, in my judgment, at least, and I think in the judgment of other Senators, touch only the civic activities and the civic functions of the Government will be embraced under this war measure.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; my friend is in error as to that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wish we could draw a line between the two.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the Senator has read the amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes; I have read it very carefully.

Mr. OVERMAN. It confines the provisions of the bill to those matters in the departments directly connected with the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me—and I am not going to detain him much longer—that is a matter of construction. Some people are construing it, in fact the people who must administer the proposed law are construing the provisions of this measure to cover everything on earth that has even the most remote and indirect connection with the war, and even by the most remote indirect and roundabout processes of reasoning. That is the trouble with it.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is a limitation as to the departments; in fact, there are five different limitations. The President has to construe it that this authority is given in matters relating to the conduct of the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me illustrate——

Mr. OVERMAN. And it must be left to him.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the National Legislature has got to have some rights about this matter, too.

Mr. OVERMAN. The National Legislature has.

Mr. HARDWICK. If it does not surrender them, yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not surrender them; we put this limitation in.

Mr. HARDWICK. We delegate them, then.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; we put a limitation in the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator says "everything connected with the war." Suppose it was the construction of some man connected with the Government, and that construction was finally approved by the President, that one of the things necessary to do to prosecute the war adequately was to determine the kind, character, quality, and quantity of crops that should be planted in this country, would that be connected with the war in the judgment of the Senator?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the President would exercise power such as that under the bill; but I do not see why that is not connected with the war.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is not the manifest answer to the Senator from Georgia this, that this bill deals with the transfer of executive functions, and such a thing as designating what crops shall be planted is as remote from this bill as pole is from pole?

Mr. HARDWICK. But the answer to that is, I suggest to my distinguished friend from Delaware, that under that sort of construction any and every branch of the Department of Agriculture could be included in this bill? That is what I am leading up to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. President, I shall not read it, because I have already taken too much time of the Senate, but I wish to put in the RECORD a quotation on this subject from William Archibald Dunning, professor of history in Columbia University. I do not indorse all the author says, but the extract advocates the enactment of such legislation as is now proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Dunning, William Archibald, professor of history in Columbia University, Essays on the Civil War and Reconstruction. Macmillan Co., 1904, pp. 58–59.]

The commander's privilege (in the Civil War) of doing whatever he regarded as likely to weaken the enemy was freely employed as a warrant for congressional action. Both legislature and Executive were on this theory "above law." Hence while Congress was endowed with authority to legislate entirely at its discretion, the President was privileged, at his discretion, to disregard all this legislation. Where such a conclusion was possible, the principle of departmental check and balance was obviously of little significance. Good statesmanship in both Executive and legislature preserved the harmony of the two branches till the strain of armed hostilities was relaxed, but no longer. In the work of destruction the President was the real Government and Congress kept in the background; in the work of reconstruction Congress asserted once more its controlling power and violently put the President into the background.

Mr. OVERMAN. I also ask to insert in the RECORD, without reading, an extract from the work entitled "The Civil Law and the Constitution," by John W. Burgess, dean of the faculty of political science in Columbia University.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Burgess, John W., dean of the faculty of political science in Columbia University. The Civil Law and the Constitution. Charles Scribner's Sons, 1901, vol. 1, pp. 232–233.]

Congress (in 1861) placed the Government on the war footing, ratified the President's assumption of war powers, and on the 6th of August adjourned, leaving the President practically in the position of a military dictator. This was good political science and good public policy. It was also sound constitutionally. In periods of extreme peril to the political life of a nation individual liberty, federalism in government, and even coordination of government departments must give way temporarily to the principle of executive dictatorship. It is a desperate remedy, a remedy of last resort, but it is one which every complete political system must contain, and under certain proper conditions employ. The two most modern constitutions of federal government, those of the German Empire and of Brazil, made express provision for it. They authorize the executive in periods of extreme public danger to suspend the ordinary law and establish martial law. There is no question that the Constitution of the United States authorizes the Congress and the President, acting together, to do the same thing. The clauses of that instrument which vest in Congress the power to raise armies, provide for calling the militia into the service of the United States for repelling invasion and suppressing insurrection, and to declare war, and in the President the powers of a Commander in Chief, certainly contain the principle of the dictatorial power of the whole Government, if not of the President alone, and it is altogether gratuitous to concede that the Government of the United States overstepped its constitutional powers, and acted on the principle that necessity knows no law in preserving the Union by force against dissolution. It overstepped its ordinary limitations, but it had, and has, the constitutional right to do that in periods of extraordinary danger.

The root of the error in denying this right lies in the claim that the Constitution made the Union. The truth is that the Union made the Constitution and that the physical and ethical conditions of our territory and population made the Union. The Union was, and is, the Nation, and men did not make the Nation by the resolutions of a convention. Men undertook to interpret the requirements of the Union in political and legal organization and to give them objective form and authority, but behind all that they did or could or can do was and is the Union, the Nation, whose preservation is the supreme principle back of the Constitution and the supreme law within the Constitution. Any other view of these relations is unspiritual, is purely arbitrary and mechanical.

Mr. OVERMAN. I also ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading, an editorial from the Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From editorial in the Nation, New York, v. 104, p. 568, May 10, 1917.]

Another thing not to be forgotten is that all these extraordinary powers to be given the President are emergency powers. This means two things. One is that the grant is valid only for the duration of the war. It is not a question of the laws being silent in the midst of arms. The point is, rather, that Congress is asked to make it lawful for the President to do many things while the armed conflict lasts which it would never think of authorizing him to do in times of peace. It is a gift of power in order to avoid the usurpation of power. Moreover—and this is the second implication of what is being done at Washington—the immense powers placed in the hands of the President he may not find it necessary to use at all. Their mere existence may be sufficient to accomplish the purpose. * * *

It is said—a few Congressmen are saying—that it is dangerous to pass laws enhancing the authority of the President so enormously. Some fear that we shall discover that we have created a dictator. Of course, any grant of power may be abused by any official. But no system of checks and balance, no vigilant legislative oversight, can do away with the necessity of getting officials whom we can trust and then giving them the tools with which to do their work. There were many critics of Lincoln during the Civil War who called him a usurper and a dictator. It is true that in him the necessities of the war led to reposing a confidence and an authority before that time unparalleled. John Hay wrote privately of Lincoln as a sort of Tycoon, going his own way, seldom holding meetings of the Cabinet, running the Army and Navy and conducting foreign affairs according to his own will. But no one to-day would speak of Abraham Lincoln as grasping at overweening power for its own sake or to further a personal ambition. His mighty spirit was wrestling with the great work of ending the war; and that once done, he was ready to lay down every scrap of dictatorial power and be again one with the people who were bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh. And all that is sought at present by the administration in Washington is to be full panoplied for every emergency which the war may thrust upon the country. When the emergency is overpast, the armor put on to meet it will be quietly laid away.

Mr. OVERMAN. I also ask permission to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, a quotation from an editorial in the New Republic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From editorial in the New Republic, New York, vol. 13, p. 360, Jan. 26, 1918.]

When Congress proposes plans for reorganizing the war administration it is only reflecting the opinion of a majority of the American people. Mr. Wilson will be falling into the first grave mistake of his career if he permits his opponents to crowd him into the position of ignoring facts, of resenting criticism, and of rigidly opposing reorganization. That was the mistake which Mr. Asquith made in the spring of 1915, and it cost himself and his country dear. The President's personal and partisan enemies are making use of the crisis in order to force on him, if possible, a mechanism of war administration which would tend to hamper rather than to help him and his Cabinet and which could only add to the existing confusion. He is justified in opposing this particular bill But if he fails to recognize the necessity of some measure of reorganization which will make in favor of a more unified war administration and a more vigorous conduct of civil and military preparations he will be misjudging the needs and opinions of the Nation and failing to meet his own obligations to satisfy them. There is still time and space in which to deliver himself and the country from the deplorable consequence of a fight in the midst of war between the executive and legislative branches of the Government. He can still offer as a substitute for the doubtful plan or reorganization proposed in the Senate bill a plan of his own which would be better designed to secure a similar result. If he would only adopt this course, he would not only break the force of the attack of his enemies and enable his friends to continue their undivided support, but he would do away with the most formidable threat which has yet been directed against the war morale of the American Nation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have other quotations from distinguished men of this country indorsing this bill, but I shall not encumber the RECORD with them.

Mr. President, I said there was precedent for this proposed legislation. I see the Senator from Missouri is present. Here is the amendment which I introduced to the legislative appropriation bill in 1917:

SEC. 8. The President is hereby authorized to take action looking to a proper and scientific coordination of the work of the various executive departments of the Government; and he is hereby requested to report upon the question of transfer and consolidation of bureaus, divisions, offices, and other governmental activities, in order that duplication of service may be abolished and extravagance and unnecessary expenditures eliminated.

As agreed to in conference, and as it appears in the law, the provision is as follows:

SEC. 8. The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate duplication of service in the various executive departments and establishments of the Government, including bureaus and divisions, and make a report to the President thereon, and the President is hereby authorized, after such report shall have been made to him, wherever he finds such duplications to exist to abolish the same. Report of the action taken hereunder shall be made to Congress at its next regular session.

That is the law which was enacted.

Mr. REED. When?

Mr. OVERMAN. March 3, 1917.

Mr. REED. It is on the statute books now?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is.

Mr. REED. Then that law giving the President the power to do the very thing which the Senator says President Taft desired has been upon the statute books since what year?

Mr. OVERMAN. March, 1917.

Mr. REED. March, 1917. It has been on the books all these months, and it is there now.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED. And hence there is no necessity of conferring that power.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we conferred that power before. Why not confer it now?

Mr. REED. You do not need to confer it now; it already exists.

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill gives the same power as that conferred by the amendment which I prepared more than a year ago, and which Congress enacted into law in a modified form, and yet under that provision the President can not accomplish what he desires, for the reason that the power is limited and the President must wait for the report of a certain commission, which never have made any report, and can not make a report, because they are employed in other matters connected with the war. Whenever such a report is made, if one ever shall be made, the President will have the right to act under the provisions of the law.

That is why he ought to have the right that is proposed to be given him by this bill. I believe the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and other Senators supported the amendment which I have already quoted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. REED. Let me read the amendment to which the Senator has referred:

SEC. 8. The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate duplication of service in the various executive departments and establishments of the Government, including bureaus and divisions, and make a report to the President thereon; and the President is hereby authorized, after such report shall have been made to him, wherever he finds such duplications to exist to abolish the same.

Now, I want to ask the Senator a question: The President is authorized by this provision to abolish duplications. The Bureau of Efficiency has been in existence for how many years? Can the Senator tell me?

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not; but it has been in existence for several years.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mean to say that the Bureau of Efficiency has made no report as yet?

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that I sent for the chairman of that bureau when I had this bill before me, knowing that my amendment in modified form had been adopted, and asked him if he had made any report. He said no; that the war came on, and he had not been able to make a report; that he had been employed in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau in the effort to devise a system for that work, and it was impossible for him to do the other work.

Mr. REED. Then, if duplications are found, the power exists, as soon as a report can be made by the commission, to abolish those duplications. So that all the argument of the Senator in regard to the necessity of giving the President the power to abolish duplications is void and of no effect.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator's question answers itself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has not this board been at work for two or three years, and has it not submitted its report on the subject of duplications?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the chairman told me he had not been able to submit a report; that they had not had time to make a report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has not the board been at work?

Mr. OVERMAN. After war was declared, the chairman said, they had not been able to do the work and did not prepare any report at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Here [indicating] is a report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, I wish somebody would read that report. It is in answer to a resolution passed in Mr. Taft's administration, showing instances where there ought to be coordination and scientific rearrangement in the departments of the Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In order to make clear the particular point that has just been discussed, I wish to ask the Senator if this is not the situation: The law which is on the statute books, and which the Senator from Missouri has just read, has to do only with the duplication of service in the departments, whereas this bill is not primarily related to the question of duplications at all, but it is its purpose to establish, bring together, coordinate, and consolidate.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason I said that the question of the Senator from Missouri answered itself, because the bill does not propose to deal with duplications primarily.

Mr. REED. I directed my remark to the argument made by the Senator from North Carolina, largely concerned with the question of duplications. I simply called attention to the fact that the power already existed to abolish duplications.

Mr. OVERMAN. Duplications; yes. That is the reason I said that the Senator's question answered itself, because this bill does not refer to that.

Mr. President, within the last 12 months we have appropriated more than $23,000,000,000 without a financial policy. Estimates for departmental expenditures have literally poured into Congress day by day without any centralized scrutiny, revision, or control. The President has no power and no organization to sift them down to the rock-bottom needs of the Government. The estimates for appropriations are being sent into Congress according to old statutory regulations made to meet the needs of other days when the entire expense of the Government was less than half a billion dollars a year. There has been no readjustment of our methods of finance since we entered the war. The Public Treasury bears a relationship to the conduct of the war in no less a degree than the Army and the Navy. A strong financial policy, worked out and enforced with vigor and efficiency is absolutely necessary to insure the proper carrying out of the military and naval program.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has not the Secretary of the Treasury the right to do this work to-day, to bring together the reports of the various departments and submit the result to Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is the difficulty. The time of the Secretary of the Treasury is so engrossed that when the heads of the departments send to him estimates calling for billions and billions of dollars it is impossible for him to go through them. There ought to be some coordinated body to scrutinize every estimate that comes here.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I see my friend on my right rises. He is on the Appropriations Committee, and he sees the importance of some legislation along this line, even in times of peace.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator's friend rose to ask him how many assistants the Secretary of the Treasury has at the present time?

Mr. OVERMAN. He has four or five, but the Senator knows how these things are done. The estimates come down here from the departments, and we just take them oftentimes without ever being able to scrutinize them as they should be scrutinized.

Mr. GALLINGER. They come with the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury; that is the way they come.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope they will do better, so as to win the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope so; and if you will give this power I believe they will.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. How will they need this power to do it?

Mr. OVERMAN. There are plenty of departments of the Government which send estimates here that never go to the Treasury Department. The Senator knows that. The President under this bill will be able to establish a different system.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not understand that that is the case; I know it is irregular, if it is done.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is not.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has any power over the estimates of the War and Navy and other departments at all. All he can do is to transmit them to Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is what I thought.

Mr. OVERMAN. The head of a department makes an estimate, which is sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he merely forwards it to Congress; he often can not look at it, and he has not the authority or power to change it.

Mr. KELLOGG. He simply transmits the estimates to Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; and there ought to be somebody that could take charge of such matters even in times of peace.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator will permit me, the rule is that every department makes out its own estimates; and they are only transmitted to Congress through the Treasury Department as a purely formal matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is exactly as I understand the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, it becomes the duty of the committees of Congress to look the estimates over and determine whether or not it is proper to make the appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly; and when estimates for billions of dollars are sent down to Congress, as has been the case sometimes, the Senator and I and other members of the Committee on Appropriations are called together and we have to take the statements sent to us and vote for the appropriations.

If we had coordination in this work and a body to look into and scan every appropriation that is asked for, I believe we would save millions of dollars annually.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, as a matter of fact, have not these appropriations of billions of dollars all come at the request of the President of the United States, to whom you want to give this authority?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; the President sends down what is sent to him by his chiefs. There ought to be somebody to overlook and scan all these estimates for appropriations before they are sent to the President. The President has not the time to look over all of them; obviously that is impossible. Let us talk common sense. I do not mean to say the Senator from New Hampshire does not always talk common sense; but so far as I am concerned——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not offend me at all; but the Secretary of the Treasury is very closely allied with the President of the United States in his official duties. Now, is it not a fact that these great estimates of appropriation come here with the sanction of the President of the United States?

Mr. OVERMAN. The President merely signs them. As the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has said, each department or each bureau that wants any money makes an estimate and sends it to the Secretary of the Treasury; but at a time like this, when we appropriate billions of dollars—$23,000,000,000 last year—the Secretary of the Treasury can not look them over; but they are sent to the President, and the President signs them just as they are sent to him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think that the President of the United States could provide now for the examination and consolidation of the estimates from the various departments? Are not the estimates from the departments simply the estimates of the President, acting through the various heads of the department, and has he not now authority to consolidate and compare and bring together those various estimates?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the law requires that each department shall prepare its own estimates. If there were some board that could look over all the estimates, it would be a great aid to Congress.

In my judgment the President under this bill would be able to establish a system of interdepartmental financial control, and could thus, as Commander in Chief, lay before Congress from time to time a consolidated statement of his financial needs.

Mr. President, some one has said that the Department of Justice was an exception; it has been argued that that department has nothing to do with the war. Let me tell you what I find after a few days' investigation. I find that there is an intelligence bureau in the Department of Justice; I find there is one in the War Department; I find there is one in the Department of the Navy; I find that there is one in the Treasury Department. There ought to be but one intelligence department, instead of four or five working against each other and jealous of each other. That is the trouble with this country to-day. We have men in one department working on a certain line, and men in other departments working along the same line; instead of having one great consolidated intelligence bureau that could run down the spies and bring them to justice, we have the intelligence bureaus split up. One of the agents himself said to me the work along this line is often greatly demoralized. They run across something that they desire to investigate, but the War Department says, "this is our business," and then another department, perhaps the Navy Department, says, "it is our business." Let us get them working together in one intelligence bureau, so that a combined effort may be exerted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Carolina is quite right in saying that there ought to be a consolidation of these intelligence bureaus or secret-service systems. I promise the Senator from North Carolina to do the best I can toward showing him, before we are through with this debate, that the President has ample and complete power at this time to consolidate those so-called bureaus, and dismiss all but one of them. I may say, while I am on my feet, that with regard to the creation of a board which shall have the power to revise the estimates of the various departments of the Government, this bill does not give the President any such power as that, although I think it is a power that he ought to have. I am in favor of the so-called budget system of dealing with our appropriations; but the very thing that the Senator from North Carolina desires is the very thing that is not in this bill at all.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator inadvertently made a mistake in speaking about the intelligence bureaus. Those are very different from the secret service. I agree that there are three secret services, as I understand——

Mr. OVERMAN. More than that.

Mr. LODGE. And there may be more; but the naval intelligence is a wholly different thing. That is something relating entirely to the Navy, and has nothing to do with espionage, or spies, or criminals of any sort.

Mr. OVERMAN. I may be wrong about that.

Mr. LODGE. It is to gather intelligence for the Navy. They have it in time of peace as well as in time of war.

Mr. OVERMAN. I may be wrong about that. I saw that there was a naval intelligence bureau, and I thought it exercised functions along this same general line, but I feel very sure there is a secret-service bureau in connection with the Navy.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I used the word "intelligence" simply because the Senator from North Carolina did, although I tried to qualify it immediately by a reference to the secret-service systems of the various departments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, Mr. President, I told the Senator from Georgia that I would show how certain things in certain departments were correlated or interrelated with the war power—not to say that the President would exercise it, but he ought to have authority to do it.

In the Department of State—the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] was once the great head of that great department—there is a foreign trade adviser, who has general supervision over foreign-trade matters and diplomatic and consular correspondence relating thereto. There is a Diplomatic Bureau which has charge of diplomatic and miscellaneous correspondence relating thereto. There is a Division of Foreign Intelligence, which has censorship and control of the departmental publicity under the direction of the Secretary; disseminates information to diplomatic and consular officers and information for publication abroad; has a telegraphic-news service to diplomatic missions abroad; has charge of publicity matter concerning the foreign policy of the United States, and of giving out information relating thereto to the press and to officials. There is a Division of Latin American Affairs; a Division of Mexican Affairs; a Division of Far Eastern Affairs; a Division of Near Eastern Affairs; a Division of Western European Affairs; a Consular Bureau, having charge of consular and miscellaneous correspondence relating thereto; a Bureau of Citizenship, which examines applications for passports, issues passports, receives and files evidence, and so forth, and conducts correspondence relating to the protection of American citizens abroad. That is one of the most important divisions connected with the war to-day.

The Department of the Treasury has the management of war finance and the auditing of war and other Government expenditures through six independent auditors. They are there in time of peace, and if you will let me digress, I do not see why we should have six auditors. The President of the United States, then Mr. Taft, suggested that they be made into one or two. We have six now, and to get a belt buckle paid for, or a man's laundry paid for, it has to go from auditor to auditor. A man told me that a little account of 75 cents had to travel about 5,000 miles and be indorsed by an army of men almost before it could be paid. It went from one place to another, and back to another. That is the trouble that Mr. Willard encountered; that is the trouble that Mr. Gifford encountered; that is the trouble that Mr. Catchings, the head of the American Chamber of Commerce, encountered. They said that when they came here they found all these things, and said that something ought to be done about it. So does the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] say that there ought to be coordination and centralization of power. So does the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] say, on this floor, that there ought to be coordination and centralization of power. So does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] say that there ought to be coordination and centralization of power. Everybody says there is too much red tape. Let us cut the red tape and do what the Senator from New York wants—not in the way he wants to do it—but let us give the President authority to coordinate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator has requested that we read the testimony of these experts, Mr. Gifford and others, to whom he refers. I have read their testimony, and I should like to have the Senator show anything in that testimony that goes substantially beyond the proposition that we need a director of munitions.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will do that. I will show it.

The Department of the Treasury, as I said, has the management of war finance and the auditing of war and other governmental expenditures through six independent auditors, as follows:

(1) Auditor for the Treasury Department.

(2) Auditor for the War Department, including the audit of war expenditures abroad.

(3) Auditor for the Interior Department.

(4) Auditor for the Navy Department.

(5) Auditor for the State and Other Departments.

(6) Auditor for the Post Office Department.

It also has a secret service.

The Department of Justice has to do with the detection and prosecution of violations of the espionage act, the detection and prosecution of violations of the draft act, and the detection and prosecution of violations of all other such war legislation.

Then there is the Post Office Department, in which the Senator from Georgia is interested, having charge of the handling and transportation of soldiers' mail, the exclusion of seditious and treasonable matter from the mails, the transportation and delivery of Government war correspondence, and the transportation of all foreign mails and the consideration of all questions arising thereunder. That is directly connected with the war.

Under the Department of the Interior there is the Commissioner of Patents, having supervision of all matters relating to the granting of patents, including patents for war devices, and so forth. Here are all these patents being issued for matters relating to the war, of which he has supervision. Then there is the Commissioner of Pensions, who administers the military and naval pension laws; also the Director of the Bureau of Mines, who has charge of the administration and enforcement of the act of October 6, 1917, to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, and so forth, of explosives, and providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, and so forth, of the same.

In the Department of Agriculture there is the Office of Farm Management, which studies farm economics and the application of business principles to farm practice; the Weather Bureau, which makes weather forecasts, collects and transmits marine intelligence for the benefit of commerce and navigation, and so forth; the Bureau of Animal Industry, which deals with the livestock industry, including eradication of disease, inspection, quarantine, and so forth; and the Forest Service, which, among other things, investigates the mechanical and physical properties of woods and gathers information concerning the needs of the various wood-using industries and the relation of forests to public welfare generally. A United States forestry regiment is now in France doing forestry work.

In the Department of Commerce there is the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which develops foreign trade and gathers statistics concerning foreign commerce and trade possibilities; the Bureau of Standards, one of the most important in this war, which can be used and is being used now all the time by the War and Navy Departments, which makes tests to determine the quality and standardization of materials needed for Government use; the Bureau of Lighthouses, which establishes and maintains aids to navigation on the coasts and lakes and rivers of the United States and its territories; the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which surveys the coasts of the United States and prepares charts of such surveys; the Bureau of Navigation, which has general superintendence over the commercial marine and merchant seamen of the United States; and the Steamboat-Inspection Service, which inspects vessels, licenses the officers of the same, and so forth.

In the Department of Labor there is the United States Employment Service; the Bureau of Naturalization, which supervises the work of the naturalization of aliens; and the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which collects and diffuses information on problems relating to labor in this country and abroad. There are two departments here bidding against each other for labor—the Shipping Board and the Department of Labor.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has only to do with work relating to the railroads, and only there as to transferring officers who are needed for this work.

The Director General of Railroads discharges functions which have been recently prescribed by Congress.

The Civil Service Commission passes upon the appointments of clerks for the various war activities of the Government.

The Federal Reserve Board has duties related to war finance and the War Finance Corporation.

The War Finance Corporation has duties related to the financing of war industries.

The Federal Trade Commission investigates business methods, contracts, and so forth, related to the industrial life of the country.

The Council of National Defense has an advisory commission having relations to several fields of war activities.

The War Trade Board has control over exports, imports, and enemy trade.

We are all familiar with the work of the United States Food Administration.

The Commissioner of Priority in Transportation directs transportation of war material, and so forth.

The duties of the Alien Property Custodian are well known, as are those of the Committee on Public Information.

The United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation settles labor disputes, and so forth.

All of these are more or less connected with the war.

Therefore, Mr. President, all we want is that the President shall be able to act when the emergency arises.

Now, let us see: This is a mighty good speech that the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] made. I think it was sent out as a campaign document. I got a copy of it. It was printed on such fine paper that I know it was not paid for by the Government. The print is so fine that I believe I will get the Secretary to read it, to save my eyes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

In addition, we have the Council of National Defense, composed of six Cabinet officers, with the Secretary of War as chairman, charged with the general planning and coordination of all our agencies, but utterly lacking in power to enforce its decrees. Under the Council of National Defense we have the advisory commission, composed of leaders of industry and finance, but possessing no power and performing no function but that of giving advice. We have a large number of committees and subcommittees of the advisory commission, each charged with the mobilization and organization of a particular industry, but without any power or function except that of giving advice. Out of the Council of National Defense and the advisory commission and its multitudinous committees has grown the body known as the War Industries Board, whose effort is directed toward mobilizing, organizing, and coordinating all of the resources and industries of the country for the supply of our forces on land and sea. The War Industries Board lacks power to enforce any of its arrangements. It, with all its subcommittees—and there are several—simply gives advice. Then there is a commission regulating the purchases of the allies; it, too, is without definite power. It may be that I have forgotten some of the statutory agencies and some of the advisory agencies which go to make up this vast and complicated machine. In any event, the list, as recited, is long enough. It must be apparent to every sensible man that it is utterly impossible to get any teamwork out of this conglomeration of ambitious and scattered agencies, official and unofficial, unless we create some agency that shall guide and control them all in those matters in which teamwork is essential for the accomplisment of great results.

These departments are all buying the same thing. Why not have one man buy it and give him the authority to speed up the production, to make the proportionate allotment of the contracts in the different steel mills? The truth of the situation is to-day, there being no plan for allotting contracts and for placing Government orders, that it has been done very unevenly. Some parts of the country are overloaded with Government orders and other parts of the country have not any, and they could have had them had there been any centralized authority to plan out the distribution of the orders.

Take the question of lumber. The War Department purchases an enormous amount of lumber with which to build the cantonments; the Shipping Board purchases a tremendous amount of lumber for use in the shipyards and in the building of wooden ships. I have no doubt the allies purchase lumber. I know that the Aircraft Board purchases vast amounts of lumber. Why not have the lumber purchased by one agency? Why scatter the effort? Why not organize and discipline and coordinate the lumber production? Would that set back the wheels of machinery one day if it were done? Senators, it would speed it up. We have too many agencies, all trying to do the same thing.

The plain fact is that we have no agency in our war Government to-day charged with the duty of projecting its vision far into the future, anticipating the emergencies which may arise, and laying the plans by which we can meet and overcome those emergencies. I have cited the coal situation as an illustration of the penalty we must pay unless we reorganize this great effort along business lines, unless we centralize somewhere in our Government the authority and power to compel coordination between all those departments, commissions, boards, and bureaus.

We can not tell to-day just what the future may hold for us. Other emergencies will overtake us, and if we are wise and prudent and far-sighted we shall establish some agency in our Government, whether it be called a war cabinet or by some other name, and it matters not at all to me whether you call it a war cabinet or not. I do not even insist that it be the result of the passage of an act of Congress. If it can be done without the passage of a bill, well and good. I do not care so very much how many men are placed on it. I do not care how they are defined in the Executive order that places them on it, or how they may be defined and described in the bill establishing such a board. My only plea is that something of that sort be done, and done soon.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have a little more matter here that I desire to submit. I think I will ask the Senate to take an adjournment now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, will he yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I listened very attentively to the reading from the desk, and I notice that the complaint is against the bureaus and commissions that have been created by the President himself. For instance, the question was raised by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] as to why we should have five or six different instrumentalities engaged in purchasing material. As I understand, the President has solved that problem without legislation, and has one purchasing agent at the present time. Is not that so?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I think not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think Mr. Baruch is in charge now.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, he is in charge of certain divisions, but he can not change the law. The law prescribes the duties of these purchasing agents for the War Department, the Ordnance Department, the Quartermaster Department, and so on. They are all separate institutions, governed by statute. You can not change them. They have to purchase the supplies needed by their respective departments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think substantially that is being accomplished by Executive order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am sorry to differ from the Senator. The trouble is that all these purchasing agents are governed by law. Unless authority is given somewhere to consolidate them, you can not do it. I will show the Senator in the morning that I am correct about that. I will finish in about a half hour in the morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do that. If that be so, if the duties of these officers are established by law, is it the Senator's idea that we are giving authority to the President in this bill to repeal those laws?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; this does not repeal any law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, if the law governs the matter, giving the President power does not amount to anything.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; he is given authority to coordinate them into one office, and then, after the war is over, they go back to where they were originally.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but still the law remains right there.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason why it is necessary to have this bill passed—to give him a right to transfer or redistribute functions—and that is one of the things he can do.

Mr. GALLINGER. That does not appeal to me.

At this point Mr. OVERMAN yielded the floor for the day.

Wednesday, April 3, 1918.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I had about concluded my remarks on yesterday afternoon, having spoken longer than I think one ought to speak. I do not believe that one ought to speak for more than two hours, for I think any man who has anything to say upon any question can exhaust it in two hours. But I was diverted, and therefore my speech had to go on and on.

I would have concluded yesterday evening but for the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], after I had argued that the best business men in the United States had said before the committee that there was confusion everywhere in the departments, and that there ought to be centralized power and coordination, challenged that statement and said he had read the testimony, and he asked me if I could furnish him any testimony along that line except as to the appointment of a munitions director.

Mr. President, having been challenged I want to quote from these proceedings. I do not know whether they are executive or not, but it is the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is on my desk. I will read the testimony of Mr. Catchings. Mr. Catchings is a very prominent man, one of the most prominent before the committee, and I think he was on the Council of National Defense. At any rate, he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and they, one and all, in every section of this country, have indorsed the pending bill. He has indorsed it heartily himself, because it is the proper thing to do.

We are trying to emphasize this——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator give me the page?

Mr. OVERMAN. Page 1906. Mr. Catchings said:

We are trying to emphasize this. It does not seem to us to be appropriate for us to determine whether we should have a Chief of Staff do this, as the Germans are supposed to do, or whether we should have a war cabinet or war council or a war committee, as they call it in France. The thing that we are trying to impress upon you is that the experience of business men has been universal that without central control and responsibility no enterprise, large or small, could succeed. We believe that that has been the fundamental principle of our Government and in all other enterprises. We believe it has been our tendency to give our Executives great responsibility and hold them for it; but in this, the greatest of all enterprises, we have no one sitting on the war problem as a whole and controlling these conflicting activities, and as I read to you in the statement there are in Washington at the present time the Fuel Administration, the Food Administration, the War Trade Board, the Shipping Board, the Railroad Administration, the Navy Department, the War Department, and the War Industries Board, all affecting the war situation and all independent, one of another, with no means of settling differences between them. It is not a matter, it seems to me, that we should debate. It is clear that there is no way of settling a difference of opinion in routine between Mr. Garfield and Mr. Hoover, for example.

Senator HITCHCOCK. So you really propose or advocate, not only the creation of a minister of munitions but of some intermediate board above the Cabinet and below the President.

Mr. CATCHINGS. A board which will, of course, be solely responsible to the President and merely pass upon these matters in his name.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, one man could do that.

Mr. CATCHINGS. One man could do that, certainly. We do not lay emphasis on the particular form; but it seems to us that it is utterly hopeless to expect to fight a war without having somebody actually in charge of it, on the job constantly, and thinking about it all the while, and just so long as we continue as we are at the present time, in our judgment, we are inevitably going to come up with a situation where we are having our shipbuilding program interfered with all along the line, unintentionally, but the shipbuilding program is interfered with everywhere to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Mr. Catchings is not a member of the Council of National Defense? He is an officer of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and one of the ablest and one of the clearest-headed men I think who appeared before our committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thank the Senator for the information. I judged that he was a member of the Council of National Defense because he was one of the witnesses before the committee. Mr. Gifford, on page 1864, said:

My view would be that if the President had the power to appoint a director on the War Industries Board, I would prefer one man. I would prefer a one-man board, where direct executive work could be done. Then, if it were made possible by Executive order, we will say, for the President to transfer from the War Department, the Navy Department, or the Shipping Board, any purchasing committee which it might develop should properly be centralized from those departments into this section, as the scheme works along, we would transfer such things as had to be centralized, such as steel, for instance. No one questions, for instance, that steel will have to be centralized. It will have to be centralized somewhere. We can not have it handled by the Army, the Shipping Board, the Navy, and our allies. If they could be transferred out of the various departments and put under direct war industries, you would have a workable organization that would not be so comprehensive and so detailed as to break down in its functioning, and yet you would attain the object of taking care of these vital needs, which I call the war industries.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you had a central head. It does not make any difference what you call him. If we could empower him, under the rules and regulations to be adopted by the President, the President being the supreme head, to utilize all the branches of the Government, wouldn't that be better than to rely upon these different agencies to do it under a volunteer system? Would it not be better to have one direct head with power to call to his assistance the Council of National Defense, the War Industries Board, the administrative division, the clearance committee, or any other agencies?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think so. I do not think that the war industries under that scheme would need it.

This shows that he is in favor of coordination all along the line by different boards and chiefs. I understand he was asked a question in the Military Committee; the Senator from Tennessee can answer whether it is true or not; I have not seen the evidence; but I understand that when before the committee they asked him what was the remedy for it and he replied "the Overman bill."

Mr. McKELLAR. I will state that this gentleman, Mr. Gifford, who is secretary of the Council of National Defense, is very heartily in favor of a centralized organization with which to deal with these problems. He and Mr. Catchings and other gentlemen were in favor of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. They did not confine it only to munitions, the Senator means?

Mr. McKELLAR. They did not confine it. The testimony was very much to the effect that we needed centralized authority to control the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Georgia challenged me on that statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I agree he took the position that there should be centralized authority.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator said it was only as to munitions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I said what he especially pressed was a director of munitions, and that that was really what they were supporting in their testimony.

Mr. OVERMAN. That statement does not appear, according to my reading of the evidence.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is my understanding now of the testimony.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, if the Senator pleases, I will read from some witnesses before the committee who were members of the committee, and let us see what they said about it. I will read only a few lines, for I do not want to take the time of the Senate unnecessarily:

Instances of that sort bear out the statement I have already made, that there is a lack of comprehension of manufacturing difficulties here in Washington in the departments of the Government, largely manned, as they were and are, by military men.

Then we had before us some of the exceedingly able civilians who were summoned to Washington just before or soon after our entrance into the war and who have devoted their time and efforts in helping the Government. Senators are acquainted with a large number of them. These men have lived close to the problem for many months; they have watched the working of the machinery at close range; they are thoroughly informed upon the situation; and they have told us about it not only in open session, but in executive session. Each and every one of them has pointed out and explained the defects which the members of the committee had begun to suspect before they appeared before us. Each of them has suggested one or more remedies, one or more improvements, and all their suggestions are in the same direction, to wit, the proper centralization of authority—an authority established preferably by statute, an authority whose decisions may be promptly reached and accepted as final.

* * * * * * *

We have had before us in open session Mr. Daniel Willard, the president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and at the time of his appearance the chairman of the War Industries Board. In discussing the organization of the Government for war-making purposes as existing at the time of his appearance, he expressed the hope that they would get along all right, but he pointed out what he termed a fundamental weakness—lack of authority to compel coordination.

Mr. Baruch appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs in open session; and he, too, in the most explicit terms—and he is a member of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense—stated that we must have centralization of authority in order to compel coordination amongst the different parts of our war-making machinery.

I read what was said by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in a celebrated speech here. He is a member of that committee, and he said:

Mr. Gifford, the director of the Council of National Defense, who probably is more familiar with this problem than any other man in Washington and across whose desk comes all these things, for he is the director and manager of the office of the advisory commission as well as of the Council of National Defense, most explicitly stated that what we needed to bring order out of chaos was a centralized authority, some authority armed by the statute.

That was his opinion, showing that there ought to be some centralized authority somewhere and coordination. In another place the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said:

We had before that committee the chairman of the war committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Mr. Catchings. Mr. Catchings has been the first assistant to Mr. Stettinius during the time that Mr. Stettinius was managing the purchases for Great Britain. He assisted Mr. Stettinius in that work, and they purchased something like $3,000,000,000 worth of goods in this country for Great Britain. They did it under a centralized authority. They made a tremendous success of it. It is astounding to hear him say how simple it all was, when properly organized. Mr. Catchings stated most explicitly before our committee that he and his war committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce have been working for six or seven months here in Washington—and they represent all the chambers of commerce of the United States, a large number of boards of trade, and business men's organizations, aggregating 7,000 of the most prominent and successful business men of the country. For six or seven months, Senators, Mr. Catchings and his committee have been endeavoring to persuade the officials here in Washington that something must be done to centralize control and authority, and they have had conference after conference, always insisting upon that one thing in order to make America effective.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is a member of that committee, and he said:

To be of any value as a coordinating body the Council of National Defense should be composed of men having no other duties and vested with full power. Being composed of men already overworked, the council has proved to be merely a name, without activity, without energy, and without life. Realizing this fact, an effort was put forth to make it a reality by adding to it an "advisory commission" of men from the business world. This brought to Washington many able men who served on various committees of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense. But it added to the complication and confusion. These men found they had in law no power. They found no organization or coordination. One by one they have gradually become discouraged and many have already resigned and retired to private life. Many of those still persisting talk freely of the disorder and lack of system in the war activities of the Government, and all of them believe that we ought to have something the equivalent of a war cabinet.

Look at the situation as it presents itself to-day, nine months after we entered the war, and even before we have fought a battle.

Then he goes on:

Our industrial establishment is likely to break down. We have had no one to coordinate; no one who was in touch with the Aircraft Board, the Shipping Board, the War Supply Department, or any of the other departments requiring production; no one to coordinate them and see that all of the mass of production was not centered within a few miles.

Take the matter of the Fuel Administration. Congress authorized the control of the fuel of the country, and an attempt has been made to control prices, supply, and distribution, but it has apparently been made without any successful effort to coordinate the work with other functions of the Government. To-day we have a fuel famine in the country, not because we lack productive mines but because they have not been permitted to operate. Lack of knowledge, lack of transportation, and lack of harmony between the Fuel Administration and other functions of the Government are the causes of the breakdown.

I am impersonal in what I say. I am not attributing any part of the failure to the Fuel Administrator, though some would attribute it to him; but I am saying that it is the system which is chiefly at fault—the failure to have any coordination between his bureau and the others.

If there had been some authority which could have brought the Fuel Administration into close contact with the mining and labor interests of the country and with the war industries of the country, as well as into conference with the Priority of Shipments Board and other branches of the Government, much of the present breakdown could have been prevented. But the Fuel Administration, like the Food Administration, the War Industries Board, the Raw Materials Board, the Priority of Shipments Board, the Shipping Board, the Aircraft Production Board, and all of the other boards, was running an independent course. Its activities were not focused with the other activities at any point. Its decisions were reached and its orders were made practically as though the others did not exist. It started trouble last summer by fixing prices for coal at such figures as to make impossible the operation of hundreds of small mines. It reached a climax in midwinter by closing arbitrarily for more than a week thousands of industries, throwing millions of laborers and clerks out of work and causing the loss of millions of dollars.

* * * * * * *

Mr. OVERMAN. I will put another extract in and stop at that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am proposing that these 8 or 10 separate and independent departments of the Government, each of which is now running on a single track without any coordination, shall be brought up into one station, where they will be united, where they will be focused, where they will come in contact with each other, and where somebody having authority will say to the Fuel Administrator and to the Food Administrator and to the Shipping Board and all the other boards and bureaus, "Let us see your plans; we want to compare them and coordinate them and work together."

* * * * * * *

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator, I hope, will now desist from his questioning and let me cover my ground. I am not criticizing the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy or any other Secretary. I have endeavored to avoid personal criticism. I am excusing them. I am saying that the system is such that even if the Secretary of War runs the War Department in a good way and the Secretary of the Navy runs his department as well as he knows how and the Food Administrator runs his as well as he knows how and the Fuel Administrator as well as he knows how, if they have separate plans they are in the predicament of the five brothers who built a house. There is an old story of an uncle with much money, who called in his five nephews and said: "Boys, here is a great amount of money. I want you to build a house. Buy all the materials that you please. Each of you build a part of the house." They arranged among themselves that one should build one side, one should build the other, one should build one end, and another the other end, and the fifth one was to build the top. They were good workers; they were able men; they knew how to build. One built his end high and short, while the other built his end low and long. One built a long side that was low and the other built a short side that was high. The fifth boy built the roof. After they got the portions together they would not work. There had been no architect; there had been nobody to plan; each one had done his own part, but there was nobody to give the master plan, and it was not a house at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. They all admit that there is confusion in the departments. I showed it yesterday, and I am not going to repeat what I said then. I first discussed the question as to the bill itself, as to its provisions and as to its limitations. I then discussed the necessity for this act. I also attempted to show certain precedents that have been passed by Congress from time to time, and I alluded, the Presiding Officer will remember [Mr. CURTIS in the chair], to the amendment to an appropriation bill that we secured and which gave the President absolute power to abolish customhouse officers. There is nothing of that kind in this bill.

Here is another act that was passed February 14, 1903 (32 Stat., 830). Here is a law which passed Congress:

SEC. 12. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by order in writing, to transfer at any time the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work, from the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior, to the Department of Commerce and Labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall be thereby transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof which is so transferred. And all power and authority conferred by law, both supervisory and appellate, upon the department from which such transfer is made, or the Secretary thereof, in relation to the said office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall immediately, when such transfer is so ordered by the President, be fully conferred upon and vested in the Department of Commerce and Labor, or the Secretary thereof, as the case may be, as to the whole or part of such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service so transferred.

Giving more power than this bill, except that it is said that was a special purpose. I say, again, this bill we have is for a special purpose.

One is for the Department of Commerce and Labor; another is for running the railroads, but this is to fight the war. That is a special purpose.

Mr. President, I am going to show you that from time to time we have been passing, as I said yesterday, little popgun bills that ought to have been settled without coming to Congress to pass the acts. Eight or ten times Congress has been called on to pass through the Senate and House bills which if the President had the authority that this bill proposes to give him he could have done without the delay always caused. Nobody objected to the bills, because all saw the importance of them.

I wish to put in the RECORD another precedent, an act passed March 3, 1917, and the act of July 1, 1902, showing what Congress has done heretofore on this line as to special subjects. Yes, but Congress passed them and gave the President not only the power to transfer or redistribute functions, to transfer offices, but absolutely giving him power to create offices by Executive order.

Again, September 7, 1916, in the shipping law, the President, upon the request of the United States Shipping Board, was authorized to detail officers of the military or naval or other services of the United States for such duties as the board may deem necessary in connection with its business.

We had to pass an act of Congress to do that. If the President had had authority he could have transferred them without coming to Congress and without the inevitable delay that always happens here in Congress.

In 1916 we had to pass another act providing that the Treasury Department, the Department of Commerce, the Federal Trade Commission, and so forth, shall detail from time to time such officials and employees to the United States Tariff Commission as the President may direct.

Why should not the President have had that authority, instead of having to come to Congress to have a bill pass both Houses?

Then March 1, 1917:

The heads of the several departments of the Government may, in their discretion, and shall upon the request of the Secretary of War, detail representatives from their respective departments to assist the Engineers of the Army in the study and examination of watersheds significant from the standpoint of flood control, to the end that duplication of work may be avoided and the various services of the Government economically coordinated therein.

He ought not to have had to do that in executing the law of his country as Commander in Chief. He ought not to have had to come to Congress, but the statute itself limited him, and he could not do it without an act of Congress.

My point in citing these acts is to show that our time is taken up here with these bills that nobody objects to, that everybody is in favor of; but it takes time to pass them, and the President has to come here every time he wants to do anything limited by law to ask Congress to give him authority. But it is proposed to give him power and authority to carry out these things for the purpose of carrying on the war successfully and more efficiently to fight the war, and he should have this authority.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator contend that the duty of officers of the Army and Navy should not be prescribed by written statute?

Mr. OVERMAN. They are prescribed by written statute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator contend that they should not be?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I think the Commander in Chief ought to have the right and authority not to abolish but to transfer when necessary from one department to the other as Commander in Chief.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator contend that it would be wise public policy to permit the transfer of Army officers, we will say in any number, without restraint, to duty in connection with flood control?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I think if the President thought it necessary for that purpose he should have a right to do it. He does do it now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In that case, then, the Senator can not contend that the law should define the function of Army officers.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not said that. I have said the law places this limitation upon the President, and he has to come to the Senate time and time again. There are a dozen bills here now providing that these things may be done, that everybody is in favor of, that no one objects to, whereas the President ought to have authority without coming to Congress in these minor matters.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator advocate the repeal of the laws which define the duties of Army officers?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not. I have not done so, and I do not so contend now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say the Senator is now contending that the great trouble with the situation is that laws now exist upon the statute books which define the duties of an Army officer.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am complaining that in many respects laws on the statute books are hindering and hampering the President in this time of stress, and he ought to be given authority not to repeal any law, but to transfer and to redistribute, as the Senator said, for the purpose of having better administration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not mean to press the Senator unduly, and I do not wish to interrupt his remarks, but I will be interested if some time during the discussion he will specify what particular handicap the administration is now suffering from.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will read extracts from the Senator's speech. I will put it in the RECORD. I will cite his own speech which he sent out over the country charging that there is confusion here everywhere. I invite you to hear what he told the people of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator say with entire frankness that the utterances I made upon the floor of the Senate on that occasion were political in character?

Mr. OVERMAN. No. I do not so contend.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg the Senator to read it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator's speech, which I have read from freely, is a pretty good speech for me to make to show confusion and trouble everywhere. I have taken the liberty of quoting from the Senator's speech, and he did make a splendid speech, and it bears me out that there is confusion everywhere in the management of affairs. I say this ought to be settled without any partisanship. I have heard some rumors that there was going to be a filibuster on this bill by some partisans. I do not think so. I never have believed it. I believe we ought to come down and settle this question without any prejudice, without any partisanship, and settle it like patriotic men upon its merits.

Mr. President, I believe I will read here about a great battle that took place once in the olden time. I will read a few verses from the seventeenth chapter of Exodus. Perhaps I should have taken it for my text when I began:

And Moses said unto Joshua, choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek. To-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill with the rod of God in mine hand.

So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek. Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill.

And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand Amalek prevailed.

But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun.

And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I simply wanted to inquire how the Senator had discovered that quotation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator intimate that I do not read the Bible? I will say to him I read my Bible every day.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; not at all. I was asking for information.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina is evidently attempting to establish a parallel. May I ask between whom the parallel is to be drawn?

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Republicans, on that side, will hold up the President's left hand, and the Democrats, on this side, will hold up his right hand, we shall win the war.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to have that explanation. I had supposed the Senator was attempting to establish a similarity between Moses and the President of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; the Senator knew better than that, because I said that I wanted that side to hold up one hand and this side to hold up the other hand and help win the war—both sides without any partisanship—and I am sure the Senator from Iowa agrees with that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; but I was thinking it would be an unfortunate comparison, because, as I remember it, Moses was not permitted to enter the promised land.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; but I do not know why that should apply to this case; for do you think the President is not going to win the war? Are you going to hinder him from winning it? Are you going to stand here and deny him what he asks in order to keep him from getting into the promised land? Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; that is not my position; but I was regretting that the Senator from North Carolina had instilled any such thought into the minds of Senators or into the minds of the people; because I hope that the President will enter the promised land, although I fail to see any striking resemblance between the two famous characters.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator would compare the President to Moses in entering the promised land. I did not refer to the holding up of his hands as an illustration or a parallel as to Moses and the President; and the Senator knew it. I do not like to hear such talk as that when we have kept out of partisanship so far. I do not like to hear the Senator say that we are not going to reach the promised land.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not said any such thing as that.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what the Senator suggested, as I understood.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was wondering if that was in the Senator's mind.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did not the Senator hear me say that I wanted one side to hold up one hand and the other side to hold up the other hand?

Mr. CUMMINS. Which hand?

Mr. OVERMAN. You hold up the right hand and we will hold up the left hand, or you hold up the left hand and we will hold up the right hand.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senate is quite anxious to hold up both hands of the President in every function and power which he ought to have.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope so.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from North Carolina is under that general misapprehension which prevails altogether too universally, and that is that all the war powers of the United States must be exercised by the President; and that if he is not invested with all the powers of government then this war must fail. That is a misapprehension, both historically and practically.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill provides that the President shall have these powers whenever they are necessary for the efficiency of the Army and to those matters relating entirely to the war.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Would the Senator from North Carolina be willing to cite an instance of where the utilization or the coordination of the activities of executive officers in such a way as would be helpful in winning the war could not now be accomplished by the President under his powers as Chief Executive?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I know it has been contended, as the Senator from Pennsylvania now suggests, by great lawyers that the President has such power now; that the joint resolution which was heretofore passed put into the President's hands the power of the Army and the Navy and everything that is necessary to be done in the way of a transfer and redistribution of functions. I do not know but that the President has it. If that be so, why not now specifically give him the power if he wants it?

Mr. KNOX. But would the Senator from North Carolina, in order to aid those of us who do not wish to vote for the conference of any power that is not necessary, be willing to cite an instance where the President could not now, as Chief Executive or as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, coordinate the activities of executive officers?

Mr. OVERMAN. What the Senator from Pennsylvania might think was unnecessary, another Senator might think was necessary; one Senator might think one thing and another Senator might think another, and another Senator might think still another. The only safe way to do is to give the President the general power and to trust in him to exercise it according to law, when he is sworn to support and to do what he does entirely in the interest of successfully carrying on the war.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina another question: Is it not true that the President, in anticipation of statutory authority, had by his executive authority practically created and put into a formative conditon certain branches or bureaus of government, for instance, like the Food Department? I instance that department in order to give emphasis to my question.

Does the Senator know of any case where any attempt upon the President's part to exercise his executive authority by coordinating the activities of the executive branch of the Government has been challenged in Congress? Has there been any such disposition manifested?

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to answer that question.

Mr. KNOX. Just a moment, if you please. I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from North Carolina yielded to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KIRBY. If the Senator will yield to me, I should like to answer that question.

Mr. KNOX. Have I the floor or not, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. KNOX. I should like the privilege of asking my question. The point I want to make is this: Has the Senator from North Carolina discovered any disposition upon the part of Congress to be critical of the President in coordinating the executive and administrative offices of the Government in order to carry on the duties imposed upon him under the war power?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I think there has been some criticism.

Mr. KNOX. In Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. I have not noticed it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is the same question we have heard discussed in the committee. The President has told us why he desires this legislation. I take it for granted that the President has heard from the departments and has very vividly known the troubles with the Government, which, as Mr. Taft has said, is the most unscientific government on earth, with many duplications and jealousies, and with its multitude of bureaus, agencies, and commissions. The President has found that out, and he has found it out to his sorrow. He has discovered that there ought to be coordination, and he desires authority to accomplish it.

The question is asked, Can not the President do that anyway? If that be so, why not specifically give him the authority when he comes and asks it? He is now criticized for having too much red tape in his administration, and when he comes and asks you to cut it, you Senators would deny him the power to do so.

Senators have asserted that the President does not confer with them; that they do not consult with him. I suppose the Senator from Pennsylvania has probably done the same thing; perhaps has criticized the President. But now the President comes here and takes Congress into his confidence. He does not exercise the power as some others have done in the past in time of war—patriotic Presidents—who did not have the power but who have none the less exercised it. One President (Mr. Lincoln) was charged upon the floor of the Senate with being a dictator and a usurper, but the men who charged that have gone down into oblivion and their names to-day, if mentioned, it is with contempt. I could name them if necessary. Now, when the President comes here and says to you, "I need this authority; I ask you for it; limit it, if you please, to the war power," some Senators will not give him that which he asks. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he thinks the President has such power without having the authority conferred upon him which this bill proposes?

Mr. KNOX. To do what?

Mr. OVERMAN. To do what the bill proposes.

Mr. KNOX. I think the President of the United States has the authority to require every executive officer and every department of the Government to do anything that he directs to be done in order to prosecute this war to a successful conclusion. I think he has the power to delegate from one Cabinet officer to another the discharge of any particular duty that he thinks such a Cabinet officer can discharge better than the one upon whom it would normally be incumbent. I do certainly think that the President has all those powers.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, Mr. President, I do not see why we have been wasting our time here for three or four months passing bill after bill to enable the President to do the very thing which the Senator from Pennsylvania says he now has the power to do; but it seems that his Attorney General and the great lawyers with whom he is bound to confer tell him that he has not that power.

Mr. KNOX. I have the very highest respect for those advising the President of the United States; but if that responsibility were cast upon me, as I have read the Overman bill, in so far as it proposes to authorize the President to utilize and coordinate executive activities, so far as I can see what it means from its language, and so far as I am informed in this particular by those who are back of the bill, I would not hesitate a second to advise the President of the United States that he now fully possesses that power.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am glad to hear the Senator say that. He is a great lawyer, a great statesman, and he has occupied some of the highest offices under this Government with great ability and efficiency. That is his opinion, and I respect it. Others, however, do not think the President has that power; he is doubtful of it himself; but, if he already has the power, who will deny it to him, and why not pass the bill and make sure of it? If he says, "I do not want to be charged with being a dictator, I do not want to give the opportunity to some man to say that I had no authority to do this or do that," why not resolve the doubt in aid of the President, and give him the authority the Senator says he already has? I am glad the Senator from Pennsylvania has said that the President has authority to do everything that my bill proposes, for then, Mr. President, this bill is not the horrid measure that some Senators would make it out to be. If the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks that the President already has the power, what is the matter with the bill? Give the President the authority, hold up his hands, and stop this hamstringing of the great Executive of this country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] if I understood him rightly? He does not think that this bill is confined to the powers which he describes, does he? Am I right in that?

Mr. KNOX. My position, Mr. President, is this—and I think when I stated it the Senator from Massachusetts may not have apprehended what I had in my mind—that so far as this bill empowers or seeks to empower the President of the United States to transfer the performance of a particular duty of one executive officer to another for the purpose of carrying on this war to a victorious end, I say that he has the power to do it. Then, I further added that, as I understand the bill from reading it and from the interpretation placed upon it by those who are responsible for it with whom I have talked, I think he has all the other powers necessary to utilize and coordinate executive work. But that does not, of course, include, Mr. President, for instance, the right to transfer the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I do not think is an executive body, to the Treasury Department, as has been suggested he might do, or the right to transfer the Federal Trade Commission or the Federal Reserve Board to some executive department of the Government. I take it that those are not executive bodies; I take it that they are in a sense legislative bodies, and are carrying out policies inaugurated by Congress. To the extent that this bill should undertake to do that—which has been denied to me by those who are proposing the bill—I will say, as a matter of course, no such power now exists in the presidential office.

Mr. LODGE. If I may ask one more question of the Senator, would it not be possible under this bill as drawn, for example, in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which the Senator has alluded, for the President to take from that commission the valuation of the railroads, which is going on under an act of Congress, and transfer it to some bureau or division of the Treasury? Could he not do that under this bill?

Mr. KNOX. If you were to construe that commission as an administrative commission, he certainly could.

Mr. LODGE. But is the power limited to administrative commissions?

Mr. KNOX. There are two provisions in the bill that describe the nature of the commissions or boards in relation to which transfers may be made. The first——

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question suggested by that of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is answering the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. KNOX. The first is on page 1:

> To make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer.

The second is in the second section:

> That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive—

And then there is inserted, I do not know whether by the committee or not, but it is printed in italics in the bill—> or administrative commissions—

The first section deals solely with executive departments or bureaus or commissions, while the second deals with executive or administrative. Now, if it can be held—and it is a matter open to some doubt, and there are strong reasons to be presented upon both sides of the contention—that the Interstate Commerce Commission is an administrative commission and that in valuing the railroads it is performing an administratve act, then, of course, if this bill became law the President could transfer that power to any other officer or office of the Government that he saw fit. On the other hand, if it is not an administrative commission, but if it is a legislative commission and an administrative commission as well, and in some respects a judicial commission—because its functions are partly of a judicial nature as well as of an administrative and legislative nature—then, a doubt would arise. Personally, I should object to voting for this bill with that provision in it. In this respect the bill should be amended in order to clear up any possible doubt that there might be on that subject in the minds of those who desire to avoid the possibility of such a transfer.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question there. I am not sure but that the Senator was a Member of the Senate and discussed the great interstate-commerce act when it was pending in Congress. I want to ask the Senator, in his judgment, is not the Interstate Commerce Commission an agency of Congress? Congress established it for what purpose? For the purpose of establishing rates according to rules laid down by Congress. Congress can not delegate its powers to a commission, and not being able to delegate its powers, it has appointed this agency for the purpose of fixing rates according to well-defined reasonable rules fixed by Congress itself. Therefore, is it not a congressional agency rather than an executive or an administrative agency?

Mr. KNOX. That is a new term——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has not concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Pennsylvania is answering my question.

Mr. KNOX. Replying to the question of the Senator from North Carolina, it is undoubtedly true with respect to the Interstate Commerce Commission that Congress prescribed a series of rules relating to various branches of the railroad business; for instance, rules as to reasonableness of regulations, as to reasonableness of rates, and all that sort of thing, and delegated to the commission the ascertainment of facts and the application of the rules laid down by Congress to the facts ascertained. I would not call it a "congressional commission," because I think that is a new term in legislation. It is an administrative commission in one sense; it is a legislative commission in another sense, and, as I said a moment ago, it is a judicial commission in another sense; and whether or not it would come under the term "administrative" within the language of this bill is an open question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator remembers, as we all do, the great arguments that centered around that question in connection with the legislation affecting the Interstate Commerce Commission. Congress could not delegate this power except by establishing reasonably well-defined rules and appointing a commission to carry out the will of Congress. Therefore, it does not seem to the distinguished Senator that the President could interfere with such a legislative commission.

Mr. KNOX. I had the honor to be a member of this body at that time and participated in that debate, and the Senator, I am quite sure, will agree with me that we all know a great deal more about the question now than we did then. There have been a great many court decisions since 1906 of a rather radical nature. The Senator will recall that some of the most distinguished Senators in this body challenged the right of Congress to delegate to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix rates, holding that that was a legislative act and could not be delegated. Of course, we have gotten a long way from that, and I do not think that we can safely arrive at a sound conclusion upon this matter by using the lights of 1906.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator. Some of the greatest speeches I ever heard were upon the question of whether we could delegate the power of Congress in that respect. I remember the great speech of the then Senator from Ohio, Mr. Foraker, who did not believe that Congress could take such action; but it seemed to be the unanimous sentiment of Congress, except among the very few who took the same position as the then Senator from Ohio, that the Interstate Commerce Commission was nothing but a legislative agency, created for the purpose of ascertaining the reasonableness of rates and to fix them according to rules laid down by Congress. The point I make is, Why should we talk so much about the Interstate Commerce Commission? The Senator and I agree, but why should all this argument rally around the Interstate Commerce Commission? What is the trouble about that? I do not think the President could do what has been suggested with regard to that commission. I think that is an agency of Congress, and it has become, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, a judicial body; and, of course, the President could not interfere with the judicial department of the Government or with the legislative. When, however, it comes to administrative or executive departments, he ought to have a right to transfer their functions. I asked the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] the other day, provided it was necessary to transfer even the Interstate Commerce Commission and redistribute its functions for the purpose of prosecuting the war and such action was absolutely necessary to save the country, would he do it? Would he give this authority to the President? What was his reply? He said, "Yes; I would do it;" and so I say would every Senator do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would not allow the President to judge of the necessity; I would judge of that myself.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, we have 96 different opinions here about these matters. I know the President would not do it, and I am willing to trust him not to do it. I know he would not do it in the case of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, why not exempt them from the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because I do not propose, as I said to the Senator—and the committee agreed with me—to assume, by adopting his amendment, that the President would do anything like that. I am willing to give him the general power, and I assume, as the Senator from Georgia does, that he will not do any unconstitutional act or any arbitrary act, unless it was necessary to fight this war to a successful conclusion. I have too much confidence in the Commander in Chief, in my great leader, to think about that. I am not willing to put such a provision in the bill to insult him and the American people.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois. I am done, Mr. President.

I ask permission, Mr. President, to print certain extracts and other matter as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

APPENDIX.

UNITED STATES LAWS AUTHORIZING REDISTRIBUTION OF FUNCTIONS AMONG EXECUTIVE AGENCIES AND TRANSFER OF POWERS OR DUTIES FROM ONE DEPARTMENT OR BUREAU TO ANOTHER BY THE PRESIDENT OR THE HEAD OF A DEPARTMENT.

Act of February 14, 1903 (32 Stat., 830, sec. 12): President authorized to "transfer at any time the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work, from the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior, to the Department of Commerce and Labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall be thereby transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof which is so transferred. And all power and authority conferred by law, both supervisory and appellate, upon the department from which such transfer is made, or the Secretary thereof, in relation to the said office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall immediately, when such transfer is so ordered by the President, be fully conferred upon and vested in the Department of Commerce and Labor, or the Secretary thereof, as the case may be, as to the whole or part of such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service so transferred."

Act of April 28, 1908 (35 Stat., 69, sec. 3): President authorized "for any special occasion" to transfer "to the head of another department" the authority conferred upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to issue regulations for the safety of life during regattas or marine parades.

Act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 613): "The duties assigned by law to the Bureau of Equipment shall be distributed among the other bureaus and offices of the Navy Department in such manner as the Secretary of the Navy shall consider expedient and proper during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized and directed to assign and transfer to said other bureaus and offices, respectively, all available funds heretofore and hereby appropriated for the Bureau of Equipment and such civil employees of the bureau as are authorized by law, and when such distribution of duties, funds, and employees shall have been completed, the Bureau of Equipment shall be discontinued as hereinbefore provided." The same provision was repeated for the fiscal years 1912, 1913, and 1914, in the acts of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1273), August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 339), and March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 899).

Act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., 1122, sec. 8): "The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate duplication of service in the various executive departments and establishments of the Government, including bureaus and divisions, and make a report to the President thereon, and the President is hereby authorized, after such report shall have been made to him, whenever he finds such duplications to exist to abolish the same."

LAWS APPLICABLE IN EMERGENCIES ONLY.

Act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 713, sec. 4): President authorized to "utilize the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service in times of threatened or actual war to such extent and in such manner as shall in his judgment promote the public interest without, however, in any wise impairing the efficiency of the service for the purposes for which the same was created and is maintained."

Act of January 28, 1915 (38 Stat., 800): "The Coast Guard * * * shall operate as a part of the Navy, subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, in time of war or when the President shall so direct."

Act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 602): "The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the Navy Department, or of the War Department, such vessels, equipment, stations, and personnel of the Lighthouse Service as he may deem to the best interests of the country, and after such transfer all expenses connected therewith shall be defrayed out of the appropriations for the department to which transfer is made."

Act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87, sec. 16): "The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the War Department, or of the Navy Department, such vessels, equipment, stations, and personnel of the Coast and Geodetic Survey as he may deem to the best interest of the country, and after such transfer all expenses connected therewith shall be defrayed out of the appropriations for the department to which transfer is made."

UNITED STATES LAWS AUTHORIZING DETAILS OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES FROM ONE DEPARTMENT OR BUREAU TO ANOTHER AT THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

I. CIVIL SERVICE.

Revised Statutes, 166, as amended by act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat., 179): "Each head of a department may, from time to time, alter the distribution of the clerks and other employees allowed by law, except such clerks or employees as may be required by law to be exclusively engaged upon some specific work, as he may find it necessary and proper to do, but all details hereunder shall be made by written order of the head of the department, and in no case be for a period of time exceeding 120 days: Provided, That details so made may, on expiration, be renewed from time to time by written order of the head of the department, in each particular case, for periods of not exceeding 120 days."

Act of November 21, 1877 (20 Stat., 3): Heads of departments authorized to detail clerks for temporary service in Surgeon General's office, to furnish information called for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Act of June 2, 1879 (21 Stat., 7, sec. 7): President authorized to detail officers from the various departments for temporary duty under the National Board of Health to enforce quarantine regulations. (This act expired by limitation in 1883.)

Act of February 15, 1893 (27 Stat., 450, sec. 2): President authorized to detail medical officers to consulates to perform duties under quarantine laws.

Act of June 18, 1910 (36 Stat., 556, sec. 16): "The several departments and bureaus of the Government shall detail from time to time such officials and employees" to the commission to investigate railroad stocks and bonds "as may be directed by the President."

Act of September 26, 1914 (38 Stat., 722, sec. 8): "The several departments and bureaus of the Government * * * shall detail from time to time such officials and employees" to the Federal Trade Commission as the President may direct.

Act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat., 729, sec. 4): "The President, upon the request of the [United States Shipping] board, may authorize the detail of officers of the military, naval, or other services of the United States for such duties as the board may deem necessary in connection with its business."

Act of September 8, 1916 (39 State., 797, sec. 707): "The Treasury Department, the Department of Commerce, the Federal Trade Commission, or any other departments, or independent establishments of the Government * * * shall detail, from time to time, such officials and employees" to the United States Tariff Commission as the President may direct.

Act of March 1, 1917 (39 Stat., 950, sec. 3): "The heads of the several departments of the Government may, in their discretion, and shall upon the request of the Secretary of War, detail representatives from their respective departments to assist the Engineers of the Army in the study and examination" of watersheds significant from the standpoint of flood control, "to the end that duplication of work may be avoided and the various services of the Government economically coordinated therein."

II. MILITARY AND NAVAL SERVICE.

R. S. 1437. "The President may detail, temporarily, three competent naval officers for the service of the War Department in the inspection of transport vessels, and for such other services as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

Act of June 16, 1880 (21 Stat. 374): Secretary of War authorized to detail two officers of Ordnance Corps to serve with Geological Survey.

Act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat. 653): President authorized to detail Chief Signal Officer to have charge of Weather Bureau and to assign four other Army officers to that bureau. (Repealed by joint resolution of July 8, 1898 (30 Stat. 752).)

Act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. 399): Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy authorized to detail Army and Navy surgeons to Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Senate amendment No. 72 to the legislative appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1918 was as follows:

"SEC. 8. The President is hereby authorized, during the recess of the Congress, to take action looking to a proper and scientific coordination of the work of the various executive departments of the Government; and he is hereby requested to report upon the question of transfer and consolidation of bureaus, divisions, offices, and other governmental activities, in order that duplication of service may be abolished and extravagance and unnecessary expenditures eliminated."

As agreed to in conference and as it appears in the statutes that provision is as follows:

"SEC. 8. The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate duplication of service in the various executive departments and establishments of the Government, including bureaus and divisions, and make a report to the President thereon, and the President is hereby authorized, after such report shall have been made to him, wherever he finds such duplications to exist to abolish the same. Report of the action taken hereunder shall be made to Congress at its next regular session."

That statute was approved March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., 1122).

(1) In numerous cases more than one bureau or other administrative agency is authorized by law to render the same service. (2) In most of these cases the various duly authorized agencies are ambitious to render all the services within their power. (3) In some cases actual duplication of service has resulted. (4) In a large number of cases the legitimate development of bureaus and other agencies is hampered by the knowledge that it would bring about conflict with the work of other bureaus and agencies. Such conditions result in misdirection of effort and inefficiency.

For example, some duplication of service has arisen between the various scientific and technical bureaus in the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce, and much more might arise if they should use to the fullest extent their existing legal powers and physical equipment. One case in point is that of investigations concerning the sources of supply of various raw materials used in industries connected with the national defense. Thus both the Bureau of Soils in the Department of Agriculture and the Geological Survey in the Department of the Interior might be interested in the sources of supply of potash and might institute investigations with a view to discovering new sources of supply. The same situation exists with respect to investigations concerning the quality of materials. In the comparatively narrow field of testing materials, the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce and the Forest Products Laboratory of the Forestry Service are both empowered and equipped to test timber and paper; the Bureau of Standards and the Bureau of Chemistry are equipped to test leather, the Bureau of Standards and the Bureau of Markets to test textiles, the Bureau of Standards and the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering to test road materials, and the Bureau of Standards and the Reclamation Service to test cement.

In the broader field of the utilization of materials and the improvement of technical processes, the utilization of American clay in the manufacture of high-grade pottery or the improvement of the process of glass making with a view to supplying a better grade of optical glass might be undertaken either by the Bureau of Standards or the Bureau of Mines. Another case where several bureaus might undertake to carry on the same technological study is that of aniline dyes. The Bureau of Standards, the Bureau of Mines, and the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture are all equipped to assist by making scientific researches in the establishment of an American coal-tar dye industry, and each has the legal authority to do so. Moreover, the United States Tariff Commission is charged with the duty of investigating the development of chemical industries in general in this country, including the development of the dye industry, although presumably it would not attempt itself technological researches involving the equipment of additional chemical laboratories.

What is true with respect to sources of supply of raw materials and technological studies in the fabrication of the finished product is also true with respect to the marketing of the products. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has an organization covering the foreign markets of the world, and is capable of studying the opportunities for the development of American foreign trade of all kinds. The Office of Markets of the Department of Agriculture is also interested in the development of foreign markets, particularly in markets for agricultural products, and, to some extent, for manufactured foodstuffs, and even for other commodities, like cotton textiles, the raw material of which is mainly produced on American farms. While the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce does not assume jurisdiction over the foreign marketing of wheat or cotton, and the Office of Markets does not assume jurisdiction over the foreign marketing of manufactured goods containing no raw materials produced on the farm, there is a class of commodities, such as manufactured foodstuffs, where the authority of the two bureaus is not clearly defined.

The situation is further complicated by the existence of the foreign trade advisers in the Department of State. With respect to domestic commerce, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has little actually to do, despite its somewhat indefinite grant of authority. Thus the domestic commerce in manufactured foods is subject principally to the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, and matters relating to domestic commerce in sea foods, other than their inspection under the pure-food law, are dealt with by the Bureau of Fisheries.

Turning from the Government bureaus dealing with the industries of the country to those dealing more directly with the wants of the people, a similar confusion of authority exists. For example, there is a great subject of the public health. The Public Health Service has a broad grant of authority to engage in activities relating to health, exclusive of the health of persons in the military and naval service. The Bureau of Education, however, looks after the health of Indians in Alaska, and the Indian Office after the health of Indians in other parts of the United States. The States Relations Service has a somewhat indefinite grant of authority with respect to the care of the health of farmers, and the Bureau of Mines operates its mine rescue cars and in other ways concerns itself with the health of the mining population. Both the Public Health Service and the Army and Navy health services operate medical schools, and both the Public Health Service and the Army medical service operate hygienic laboratories. Locomotive boilers are inspected by agents of the Interstate Commerce Commission and safety devices designed for the protection of employees in interstate commerce and of the traveling public are also inspected under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Steamboat boilers, however, are inspected by agents of the Steamboat-Inspection Service. The administration of the United States employees' compensation act, applying to civilian employees of the United States, is intrusted to a special commission, but the administration of the soldiers and sailors' insurance law, covering persons now in the military or naval service, is intrusted to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, whilst the payment of pensions to veterans of the Civil War and their dependents (involving duties of much the same general character as those involved in the payment of family allotments and allowances by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to dependents of persons in the military and naval services of the United States in the present war) is the function of a separate pension office.

The Public Health Service is interested in a general way in the prevention of the spread of disease. For example, it has been interested in preventing the spread of bubonic plague by rats and ground squirrels on the Pacific coast and in the spread of various diseases by flies and mosquitoes everywhere. The Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture is also interested in the study of rats and ground squirrels and the Bureau of Entomology in the Department of Agriculture in flies and mosquitoes. Whilst the Biological Survey has a general interest in the wild animals of the United States, jurisdiction over Alaskan fur animals is vested in the Bureau of Fisheries and jurisdiction over the reindeer in Alaska in the Bureau of Education. Whilst the Bureau of Entomology is interested in all kinds of insects, whether noxious to man, to animals, or to the useful plant life of the country, the study of insects injurious to forest trees is a matter of special concern to the Forestry Service.

Turning from health to education, we find that though there is a Federal Bureau of Education with a general authority to study matters in relation thereto, there is also a Children's Bureau with a general authority to study matters relating to the education of children, a Bureau of Immigration with a growing interest in the education of immigrants, a Federal Board of Vocational Education with a special responsibility for the development of agricultural, commercial, and industrial training, a States Relations Service with a further special responsibility concerning the agricultural colleges and extension work in the rural districts, and a Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce with an incipient interest in the training of persons for employment in connection with foreign commerce.

The general subject of prices and the cost of living is one with respect to which a number of bureaus have more or less overlapping authority. The Federal Trade Commission, for example, has a general authority to investigate the reasonableness of prices, and to that end to study cost of production in various industries. But costs of production may also be studied by several of the bureaus which are primarily concerned with the technology of industry. For example, the Bureau of Mines has authority to study the costs of production of coal; the Office of Farm Management has a general authority to study costs of production on the farm; the Forestry Service has authority to study the cost of production of timber; the Bureau of Fisheries presumably has a general authority to study costs of production of fish; the Tariff Commission also, in connection with its general duty of investigating the fitness of customs duties, presumably has the power to study costs of production of protected commodities. Moreover, the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Office of Markets may likewise be interested in the study of market prices and their relation to the cost of living. These are only a few of many instances where duplication of service either has resulted or easily might result if bureau chiefs used their legal powers to the full, regardless of the legitimate development of the activities of other bureaus.

[File S. 3771]

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE SERVICE.

UNITED STATES LAWS AUTHORIZING REDISTRIBUTION OF FUNCTIONS AMONG EXECUTIVE AGENCIES AND TRANSFER OF POWERS OR DUTIES FROM ONE DEPARTMENT OR BUREAU TO ANOTHER BY THE PRESIDENT OR THE HEAD OF A DEPARTMENT.

Act of Feb. 14, 1903 (32 Stat., 830, sec. 12).

President authorized to "transfer at any time the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work from the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior to the Department of Commerce and Labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall be thereby transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof which is so transferred. And all power and authority conferred by law, both supervisory and appellate, upon the department from which such transfer is made, or the Secretary thereof, in relation to the said office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall immediately, when such transfer is so ordered by the President, be fully conferred upon and vested in the Department of Commerce and Labor, or the Secretary thereof, as the case may be, as to the whole or part of such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service so transferred."

Act of Apr. 28, 1908 (35 Stat., 69, sec. 3).

President authorized "for any special occasion" to transfer "to the head of another department" the authority conferred upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to issue regulations for the safety of life during regattas or marine parades.

Act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 613).

"The duties assigned by law to the Bureau of Equipment shall be distributed among the other bureaus and offices of the Navy Department in such manner as the Secretary of the Navy shall consider expedient and proper during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized and directed to assign and transfer to said other bureaus and offices, respectively, all available funds heretofore and hereby appropriated for the Bureau of Equipment and such civil employees of the bureau as are authorized by law, and when such distribution of duties, funds, and employees shall have been completed, the Bureau of Equipment shall be discontinued as hereinbefore provided." The same provision was repeated for the fiscal years 1912, 1913, and 1914, in the acts of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1273), August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 339), and March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 899).

Act of Mar. 3, 1917 (39 Stat., 1122, sec. 8).

"The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate duplication of service in the various executive departments and establishments of the Government, including bureaus and divisions, and make a report to the President thereon, and the President is hereby authorized, after such report shall have been made to him, whenever he finds such duplications to exist to abolish the same."

LAWS APPLICABLE IN EMERGENCIES ONLY.

Act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 713, sec. 4).

President authorized to "utilize the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service in times of threatened or actual war to such extent and in such manner as shall, in his judgment, promote the public interest, without, however, in anywise impairing the efficiency of the service for the purposes for which the same was created and is maintained."

Act of Jan. 28, 1915 (38 Stat., 800).

The Coast Guard * * * shall operate as a part of the Navy, subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, in time of war or when the President shall so direct.

Act of Aug. 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 602).

The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the Navy Department, or of the War Department, such vessels, equipment, stations, and personnel of the Lighthouse Service as he may deem to the best interest of the country, and after such transfer all expenses connected therewith shall be defrayed out of the appropriations for the department to which transfer is made.

Act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87, sec. 16).

The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment a sufficient national emergency exists, to transfer to the service and jurisdiction of the War Department, or of the Navy Department, such vessels, equipment, stations, and personnel of the Coast and Geodetic Survey as he may deem to the best interest of the country, and after such transfer all expenses connected therewith shall be defrayed out of the appropriations for the department to which transfer is made.

[W. H. McClenon, Feb. 9, 1918.]

I. CIVIL SERVICE.

R. S. 166, as amended by act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat., 179).

Each head of a department may, from time to time, alter the distribution of the clerks and other employees allowed by law, except such clerks or employees as may be required by law to be exclusively engaged upon some specific work, as he may find it necessary and proper to do, but all details hereunder shall be made by written order of the head of the department, and in no case be for a period of time exceeding 120 days: Provided, That details so made may, on expiration, be renewed from time to time by written order of the head of the department, in each particular case, for periods of not exceeding 120 days.

Act of Nov. 21, 1877 (20 Stat., 3).

Heads of departments authorized to detail clerks for temporary service in Surgeon General's Office to furnish information called for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Act of June 2, 1879 (21 Stat., 7, sec. 7).

President authorized to detail officers from the various departments for temporary duty under the National Board of Health to enforce quarantine regulations. (This act expired by limitation in 1883.)

Act of February 15, 1893 (27 Stat., 450, sec. 2).

President authorized to detail medical officers to consulates to perform duties under quarantine laws.

Act of June 18, 1910 (36 Stat., 556, sec. 16).

"The several departments and bureaus of the Government shall detail from time to time such officials and employees," to the commission to investigate railroad stocks and bonds, "as may be directed by the President."

Act of September 26, 1914 (38 Stat., 722, sec. 8).

"The several departments and bureaus of the Government * * * shall detail from time to time such officials and employees" to the Federal Trade Commission "as the President may direct."

Act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat., 729, sec. 4).

"The President, upon the request of the [United States Shipping] board, may authorize the detail of officers of the military, naval, or other services of the United States for such duties as the board may deem necessary in connection with its business."

Act of September 8, 1916 (39 Stat., 797, sec. 707).

"The Treasury Department, the Department of Commerce, the Federal Trade Commission, or any other departments or independent establishments of the Government * * * shall detail, from time to time, such officials and employees" to the United States Tariff Commission "as the President may direct."

Act of March 1, 1917 (39 Stat., 950, sec 3).

"The heads of the several departments of the Government may, in their discretion, and shall upon the request of the Secretary of War, detail representatives from their respective departments to assist the engineers of the Army in the study and examination" of watersheds significant from the standpoint of flood control, "to the end that duplication of work may be avoided and the various services of the Government economically coordinated therein."

II. MILITARY AND NAVAL SERVICE.

(R. S. 1437.)

"The President may detail, temporarily, three competent naval officers for the service of the War Department in the inspection of transport vessels, and for such other services as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

Act of June 16, 1880 (21 Stat., 274).

Secretary of War authorized to detail two officers of Ordnance Corps to serve with Geological Survey.

Act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 653).

President authorized to detail Chief Signal Officer to have charge of Weather Bureau, and to assign four other Army officers to that bureau. [Repealed by joint resolution of July 8, 1898 (30 Stat., 752)].

Act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 399).

Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy authorized to detail Army and Navy surgeons to Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

[W. H. McClenon, Feb. 9, 1918.]

A MEMORANDUM CONCERNING DUPLICATION OF SERVICE.

(1) In numerous cases more than one bureau or other administrative agency is authorized by law to render the same service. (2) In most of these cases the various duly authorized agencies are ambitious to render all the services within their power. (3) In some cases actual duplication of service has resulted (4) In a large number of cases the legitimate development of bureaus and other agencies is hampered by the knowledge that it would bring about conflict with the work of other bureaus and agencies. Such conditions result in misdirection of effort and inefficiency.

For example, some duplication of service has arisen between the various scientific and technical bureaus in the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce, and much more might arise if they should use to the fullest extent their existing legal powers and physical equipment. One case in point is that of investigations concerning the sources of supply of various raw materials used in industries connected with the national defense. Thus, both the Bureau of Soils in the Department of Agriculture and the Geological Survey in the Department of the Interior might be interested in the sources of supply of potash and might institute investigations with a view to discovering new sources of supply. The same situation exists with respect to investigations concerning the quality of materials. In the comparatively narrow field of testing materials the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce and the forest products laboratory of the Forestry Service are both empowered and equipped to test timber and paper, the Bureau of Standards and the Bureau of Chemistry are equipped to test leather, the Bureau of Standards and the Bureau of Markets to test textiles, the Bureau of Standards and the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering to test road materials, and the Bureau of Standards and the Reclamation Service to test cement.

In the broader field of the utilization of materials and the improvement of technical processes the utilization of American clay in the manufacture of high-grade pottery or the improvement of the process of glass making, with a view to supplying a better grade of optical glass, might be undertaken either by the Bureau of Standards or the Bureau of Mines. Another case where several bureaus might undertake to carry on the same technological study is that of aniline dyes. The Bureau of Standards, the Bureau of Mines, and the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture are all equipped to assist by making scientific researches in the establishment of an American coal tar dye industry, and each has the legal authority to do so. Moreover, the United States Tariff Commission is charged with the duty of investigating the development of chemical industries in general in this country, including the development of the dye industry, although presumably it would not attempt itself technological researches involving the equipment of additional chemical laboratories.

What is true with respect to sources of supply of raw materials and technological studies in the fabrication of the finished products is also true with respect to the marketing of the products. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has an organization covering the foreign markets of the world and is capable of studying the opportunities for the development of American foreign trade of all kinds. The Office of Markets of the Department of Agriculture is also interested in the development of foreign markets, particularly in markets for agricultural products, and, to some extent, for manufactured foodstuffs, and even for other commodities, like cotton textiles, the raw material of which is mainly produced on American farms. While the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce does not assume jurisdiction over the foreign marketing of wheat or cotton, and the Office of Markets does not assume jurisdiction over the foreign marketing of manufactured goods containing no raw materials produced on the farm, there is a class of commodities, such as manufactured foodstuffs, where the authority of the two bureaus is not clearly defined.

The situation is further complicated by the existence of the foreign trade advisers in the Department of State. With respect to domestic commerce, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has little actually to do, despite its somewhat indefinite grant of authority. Thus the domestic commerce in manufactured foods is subject principally to the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, and matters relating to domestic commerce in sea foods other than their inspection under the pure-food law are dealt with by the Bureau of Fisheries.

Turning from the Government bureaus dealing with the industries of the country to those dealing more directly with the wants of the people, a similar confusion of authority exists. For example, there is a great subject of the public health. The Public Health Service has a broad grant of authority to engage in activities relating to health, exclusive of the health of persons in the military and naval service. The Bureau of Education, however, looks after the health of Indians in Alaska and the Indian Office after the health of Indians in other parts of the United States. The States Relations Service has a somewhat indefinite grant of authority with respect to the care of the health of farmers, and the Bureau of Mines operates its mine-rescue cars and in other ways concerns itself with the health of the mining population. Both the Public Health Service and the Army and Navy Health Services operate medical schools, and both the Public Health Service and the Army Medical Service operate hygienic laboratories. Locomotive boilers are inspected by agents of the Interstate Commerce Commission and safety devices designed for the protection of employees in interstate commerce and of the traveling public are also inspected under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Steamboat boilers, however, are inspected by agents of the Steamboat-Inspection Service.

The administration of the United States employees' compensation act, applying to civilian employees of the United States, is intrusted to a special commission, but the administration of the soldiers' and sailors' insurance law, covering persons now in the military or naval service, is intrusted to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, whilst the payment of pensions to veterans of the Civil War and their dependents—involving duties of much the same general character as those involved in the payment of family allotments and allowances by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to dependents of persons in the military and naval services of the United States in the present war—is the function of a separate Pension Office.

The Public Health Service is interested in a general way in the prevention of the spread of disease. For example, it has been interested in preventing the spread of bubonic plague by rats and ground squirrels on the Pacific coast, and in the spread of various diseases by flies and mosquitoes everywhere. The Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture is also interested in the study of rats and ground squirrels, and the Bureau of Entomology in the Department of Agriculture in flies and mosquitoes. Whilst the Biological Survey has a general interest in the wild animals of the United States, jurisdiction over Alaskan fur animals is vested in the Bureau of Fisheries, and jurisdiction over the reindeer in Alaska in the Bureau of Education. Whilst the Bureau of Entomology is interested in all kinds of insects, whether noxious to man, to animals, or to the useful plant life of the country, the study of insects injurious to forest trees is a matter of special concern to the Forestry Service.

Turning from health to education, we find that though there is a Federal Bureau of Education with a general authority to study matters in relation thereto, there is also a Children's Bureau with a general authority to study matters relating to the education of children, a Bureau of Immigration with a growing interest in the education of immigrants, a Federal Board of Vocational Education with a special responsibility for the development of agricultural, commercial, and industrial training, a States Relations Service with a further special responsibility concerning the agricultural colleges and extension work in the rural districts, and a Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce with an incipient interest in the training of persons for employment in connection with foreign commerce.

The general subject of prices and the cost of living is one with respect to which a number of bureaus have more or less overlapping authority. The Federal Trade Commission, for example, has a general authority to investigate the reasonableness of prices, and to that end to study costs of production in various industries. But costs of production may also be studied by several of the bureaus which are primarily concerned with the technology of industry. For example, the Bureau of Mines has authority to study the costs of production of coal; the Office of Farm Management has a general authority to study costs of production on the farm; the Forestry Service has authority to study the cost of production of timber; the Bureau of Fisheries presumably has a general authority to study costs of production of fish; the Tariff Commission also, in connection with its general duty of investigating the fitness of customs duties, presumably has the power to study costs of production of protected commodities. Moreover, the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Office of Markets may likewise be interested in the study of market prices and their relation to the cost of living. These are only a few of many instances where duplication of service either has resulted or easily might result if bureau chiefs used their legal powers to the full, regardless of the legitimate development of the activities of other bureaus.

—

[From the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, New York, Friday, Mar. 22, 1918.]

CONCENTRATING EXECUTIVE WAR POWER.

Coincident with a conference of the President with the heads of the War Industries Board and of various bureaus in different departments having to do with war activities, the so-called Overman bill has been reported to the Senate from its Judiciary Committee. The vote of the committee for reporting the bill as it stands was 11 to 7, eight of the former number being from Democrats and three from Republicans and two of the latter from Democrats and five from Republicans. This is not such evidence of nonpartisanship as is desirable, but it indicates a spirit of independence of party motives which shows signs of progress.

The main purpose of this bill, as stated in a preliminary clause, is "for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces." This is certainly a very important purpose at the present time, and the best way for its achievement is to be desired. How is it to be done? By hampering the Commander in Chief or by giving him full control of the agencies devised for accomplishing the objects in view?

What is proposed is to authorize him "to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purpose of this act." For this he may make such regulations and issue such orders as he may deem necessary. There is a proviso that the authority granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war, and another that the act shall remain in force for so much of a year following the proclamation of peace as the President may designate.

No doubt a variety of objections will be raised to this, or to anything else making Executive action more effective, but it seems to be believed at Washington that it will be passed without material change or any considerable negative vote. It ought to be without any prolonged debate or the too familiar use of excited language. There is really in it no occasion for getting excited. It confers no increased Executive power, and would only concentrate its direction and use, so as to make it more prompt and effective instead of running over red tape through a complex variety of machines and coming out in a snarl. The various parts of this machinery are created by legislative action and may be increased or diminished in number or capacity and modified in functions. The great need is to have them work in harmony to accomplish the desired results as perfectly and promptly as may be in a continuous and necessary service. If it were a private business, there would be no doubt or difference of opinion about it. Why in a public service of so much consequence? Are private business men so much more trustworthy than public servants?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS. I did not rise to take the floor or to address myself at this time to the bill, but to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], in connection with the colloquy between him and the Senator from North Carolina, as to the construction to be placed upon the pending bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked the Senator from North Carolina, as a test of the construction of the bill, if I did not misunderstand him, what particular departments could be consolidated or transferred under the bill that could not now be consolidated or transferred by Executive order of the President in the execution of his duties as Commander in Chief. May I ask, does the Senator from Pennsylvania assume that, under the existing law, without the passage of the pending measure, the duties of the Quartermaster General in connection with purchases for the Government in his department, such as clothing; the duties of the commissary officer; and the duties of the Chief of Ordnance in connection with the purchase of ordnance and the letting of contracts—does the Senator assume those duties now could be taken from these officers and coordinated in a single head by the President's order and the power be given to make contracts and execute such purchases without some act of legislation?

Mr. KNOX. To begin with, the Senator from Illinois entirely misapprehended the question——

Mr. LEWIS. That may be.

Mr. KNOX. That I put to the Senator from North Carolina. What I asked the Senator from North Carolina was this: I asked him would he be willing to cite a single instance where the transfer of the functions of one executive branch of the Government to another was necessary for carrying on the war that the President under existing law and under his authority as Chief Executive did not have the power to make the transfer? That is not the question that has been put to me now by the Senator from Illinois.

I perhaps can make myself a little more clear by putting it in another way. There is a marked difference between delegating to an individual, whether he be in the Quartermaster General's Department or in the State Department or in the Interior Department, the performance of a specific act, and transferring the functions and duties of one of those departments to another department. My allegation as to the President's power as Chief Executive relates to his power to call upon individuals to perform specific acts.

Why, Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me to go on for just a moment, within my own experience I have known of hundreds of cases where the President of the United States has designated to one Cabinet officer the functions or duties in a specific matter that naturally and normally devolved upon another Cabinet officer. I have known instances where questions had been brought before the Cabinet by one member of the Cabinet that contained points of interest that affected other departments than his own and the President has directed the two or three of them to get together, to coordinate upon that subject, and to present a joint conclusion for his decision. So I mean that by establishing within a department by an Executive order a rule that all subjects of a certain character shall be dealt with under the direction of a certain individual or a board of individuals, whether he takes that individual or those individuals out of that particular department or takes them off the highway, the President's authority is supreme; all that the President has to do is to make the order that it shall be done in that way; and every faithful and loyal employee of the Government will heartily fall in line and support him. If he does not, there is a way to dispose of that type of official.

Mr. LEWIS. Now, Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, may I test the distinction he makes by an inquiry? Assume that the President would, as Commander in Chief, have it in mind under this bill to consolidate the purchasing powers of the commissary officer and of the quartermaster officer in a single body, for reasons of economy, or in order that he might have a person schooled and skilled in the subject matter of purchases and that he might get away from those questions that have been raised here on this floor and with regard to which much evidence has been shown of considerable lack of experience, does the Senator not recognize that this bill would give the President power where he would not now have it under existing law, because of statutes specifically defining the duties of the Quartermaster General and the power of the Commissary General?

Mr. KNOX. Perhaps I have subjected myself to this cross-examination by having made a very innocent and simple inquiry of the Senator from North Carolina, and I will answer the Senator only in a general way. I do not have the honor of a very extended personal acquaintaince with the President of the United States; but if he has one-half the ability and the ingenuity with which I credit him, the specific thing mentioned by the Senator from Illinois or any other specific thing that is necessary to be done in the executive offices he can bring about.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me, that I may ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina, having charge of the bill. I will cover the question myself later.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Pennsylvania, having stated that the President has this power, will the Senator kindly cite me to any statute anywhere that gives him such power?

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator from North Carolina will hark back to the question that I have put to him two or three times and cite an instance where the President wants to do something in order to carry on this war that he does not have the power to do, I will undertake to answer his question. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the Senator has said to the Senator from Illinois that the President has certain powers that he could exercise. Now, if there is such a power—if the President has the right to do the things that the Senator from Pennsylvania says he has the right to do—I should be greatly obliged if the Senator would cite to me any law upon the statute books that authorizes him to do it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, replying to the Senator's question, there is a law. It is not upon the statute books. It is written in the Constitution of the United States.

The President is constantly being referred to in debate as performing the function of executing the laws. He has a larger and a more definite function. He executes his office as President, and he takes a peculiar oath—an oath that no other officer of the United States takes. He takes an oath to execute faithfully the office of President. Now, the office of President is not limited to executing the laws. The President is no mere supermarshal or sheriff. He has certain functions to perform in the execution of the laws, but he has higher and broader and greater, if less definite, functions as the Chief Executive of the United States; and as the Chief Executive of the United States it is his duty, his power, and his right to coordinate all of the instrumentalities that Congress has placed in his hands to carry on the executive departments, and all of the instrumentalities and powers that have been placed in his hands to carry on this war, and to see that individuals do as he directs; and, in faith, he has done so. He has done so time and time again, and, so far as I know, without just criticism.

Here within the last week or two, when the aircraft deficiencies were brought to light, and our great disappointments were pointed out to us, does the President send to the Secretary of the Interior, or the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy to take charge of the aircraft business, and make an investigation, and report what shall be done? No. He sends for a Democratic politician in California and another gentleman who is in no way connected with the Government. I am not reflecting upon his judgment in selecting the gentleman from California, but I just happen to know of him as a leading Democratic politician and an able lawyer. But he is a man unconnected with the Government of the United States; and the report of that board—that board of two men, neither of whom is connected with the Government of the United States—will be the report that will determine governmental activities in relation to our air fleet.

Need I point, Mr. President, to the functions—the superfunctions—performed for this Government, and performed ably, so far as I know, by Col. House? What powers have not been vested in Col. House to represent the dignity and the sovereignty and the might of this Government in the courts of Europe, in the most delicate matters? Of that I am making no complaint. I am only trying to illustrate that the greater includes the less. If the President may do all of these greater things without a specific statute, if he may do them all without seeking from Congress specific authority, why may he not do the lesser things with respect to utilizing, coordinating, and directing those who are placed under him for the very purpose of enabling him to perform the detail of his duties and responsibilities?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania is always so fair and so frank that I am a little bit astonished at him.

Mr. KNOX. I hope that is not unusual.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see why he should bring in Col. House. No; I am very fond of the Senator, and I am really surprised that he should bring in the name of Col. House, or Mr. Denman, or anyone else. I was asking him a frank question of law. I was asking his opinion as a lawyer.

Now, the Senator was the great adviser of Mr. Taft. He was Secretary of State. He was Attorney General under Mr. Roosevelt. He was Secretary of State, and I honor him as a great Secretary. But Mr. Taft had his Cabinet around him. He sent a message to the Senate, which I have cited here, stating that the country had the most unscientific system of government on earth, and that he wanted an investigation held so that he could see what to do, and that there was duplication of work everywhere. Now, if the President had the power to do what the Senator says, why should he be coming to Congress asking Congress for a law to do that which he says he had the power to do?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it occurs to me that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has not quite made the distinction that ought to be made between a situation such as he mentions—the general exercise of authority over an office and the general executive powers which the President may possess that do not conflict with some statute.

If there is a statute enacted by Congress which requires that certain duties shall be performed by certain departments or heads of departments, that certain functions must be performed by certain officials, the Senator will at once admit that the President can not ignore or override the express provisions of the statute. If there is no statute to the contrary the President may do the various things which the Senator has indicated he may do. He may select the head of one department and assign to him certain work and certain duties and ask him to do that, even though ordinarily they fall under the head of some other department. But if there is a statute which says that those duties must be performed by a certain officer, then, of course, the President can not assign those duties to some other officer or appoint some other officer to perform those duties; and it is to meet that situation that this bill is proposed. It is intended to make it unnecessary, when the President wants to accomplish a certain important piece of work, for him to search out the statutes to see whether or not, if he does the thing he wants to do and feels that it is necessary to do, he is violating a statute somewhere. It ought not to be incumbent upon him to take the time to search through the books to see whether some statute stands across his pathway when he is endeavoring to conduct the affairs of this Nation in this great crisis. If those statutes do exist this law gives the authority to the President, notwithstanding such statutes as might ordinarily interfere, to do the things that are needful and that are helpful in this emergency.

For instance, and just to illustrate, only a few days ago—in fact, on the 23d of this month—the Senate passed a bill, S. 3982, which provides that—

So much of section 1133 of the Revised Statutes—

And there is an express statute enacted by Congress—

as restricts the purchase and distribution of military stores and supplies and the work of construction and repair to officers of the Quartermaster Corps be, and the same is hereby, suspended for the period of the present war.

Now, we have found it necessary to pass, and we have deliberately passed, a special act to suspend a certain section of the Revised Statutes which stood in the way of efficient administration. We do not want to have to be doing that every day, or once a week, or even once a month. To avoid doing that sort of thing this general bill is proposed, and it meets the situation. It makes it unnecessary for special acts to be brought in here from time to time amending, suspending, or altering some provision of some law which we have heretofore passed; and it is only in case a statute limits the power of the President or vests the authority somewhere else that he is unable to act.

In all other respects I quite agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that the President's power is practically unlimited, but when Congress has by legislation prescribed certain things that must be done by certain departments or certain officers, the President can not order that to be done in some other way, although he may find it absolutely necessary that it should be done otherwise; and, as the Senate found in the case of the particular bill to which I referred, which has passed the Senate, he found it necessary to suspend during the period of the war certain sections of the Revised Statutes. We have been doing it right along. There are dozens of such special acts upon the statute books. This is to avoid that sort of thing and the delay consequent upon it, because these acts can not be passed on the minute.

Senators say: "Well, after these things arise, and the questions are presented to the Senate, we are ready to stand behind the President and pass such legislation as will meet the situation." But a bill is introduced. It goes to a committee. The committee takes it up maybe within a week, maybe within 10 days or two weeks, and then it is reported back to the Senate. It goes on the calendar. It may be here two or three weeks or a month, and finally it is passed. In the meantime the public interests suffer. It is that sort of situation that this bill is intended to meet; and I think a clear distinction should be drawn between it and the matter submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had reconsidered the vote by which it disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The message also announced that the House returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, with the Senate amendments and accompanying papers.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senate to lay aside this bill (H. R. 8753), without objection——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We object.

Mr. OVERMAN. To take up, I want to say to the Senator from Georgia, the most important bill, I think, that has come before the Senate this session—Order of Business 319.

Mr. KIRBY. What is it?

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator move to take up that bill instead of the other?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I am going to ask that this bill be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. GALLINGER. What bill does the Senator refer to?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the bill reported out unanimously from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. LODGE. I think I know the bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to know how long it is contemplated that this second bill will require the attention of the Senate. I believe the present bill is the most important legislation that is before Congress at this time, and if it is liable to be displaced long by the other bill my purpose is to object to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think they are both very important; but the Attorney General is very anxious that the bill to which I refer shall be passed at once, for the reason that the bond sale begins on the 6th of April. Unless the Senate passes this bill before the 6th we will have practically no law on the subject.

Mr. STONE. What is it?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will state the title of it in a minute, as soon as it is brought to me. It is in the interest of selling the bonds.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should not object to taking up the bond bill. It ought to be passed immediately.

Mr. OVERMAN. Immediately.

Mr. LODGE. And it ought to become law before the 6th. Is that the bill to which the Senator refers?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the bill which I am trying to get up, in order that we may have a sale of bonds.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator said it was a bill reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not mean that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I really thought I had the floor at first, but——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We object to the substitution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I may move to take it up, anyway, because Senators will see the importance of it. It is a bill with regard to the sale of these bonds. I will ask that this bill be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator means the bill reported this morning from the Finance Committee, does he not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no. I mean the bill reported on yesterday from the Judiciary Committee affecting the bonds.

Mr. LODGE. That is not the bond bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERMAN. I refer to the bill that I asked to have published in the RECORD and printed. The clerks will understand the bill I mean.

Mr. STONE. How does that bill relate to bonds?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not yield the floor until I get the bill. I do not yield to anybody now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The inquiry is this: Has a request been made for unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to read the title of the bill, so that Senators will understand it before they object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is entitled—

An act to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator said it was a bond bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understood the Senator to say that he was going to ask to consider a bond bill. That is not a bond bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no. I said a bill connected with the sale of the liberty bonds.

Mr. LODGE. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator misunderstood me.

I want to say to the Senators that we have had seven or eight trials in this country of criminals who interfered with the sale of liberty loans and with the draft; and some judges have held, I think wrongly, that these persons could not even be convicted for doing everything in their power to prevent the sale of liberty bonds by making speeches all over this country. We want to make the law fuller, and have a supplemental act. Inasmuch as the bonds go on sale on the 6th of this month, we want this bill passed. The department is very anxious to have it passed by Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask my colleague if he will not yield to me to make a report of the bond bill, so that we may first pass the bond bill which he is talking about?

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course that is probably even more necessary than this one. I yield to my colleague to make a report.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. SIMMONS. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, with amendments, the so-called bond bill, and I submit a report (No. 351) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina reports favorably, from the Committee on Finance, a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I now ask my colleague if he will not consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business in order that we may proceed to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, of course, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The senior Senator from North Carolina now asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been stated by the Secretary. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes," which has been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would not have injected this bill into the situation that has developed here this afternoon but for the fact that the circumstances are such as to make it exceedingly important that it should be acted upon at once. I will state the cause of this urgency. This bill is a House bill. The Committee on Finance, to which it was referred, has made several amendments to it. If those amendments should be adopted by the Senate, as I anticipate they will be, it will be necessary for the bill to go back to the House for further action. If the House should decline to accept the amendments, it would then have to go to a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. If this process must be gone through with—and the probabilities are that it will have to be—the chances are that the 6th of April will arrive before the bill can become a law.

The Secretary of the Treasury thinks—and in that opinion the Finance Committee entirely concurs—that it is very important that the bill should become a law before the 6th day of this month, because on that day he will offer these liberty bonds it authorizes for sale. Elaborate machinery has been devised, and is in course of execution, to hold on that day in every town and hamlet throughout the United States patriotic liberty bond meetings. It is expected that at these meetings these bonds will be offered for sale, and that at each of these meetings subscriptions will be solicited and urged and the campaign started with a vigorous impetus. Of course it would be embarrassing to ask for subscriptions to these bonds before they have been authorized and the rate of interest established and fixed. For these reasons I am going to ask the Senate not only to take up this bill this afternoon but, if necessary, to remain in session a little later than usual, in order that we may, if possible, reach a vote this afternoon, so that the bill may get to the House of Representatives on to-morrow.

Mr. President, I will detain the Senate only a few minutes in explanation of the provisions of the bill and the amendments proposed by the Finance Committee to it.

This bill takes the form of an amendment to the bond act approved September 24, 1917. That is the act authorizing the second liberty bond issue.

I will briefly enumerate the essential provisions of the bill. The bill provides for an increase in the amount of liberty bonds authorized by the act of September 24, 1917, from $7,558,000,000, in round figures, to $12,000,000,000. That is to say, it authorizes an additional issue of these bonds amounting in the aggregate to, in round numbers, $4,500,000,000.

The bill also fixes the rate of interest which this new issue shall bear at 4¼ per cent, being an increase of one-quarter of 1 per cent over the rate prescribed in that act. It also authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a part of these bonds—as to what part, he is permitted to exercise his discretion—payable in foreign moneys. I wish to make it clear that of the total increase authorized by the bill, namely, four and a half billion dollars, three billions is for domestic purposes and one billion and a half to extend credits to our allies in the war.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. At this point I will inform the Senator that I am requested by those interested in this measure to interrogate him as to the following sought information:

The Senator has just concluded that paragraph of his lucid presentation showing that this bill contemplates extending to the allies the loan of a certain sum of money. May I ask the Senator if there is any provision in the bill which calls for the allies spending that money in the United States?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, I ask the able Senator if he knows of any understanding whereby I will be justified in saying to those who object to this bill on the ground that, so far as the loan extended to the allies is concerned, the money is to be expended out of the United States, in violation of what they say was a previous understanding as published generally to the public—that there is an understanding which would practically call, in honor, for the expenditure in the United States of this money which we are loaning to the allies?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think all the loans made by the United States to the allies have been spent in the purchase of supplies and materials in this country. These loans are to extend credits in this country to the allies, and the purpose of this provision in the present bill is to further extend their credits. It is expected, as the Senator says was understood, that it will be spent in this country. I understand that the previous loans have been used in paying for purchases or expenses incurred in this country and that they were sought and made to enable our allies to meet these obligations in this country.

Mr. LEWIS. Thanking the Senator, then, it is the Senator's understanding that the spirit of this advance to the allies is upon the theory that the money is to be expended in the United States?

Mr. KING. May I suggest a thought to the Senator? I do so because I may have received an erroneous impression from his reply to the Senator from Illinois. I sincerely hope that this body will not go on record in support of a proposition that would restrict our allies in the use of any money loaned or credit extended to them. They should be permitted to make such use of money or credits as their necessities require. It is a painful thing to me to have it suggested that we shall determine the use to which our allies shall put the credits or loans made to them. I do not see how any patriotic person who buys liberty bonds could demand a limitation upon the conduct of our allies in expending money loaned or credits extended to them. If they wish to expend it here, so much the better; if they need to spend it in France or wherever it may be deemed proper to advance our cause and their cause and the cause of humanity, speaking for myself I should feel ashamed to impose any limitations upon them.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator did not understand me to say that there was any limitation imposed in any legislation that we passed?

Mr. KING. No; I did not so understand the Senator, but——

Mr. SIMMONS. There was no limitation imposed in the law. The act provides for extending to the allies a certain amount of credit. What I did say was that my understanding is that up to this time the moneys that have been advanced to them have been expended in this country.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, if a case should arise in which the allies need a part of this money for use abroad in the prosecution of the war the Secretary of the Treasury would have authority to act in that case as his judgment might dictate, because there is nothing in the law to limit his discretion in this respect. But that condition has not arisen up to this time as far as I know.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not want any impression to arise here from the question propounded by the distinguished Senator from Illinois or the reply thereto by the able Senator from North Carolina that this Government in any money which it loaned to the allies or any credits extended would limit the use to which it would be placed other than that it should contribute to the prosecution of the war. I think that the allies ought to be permitted to employ what we advance to them as they please, because we know they are fighting our battles as well as their own.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator I know of no request of the allies for credit except for the purpose of meeting their obligations growing out of war purchases and expenditures in this country.

Mr. KING. But if they needed money or credits to meet obligations at home or elsewhere.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, there is nothing in the law to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from extending credit to them. But I do not think he will extend it unless it was shown clearly that the money was to be used in some way contributory or necessary to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. KING. Obviously, and I think that is what the money is desired for; but I should not wish the impression to go out that we are loaning this money to the allies "with a string to it," namely, that they must spend every dollar of it in this country.

They might avail themselves of the credits which we give them in meeting obligations incurred in Cuba or South America. We might be able with trade balances to settle their liabilities in neutral countries, liabilities created in the purchase of articles imperatively demanded in the war.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield further to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Since the Senator from Utah has alluded to my query to the Senator from North Carolina in charge of the bill, I would have him understand my position, and a single expression will conclude it. Since the understanding with the allies that as to money given by us on credit, as the Senator from North Carolina correctly describes it, was to be expended in the United States and the people of the United States then, in understanding, authorized us, their representatives, to provide the money, we should then be sure that the thing we are doing in advancing this money without the consent of our constituents is along the line of the understanding upon which they are lending the money.

I therefore will insist, so far as I am concerned, that since that understanding has been entered into that the allies are to spend this money in this country, it being our people's money, and as we are paying our own debts as well as we may, we should have full compliance with that understanding.

But if the time shall come, as the Senator from North Carolina would say, that we give the money to the allies to do as pleases them, that should be spread to the public to show that it was a gift or a loan with which to do as they pleased, but it ought not to be confused here. This measure should be clear, and the Senator from North Carolina, I think, has made it very clear.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to add that the allies in the first instance only asked of us credit for the purpose of financing their purchases in this country. They have never asked that the object and purpose of the loan be extended beyond that contained in the original request, so far as I know. If the allies shall come and show us a situation that makes it necessary or desirable in the interest of the common cause that a part of this money shall be expended outside of the United States, there is nothing in the law to prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from agreeing to a proposition of that sort, and I have no reason to believe he would withhold his assent to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what the Senator from North Carolina has stated is true; but I want to go still further and say to the Senator from Illinois that financial conditions of the world to-day, the distribution of the gold of the world, would prevent the Government of the United States from lending to the allies the amount of money that she is lending unless it were for goods manufactured in the United States.

We have only $3,000,000,000 worth of gold in the United States, which is one-quarter of the gold of the world, and if we loaned our gold to our allies we would have little to issue Federal reserve bank notes on, and before this war is concluded I look for large issues of such notes.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think I can truthfully say that the amount which will be advanced to the allies by the United States Government will be the amount of goods that they purchase in the United States. We are not allowing gold to be shipped out of the United States to-day, and we are not going to allow it in the near future.

The balance of trade between the United States and our allies has got to be settled by loans to the allies, as the balance of trade is in our favor, and it is a physical impossibility for England or France or Italy or any of our allies to advance money to pay balances that are adverse to them. They have not got the gold to do so; and the only way left for us to do is to advance loans to them to the amount of goods that they purchase in this country. This we have been doing and will continue to do.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah, because I thoroughly agree with what the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said, Does the Senator mean that we have reached a situation where the allies must have money, which money may not be necessarily expended in this country, and that under this loan we can not give it to them?

Mr. SMOOT. No; there is nothing in the law or in this bill providing that.

Mr. KENYON. What is the contract the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] speaks of?

Mr. SMOOT. It is understood generally, I believe, that we are going to advance $500,000,000 a month to our allies, because that is about the amount of the purchases that all our allies make in this country.

I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that England will take care of her local credit, just the same as we will, by the sale of bonds and certificates of indebtedness, and the bonds, to a large extent, will be the basis of the issuing of Federal reserve bank notes.

Mr. KENYON. What about France?

Mr. SMOOT. France in exactly the same way and Italy in the same way. So far as their local financial affairs are concerned, they are not asking us to help them as yet; they do not need it. As long as the people of France are content with the security of the whole government back of the issues that France offers for sale there will be no trouble. It is the same with England and it is the same with Germany. The German people are to-day buying German bonds, although they know that there is issued twelve times the amount of government obligations against the gold held by Germans as compared with the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, this is not a practical question which we have been discussing. None of our allies have ever asked us for any money for any other purpose than to pay their bills here, and there is no intimation or suggestion of any kind that they will do so with reference to this loan.

The bill again provides that this issue of bonds, which is to be known as the third liberty bond issue, shall be nonconvertible into any future issue bearing a higher rate of interest.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Is the provision for 4¼ per cent interest essential in order to float the bonds?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it is the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury that it might be difficult to place this large amount of bonds just at this time, with last issue somewhat below par, at the rate of 4 per cent, that being the rate borne by the last liberty bonds. He does believe, however, that by increasing the rate a quarter of 1 per cent and providing a sinking fund, as proposed in this bill, for the purchase of these bonds to stabilize the market it will be quite easy for him to float this loan at 4¼ per cent, the rate fixed in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I do not put my judgment, of course, against that of the Secretary of the Treasury, but I believe the bonds could have been floated at 4 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. That may be true, but the Secretary of the Treasury apprehended and told the committee there might be difficulty in floating them under the circumstances at that rate. Personally I believe that it might be accomplished through appeals to the aroused patriotism of our people; but I do not think it would be an easy thing to do at that rate, especially in view of the fact that these bonds are subject to certain Federal taxes, which, of course, indirectly reduces the rate of interest, and the fact that the fours are now slightly below par. Besides the nonconvertibility of these particular bonds into bonds bearing a higher interest rate take from them an important incentive in the purchase of the two former issues. I think the Secretary feels confident that if it is necessary hereafter to issue more of these bonds, as it doubtless will be, it will not be necessary to increase the rate of interest.

The 4 per cent liberty bonds that have already been issued are convertible into these 4¼ per cent bonds. Those that have not been issued will when issued bear the 4¼ per cent rate. The 3½ per cent bonds, under the contract written in the bonds, are convertible into any subsequent issue at a higher interest rate. So they are not foreclosed as to further convertibility.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. The 3½ per cent bonds, of course, would not be subject to their exemption if converted into 4¼ bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course they would not. The contract then would be according to the terms of the 4¼ per cent bonds. The bill also provides for increasing the certificates of indebtedness authorized to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury from $4,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000. This is a very large increase, it is true, but an analysis and study of the financial situation just at this time will make it apparent to any Senator that there is ample justification for this increase. The Secretary of the Treasury in the next fiscal year is going to be compelled to resort to the issue of these certificates to a very much greater extent than he has been during the present fiscal year, and for that reason we felt that the law should authorize the liberal margin specified in the bill.

The bill as it originally passed the House contained a section known as section 5, prohibiting the States and subdivisions from taxing these bonds in the hands of the banks through the device of taxing the shares of stock in national banks or other banks and trust companies. Before that bill reached the Senate it was recalled, and, I believe, recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that committee struck out this provision and inserted as a substitute the provisions which now appear in the House bill as section 5, and which your committee has stricken out.

Your committee thought if we should adopt this section, either as originally agreed upon and passed by the House or the substitute finally adopted by it, that a controversy would be precipitated which might lead to protracted debate or legislative delays, which it was so desirable for the reasons I have heretofore stated to avoid.

Under the circumstances we thought it wise to strike out the whole section and leave the matter subject to such future action as may be deemed expedient in a separate bill.

The bill also provides for a deposit not only in the national banks but in all banks that qualify as national depositories of the taxes collected under the income tax and the excess profits provision of the revenue act. Under the law as it now exists the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make deposits in these banks of receipts from the sale of liberty bonds, and this provision simply enlarges that privilege of the Secretary and enables him also to deposit in these banks the receipts from the excess profits and the income tax.

There are at present 4,600 banks throughout the country which have qualified as depositories. The Secretary of the Treasury advises your committee that it is his purpose to try to enlarge the number of qualified banks. He believes that the inducement held out in this provision will cause many other banks to qualify, especially as a very liberal policy will be adopted in admitting these banks as depositories.

So, Mr. President, the effect will be that not only the receipts from the sale of liberty bonds, but the receipts from the collection of the income and the excess profits taxes will be deposited, in all probability, as soon as collected in these banks scattered throughout the country, so that the money will not immediately be taken out of the banks and transferred to the vaults of the Treasury and to that extent will relieve a situation which might otherwise become acute.

That, together with the fact that large certificates of indebtedness have been purchased to the extent of over a billion dollars throughout the country to be used in the payment of these taxes, will, I think, very greatly relieve a situation which everybody recognizes might under other circumstances be embarrassing. It will not altogether relieve it, but it will greatly mitigate it.

Mr. President, I think that is all I desire to say, except I wish to make a brief financial statement showing the necessity of this legislation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator a question? Does the bill levy any taxes?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it does not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It only provides for the sale of bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. It only provides for the sale of bonds.

It is estimated, and this estimate has just been made by the Treasury Department, that our total receipts for this fiscal year from all sources, including the money derived from the sale of liberty bonds, such as have already been issued and sold upon the market, will amount to $8,220,000,000, in round numbers. There was in the Treasury June 30, 1917, which amount was transferred, of course, to the credit of 1918, $1,066,000,000. So our total estimated receipts, together with the cash in the Treasury at the beginning of the year, amounts to $9,287,000,000.

It is estimated that the disbursements of this year will amount to $16,116,000,000, in round figures, leaving a deficit at the end of the fiscal year of $6,829,000,000. Adding $500,000,000 in order to provide a safety balance in the Treasury, it would make a deficit of $7,329,000,000, in round figures.

There are yet unsold savings certificates and liberty bonds already authorized to the amount of $4,329,000,000. Deducting these authorized but unsold bonds, the deficit will be $3,000,000,000; that is, subtracting the authorized bonds not yet sold from the estimated deficit, it will leave $3,000,000,000 that must be provided in order to meet the current expenses of the fiscal year 1918.

The billion and a half which this bill carries for the allies is not to be loaned to them during this fiscal year. It is to be loaned to them during the months of July, August, and September of the next fiscal year.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator how much of the $6,000,000,000 that he speaks of, in round numbers, consists of loans?

Mr. SIMMONS. There is $6,190,000,000 of special disbursements included in the estimated expenditures for 1918.

I think this statement makes it clear that it is of the utmost urgency that this bill should be passed, and passed immediately. Of course, I do not mean to ask Senators not to discuss any phase of the bill they may see fit to discuss, and I shall be glad to answer any questions Senators may ask and to throw all the light that I can upon the matter, but I do wish to appeal to Senators not by unnecessary discussion to delay action upon the bill.

Mr. President, I very greatly hope that if this bill is passed—in fact, I might say I confidently believe if the bill is passed—it will put the Secretary of the Treasury in a position where he can finance the affairs of this country until Congress meets next December without further revenue legislation at this session of Congress.

I believe that it is important, if it can be avoided, that we should not at this time have further revenue legislation. Of course, in order that the Secretary of the Treasury may finance the Government until the next Congress, it will be necessary for him to use to a very considerable extent certificates of indebtedness. For that reason it became necessary that this issue should be greatly enlarged, but with this authority to issue these bonds, and with this authority to issue $4,000,000,000 more of certificates of indebtedness, I believe the Secretary of the Treasury will be able to accomplish this purpose, and that Congress may safely proceed upon the idea that it will not be necessary at this session to enact additional substantive revenue legislation.

If the war shall be greatly prolonged and it becomes necessary for us, instead of a million or a million and a half men, to send 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 men to France, the expenditures of the Government will, of course, be greatly increased. I do not doubt that we shall have sooner or later to increase taxes; how much we shall have to increase them can not now be safely estimated or predicted, but I hope it may not be necessary to do so at this session, and do not believe it will be.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is too late this evening for me to have an opportunity of saying what I desire to say upon the pending bill. Therefore I wish simply to say at this time that I believe the bill ought to be passed, and ought to be passed immediately. In fact, there is no other thing for Congress to do than simply to provide for paying the obligations which we have already authorized the Government to incur. I will content myself with that statement, because I can not make any other without taking 10 or 15 minutes of time, and I do not believe I ought to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from North Carolina ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; but I will ask that that be done now, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered; and the bill will be read for amendment. The Secretary will state the first amendment to the bill reported by the Committee on Finance.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, page 3, line 19, after the word "upon," to strike out "application" and insert "applications"; so as to read:

> The bonds herein authorized shall from time to time first be offered at not less than par as a popular loan, under such regulations, prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time, as will in his opinion give the people of the United States as nearly as may be an equal opportunity to participate therein, but he may make allotment in full upon applications for smaller amounts of bonds in advance of any date which he may set for the closing of subscriptions and may reject or reduce allotments upon later applications and applications for larger amounts, and may reject or reduce allotments upon applications from incorporated banks and trust companies for their own account and make allotment in full or larger allotments to others, and may establish a graduated scale of allotments, and may from time to time adopt any or all of said methods, should any such action be deemed by him to be in the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 6, line 2, before the words "conversion period," to insert "six months'"; in line 5, after the word "shall," to insert "for the purpose of computing the amount of interest payable"; and in line 9, after the word "presentation," to strike out "and no adjustment of accrued interest shall be made in respect thereof," so as to make the clause read:

> If bonds bearing interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent per annum shall be issued before July 1, 1918, then any bonds bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum which shall, after July 1, 1918, and before the expiration of the six months' conversion period prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be presented for conversion into bonds bearing interest at such higher rate, shall, for the purpose of computing the amount of interest payable, be deemed to have been converted on the dates for the payment of the semiannual interest on the respective bonds so presented for conversion, last preceding the date of such presentation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 17, to strike out:

SEC. 5. That section 7 of said act approved September 24, 1917, be, and is hereby, amended, by adding two new paragraphs, to read as follows:

"In determining the value of the shares of any national bank, State bank, trust company, or other banking institution, for the purpose of taxation by any State or any of the possessions of the United States or any local taxing authority, there shall be deducted an amount equal to the same proportion of the value of the shares as the par amount of any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States issued during the present war owned by such bank or trust company or banking institution bears to its gross assets.

"If any part of this section shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this section, but shall be confined in its operation to the part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 11, to change the number of the section from "6" to "5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 17, to change the number of the section from "7" to "6," and in line 19, before the word "new," to strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That said act approved September 24, 1917, is hereby amended by adding four new sections, to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, after the word "prescribe," to strike out: "The par amount of bonds of any series issued before April 1, 1918, which may be purchased in the 12 months' period beginning April 1, 1918, and in each 12 months' period thereafter, shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12 months' period. In the case of any series of bonds issued after April 1, 1918, the"; in line 24, before the words "par amount," to insert "The"; in the same line, before the word "such," to insert "any"; on page 10, line 2, after the words "date of," to strike out "such"; in the same line, after the word "issue," to insert "shall not exceed one-twentieth of the par amount of bonds of such series originally issued," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, from time to time, until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war, to purchase bonds issued under authority of this act, including bonds issued upon conversion of bonds issued under this act or said act approved April 24, 1917, at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe. The par amount of bonds of any such series which may be purchased in the 12 months' period beginning on the date of issue shall not exceed one-twentieth of the par amount of bonds of such series originally issued, and in each 12 months' period thereafter shall not exceed one-twentieth of the amount of the bonds of such series outstanding at the beginning of such 12 months' period. The average cost of the bonds of any series purchased in any such 12 months' period shall not exceed par and accrued interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 2, after the word "foreign," to strike out the word "moneys," in quotation marks, and insert "moneys," so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury may designate depositaries in foreign countries, with which may be deposited as he may determine all or any part of the proceeds of any bonds or certificates authorized by this act, payable in foreign money or foreign moneys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 17. That the short title of this act shall be "Second liberty bond act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 4, to insert:

SEC. 7. That the act entitled "An act to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes," approved April 24, 1917, is hereby amended by adding a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the short title of this act shall be 'First liberty bond act.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 3, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that the Stars and Stripes float side by side with the flags of France and Great Britain; and we most earnestly pray that these precious emblems of human rights may lead on to a speedy culmination of the terrible war, that civilization may have the right of way.

Bind up the broken hearted, set the captives free, rehabilitate the earth and make glad the waste places that right may vindicate itself, and love, the crown of all humanity, reign supreme forevermore; through Him who came that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF WAR.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I notice that yesterday I neglected to file with the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, the statement of the House conferees provided for in the rule, and I ask leave to file that statement in connection with the conference report.

The SPEAKER. It will be filed nunc pro tunc.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The bill, as passed by the House, provided for a salary of $4,500 for the assistant, second, and third assistant secretaries. The Senate raised the salaries to $5,000 each. The conferees agreed on a salary of $5,000 for the assistant secretary, which is his present salary, and $4,500 each for the two additional secretaries.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to notify the House of Representatives that the Senate had reconsidered the vote by which it insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate said bill with the Senate amendments and accompanying papers.

The message also announced that the President had, on April 2, 1918, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

S. 3401. An act to authorize the President to reduce temporarily the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy; and

S. 3404. An act to authorize the President to drop from the rolls any naval or Marine Corps officer absent without leave for three months, or who has been convicted of any offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary by the civil authorities, and prohibiting such officer's reappointment.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 10365. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge across White River at Forsyth, Mo.; and

H. R. 2617. An act to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3714. An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. NELSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ELECTIONS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I present the following committee nominations.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the nominations.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE NOMINATIONS.

I nominate the following gentlemen to be members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce:

MICHAEL F. PHELAN, of Massachusetts.

L. D. ROBINSON, of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations? If not, these will be agreed to by the House.

SHIPBUILDING.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I notice in this morning's Washington Post the following:

SHIPYARDS DISAPPOINT—MARCH OUTPUT 30,000 TONS SHORT; HURLEY SENDS SHARP MESSAGE—"WANT SHIPS, NOT EXCUSES"—WIRES BUILDERS KEYNOTE OF SITUATION IS LEADERSHIP—"MONEY, MATERIAL, AND MEN SUPPLIED WITHOUT STINT BY NATION"—DEMANDS SPEEDING UP IN APRIL—FULL DAY AND NIGHT SHIFT.

American shipbuilders were called upon last night to explain why their output for March fell behind schedule. Chairman Hurley, of the Shipping Board, and General Manager Piez, of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, telegraphed the managements of all the yards in the United States, saying they were "keenly disappointed in the tonnage delivered and placing the responsibility for turning out ships squarely on the men in control of actual building operations.

"Keynote of present situation is management—leadership," the telegram said. "Money, material, and men have been supplied without stint by the Nation. The American people want ships, not excuses."

In my judgment this article is an admission on the part of Chairman Hurley and General Manager Piez that the great shipbuilding corporations of this country have fallen down and are failing in their ability to produce shipping in accordance with the Government program of the Government needs. Every daily paper in this country each day is lamenting the fact that our Government can not produce the required amount of shipping at this time of the Nation's greatest need. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I want to know is this, and I would like to have some member of the administration or the Shipping Board inform me, Why small shipbuilding firms can not get a contract from this Government to build wooden ships when this company is made up of men who know the shipbuilding game, who do not ask this Government to furnsh any money for speculation, do not ask any money to be paid out to furnish a publicity bureau, and they have to-day ways that are lying vacant and can put 300 ship carpenters at work on 24 hours' notice? I want to know why this kind of men can not get contracts to build wooden ships? I know a yard that fills these specifications, and the gentlemen who have that yard have been informed by the Shipping Board within the last few days that the Government has no need for their services.

WISCONSIN.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. May I not ask if the returns do not indicate that Wisconsin is still loyal to the Union notwithstanding the acid test? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not seen the returns, and that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thought it might be in war times.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the roster of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

LOANS SECURED BY LIBERTY BONDS.

Mr. PHELAN (when the Committee on Banking and Currency was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 10691) to amend section 5200 of the Revised Statutes as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5200. The total liabilities to any association of any person, or of any company, corporation, or firm for money borrowed, including in the liabilities of a company or firm the liabilities of the several members thereof, shall at no time exceed one-tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such associations, actually paid in and unimpaired and one-tenth part of its unimpaired surplus fund: Provided, however, That (1) the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values, (2) the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same, and (3) the purchase or discount of any note or notes secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States, shall not be considered as money borrowed within the meaning of this section, but the total liabilities to any association of any person or of any company, corporation, or firm, upon any note or notes secured by such bonds or certificates of indebtedness, purchased or discounted by such association, shall not exceed 10 per cent of the capital and surplus of such association, except subject to such rules, regulations, and limitations as may be established from time to time by the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] has an hour.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this bill will take very long for an explanation. I can perhaps best start by reading a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which explains the purpose of this bill.

Mr. DYER. Is not that letter in the report?

Mr. PHELAN. It is in the report. It is written to the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. DYER. Will not the gentleman make a statement?

Mr. PHELAN. I will act on the gentleman's suggestion. The letter is in the report submitted by the committee. The purpose of this bill is to give an opportunity to banks to loan in greater freedom upon liberty bonds. Under the present statute a bank can not loan over 10 per cent of its capital and surplus, except under two specified exceptions, to a single individual, firm, or corporation. That means that if a bank has a capitalization and surplus of $200,000 it can loan only $20,000 to any one single individual, firm, company, or corporation. This bill would permit the bank to loan more than that 10 per cent, provided the note given by the individual, firm, or corporation were secured by liberty bonds.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. How much more?

Mr. PHELAN. In this bill the limitation is 10 per cent, but there is left to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the power to exceed this limit. The gentleman will find the answer to his question on page 2 of the bill, at the bottom of the page.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then if the Comptroller should see fit, it would mean that the bank could loan all of its assets with liberty bonds as security. Would not that be a very dangerous innovation?

Mr. PHELAN. It would be impossible to loan all its assets, because a good many of its assets would be in such shape that it could not loan them.

Mr. ANTHONY. In other words, this is a wide-open privilege given to the Comptroller.

Mr. PHELAN. The bill says that the bank can loan only 10 per cent, except that it may loan more under rules and regulations prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no other limitation in the bill, but the committee think the safeguards I have mentioned are sufficient. They think it is better to leave it to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, than to try to fix any other limit in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. That is to say, they could loan more than 10 per cent, provided the loan is secured by liberty bonds?

Mr. PHELAN. That is it exactly.

Mr. CANNON. If the Secretary of the Treasury approves.

Mr. PHELAN. Under rules and regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; yes.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The purposes of this amendment are two, as I understand. First, to encourage the purchase of liberty bonds, and, secondly, to stimulate business and enable people engaged in business to have more money from the banks. The first is to induce people to buy more liberty bonds, is it not?

Mr. PHELAN. I think both things are involved. Here is the situation to-day. The liberty bonds, as we all know, are being put out through the banks. Our ultimate purpose is to get the bonds into the hands of the people. If we are going to do that we ought to give the banks a little wider, and perhaps considerably wider, latitude as to the amount they can loan a single individual. The loans will be secured because they are to be secured by liberty bonds. The banks have found themselves considerably hampered by this old provision.

Mr. BUTLER. The object is a good one; but what confuses me is this: A man or a firm can buy liberty bonds; why can not they buy the bonds and use the money they have on hand?

Mr. PHELAN. Suppose I would like to buy $5,000 worth of bonds. I have not got the $5,000, but I have got $2,000. I go to the bank and say, "I am going to subscribe for $5,000 of bonds if you will put up the other $3,000." The bank says, "All right." The bank might be unable to do this if I have already reached my limit on loans. Under present conditions the bank has not as wide a latitude as we want it to have.

Mr. BUTLER. In other words, we can borrow money and put up the bonds as security?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Has not the bank got the privilege now of loaning the $3,000 on the $5,000 purchase?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; it has; but the bank has to stop, in the case of a particular individual, firm, or corporation, just as soon as the liability for borrowed money by that individual, firm, or corporation amounts to 10 per cent of the bank capital and surplus. To give a concrete illustration, suppose I should borrow of the bank that has a capital and surplus of $200,000—suppose I borrow $20,000; that is 10 per cent. Suppose I borrow that for business purposes. Then, suppose I want to borrow $5,000 more in order to carry liberty bonds. Under the present law I could not do it, because the bank is prohibited from making the additional loan to me. The amendment is for the purpose of enabling the banks to loan this additional money.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. It seems to me there ought to be some limit as to the amount of security. If I borrow $10,000 of a bank, there ought to be a reserve of 2 or 3 per cent, because under this bill the controller might say you could borrow all of the amount on the bonds, and therefore we would not protect the banker.

Mr. PHELAN. If I understand correctly the gentleman's question, that is not involved in this amendment. It is not a question of how much the banks will loan on a particular security in comparison to its value.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. You say it is left to the comptroller?

Mr. PHELAN. No; that is not left to the comptroller. This is what is left to the comptroller: Under the present law the loan to an individual, firm, or corporation can not be greater than 10 per cent of the capital and surplus. Under this amendment 10 per cent more may be loaned, with liberty bonds as the security. The amount by which it may exceed that is left to the discretion of the comptroller under rules and regulations which he sees fit to make. The question the gentleman puts, as I understand, is this: If I want to borrow $5,000 of a bank, secured by liberty bonds, how much will the bank loan me on that note? That is not involved in this amendment. That is a matter within the discretion of the bank.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. This exception which you propose to the existing law allows of no security except liberty bonds. Suppose I had other property which I might put up, could I exceed the limitation now in the existing law of 10 per cent of the surplus and capital?

Mr. PHELAN. The amendment which we are offering applies only to liberty bonds.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is the point I want to get at; they can not accept any other security for loans that may run over 10 per cent?

Mr. PHELAN. Not under the amendment we are offering. There are certain other exemptions under the present law, but this applies only to notes secured by liberty bonds.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. HARDY. Am I right in my understanding of the finance corporation bill passed the other day, that it limits the amount of money that might be loaned under that bill to one concern to a certain percentage of the total capital of the finance corporation?

Mr. PHELAN. I understand that is so; yes.

Mr. HARDY. As I remember it, this very question came up in the discussion of that measure and it was contended by some that a limitation ought to be placed on the amount to be loaned on any security tendered and that no more than a certain per cent ought to be loaned on any given security. That contention was refuted by the chairman of the committee [Mr. GLASS], who held that as much money as was amply secured might be loaned upon one class of security, but that as to the borrower there would have to be a different principle, so that the finance corporation could loan no more than a certain per cent of its capital to one corporation, company, or individual. I am asking for information, as I understand that the great purpose of the amendment is to facilitate the sale of liberty bonds and to liquefy our credits also. In passing the finance corporation act we thought there might be danger in allowing that corporation to loan without limit to one party. But is there not the same possibility with reference to the banks under this amendment to the banking act that there was explained to be with reference to the finance corporation? At present any great institution that needs more money than 10 per cent of the capital of the bank that it does business with can secure that money by the principal by getting loans to a number of principal obligators and combining together to get the amount. The operation is difficult, but the difficulty in practice prevents the abuse of the bank's credit. These liberty bonds are going to be held by some concerns in this country in vast quantities, and if you absolutely take off the limitation and say that there is no limit upon how much may be loaned to one concern with liberty bonds as security, one or two or three big concerns may absorb all of the lending capacity of the banking facilities of the country. Now, as I understand it, the banks are intended to come to the rescue of the industrial world generally, and ought not to be allowed to devote their whole resources to the building up of some favored industry or enterprise, and I fear that this bill will enable the banks to utterly ignore one of the purposes of the banking act, which is to supply the general needs of the business of the country. I would like to hear the gentleman's explanation why this bill will not result in the absorption of the entire banking credits by a favored few concerns with vast holdings of liberty bonds that will be held by certain great interests?

Mr. PHELAN. I will say to the gentleman that I anticipate no such difficulty, but first let me say for the sake of accuracy, because I may forget it later, that certificates are also included as well as liberty bonds. I anticipate no trouble such as the gentleman suggests, because corporations or firms can borrow from a dozen or 15 or 25 or 50 different banks, and under the present law there is practically no limitation as to the amount that they may secure in that way. The purpose of this act when it was passed was to prevent any one bank from loaning any one individual or concern too much money, so as not to have too much of its assets tied up with a single individual or a single concern. I think the question that the gentleman raises is not involved, for the reason that I stated, that under the present law, if a corporation wants to borrow and the banks want to lend, there is practically no limit to what the corporation can borrow from the various banks. More than that, I think, we have to leave something to the discretion and good judgment of the banks. I think it is perfectly safe to do it. I think the banking history of this country, in general, in spite of failures, shows that the bank directors and men managing banks know their business. More than that, there is an indication in this bill that this power must be exercised with some caution, because it provides at the beginning that only 10 per cent shall be permitted unless a greater amount is permitted under rules and regulations set forth by the comptroller. The idea of that is that there may come a time when for the purpose of floating our liberty bonds it may be necessary to raise the limit a little higher. The all-important thing now is to be certain that we are going to find a market for our liberty bonds, and in order to be certain of that, as we need to be certain of many other things in this war, we are obliged to place the discretion in the hands of somebody, and we are placing it in the discretion of the comptroller, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Back of all that, however, is the good judgment acquired by years of training and experience of banking men themselves. They are going to be cautious and careful not to get their funds tied up in any dangerous or perilous way.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think the gentleman has practically explained the point that I had in mind, and that is the provision in the bill giving the Comptroller of the Currency the right to veto certain loans. I assume that the purpose of that is to protect rather than hamper the banks; in other words, to hold a hand of restraint in a way, you might say, over the banks, to prevent them from going too far in making these loans.

Mr. PHELAN. That is my understanding, and I think undoubtedly the understanding of the committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I do not think that is it at all.

Mr. McKENZIE. Just one question along that line. If that is true and that is to be the purpose of it, will it not make it difficult to administer this law whenever a bank wants to make a loan greater than 10 per cent, to compel it first to get the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. PHELAN. Oh, I do not think the Comptroller of the Currency is going to do this in each particular case. I did not get the full import of the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. PHELAN. I think he is going to lay down certain general rules, regulations, and limitations. I did not understand the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it not true that corporations and business men in the country have found that, on account of the higher prices of commodities and the need of much more money than usual in their business, frequently finding their line full on a commercial business, they are unable by reason of that to take on the quantity of liberty bonds that they desire to purchase, and this is absolutely necessary in order to permit business concerns in the country to purchase the amount of liberty bonds they require? Loans instead of being reduced for commercial purposes have had to be increased on account of the increased cost of production.

Mr. PHELAN. I think very likely that is so, and I will say, in addition to what the gentleman says, that I think that with this provision in the law a corporation or concern or an individual will feel safer in taking a larger amount of liberty bonds when he knows that he can go to the bank with this increased power and get some accommodation to tide him over some period when he needs some money. In every way it is going to widen the field for the sale of liberty bonds, and that is the all important thing at the present time.

Mr. SNYDER. I think it is absolutely essential, and I think a good deal of it has been done already, and if it has been done illegally this will legalize it and make it right.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will yield.

Mr. BLACK. Referring to subdivision (2), the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same, I want to ask the gentleman this question: If I understand the present law, if a person, corporation, or partnership goes to a bank and borrows up to its limit and then if it undertakes to take some of its own paper that it has in its own files, for instance, and negotiate that with the bank with a guaranty of indorsement, then such indorsement of the paper is counted as part of its liabilities. Is not that the present law?

Mr. PHELAN. I will answer the gentleman in this way: The provision of No. 2 to which the gentleman refers is already in existing law. There is no addition with reference to that at all. The only difference comes in 3. What the gentleman refers to is already in existing law.

Mr. BLACK. Is it the present law that after a corporation has borrowed up to its capacity it can take paper of its own and by indorsing that paper expand its limit of credit in that way?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; if it comes within provision 2 of discounts of commercial paper or business paper actually owned by a corporation. For example, suppose I have reached my limit in amount I borrowed directly or by accommodation. Suppose I have the gentleman's note. I can go and discount that note, which the gentleman made in good faith in a bona fide transaction, can discount it and get the money for it, whereas as an indorser I am liable to the bank.

Mr. BLACK. And that liability as an indorser under the present law is not counted as part of the loan limit?

Mr. PHELAN. No; it is not, if the indorser is the actual owner acting in good faith.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Where liberty bonds are purchased by people who expect to put them away and keep them, no inflation of credits result and no particular harm to prices is done.

Mr. PHELAN. That is true.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But where they are used as a basis of credit, that has the same effect as an inflation of circulation and causes a further increase in the prices of commodities. This country is suffering, suffering greatly, because of an inflation of prices. The provision brought forward in this bill will aggravate that inflation and increase the suffering. Does not the gentleman think that this feature of the situation should have very careful consideration?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I think all these things ought to have careful consideration from the point of view expressed by the gentleman, although I should not want in an off-hand way to agree to everything the gentleman has said. I agree that the bonds ought to be held by people. I stated here on the floor Saturday that we ought to induce the people of this country by every possible means to save money and buy these bonds, but when we are trying to sell bonds to carry on this war we can not stop to think about whether or not people are saving. No matter what means we take, if they are at all within economic principles, we have got to use these means and sell these bonds.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The money that we get for these bonds is going to be spent by the Government for supplies to carry on the war. Where by means of expansion of credit we enhance the values of commodities we discount the bonds we sell because we add to the price of what we want to buy with the proceeds to a very large extent what we are getting for the bonds.

Mr. PHELAN. I agree that all this war legislation should have careful consideration.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to know if there is any reason why we should take off the bridle, as we do in this bill, as to banks and keep the bridle strictly on as to the War Finance Corporation, which we passed a bill to organize the other day? In other words, in that bill we strictly adhered to a limitation as to the amount the Finance Corporation could advance to one concern, and now we are proposing to take that off. Why should there be a difference?

Mr. PHELAN. In the first place, the analogy is not correct, because the securities are different. The War Finance Corporation, as I understand it, is not going to lend a great deal of money to these banks on liberty bonds, and I do not believe we ought to involve the question of the War Finance Corporation in this at all.

Mr. HARDY. My recollection is a little vague; but as I remember it, somebody proposed in the discussion of the finance bill to take off the limit if the security were to be these bonds, but it was not done.

Mr. PHELAN. That does not come up anyway, because the War Finance Corporation is not going to be used to float the bonds and the banks are, and the people are going to get these bonds from the banks.

Mr. HARDY. What I wanted to get is the reason for this distinction.

Mr. PHELAN. That is the distinction, so far as I see it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and has been a member of it for a number of years, and is in charge of this bill, and has given a great deal of thought to it.

I want to put two questions to him. In the first place, does not the gentleman think that there is some danger in not putting a limit in the bill beyond which the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury can not go, and, second, if the gentleman were Comptroller of the Currency, what limit would he fix in rules and regulations beyond which a bank could not go, so that the country generally would have some sort of an idea as to what the rules and regulations provide could be loaned on liberty bonds as security?

Mr. PHELAN. I will answer the gentleman in this way: I do not believe there is any danger in putting a limitation in.

It is not especially material to me whether a limitation is or is not put in. I think, however, there is no danger. Under No. 1, on the top of page 2, "The discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actual existing values," there has been no limitation for a number of years. Under No. 2, "The discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same," there has been absolutely no limitation, and the banks as a general thing, almost as a universal thing, have not become involved. As I said before, we have got to trust the good judgment of the bankers.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman believe that more than 25 per cent should be loaned on liberty bonds as security?

Mr. PHELAN. I should think that under some conditions more than that might be loaned.

Mr. HASTINGS. Fifty?

Mr. PHELAN. Possibly.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am trying to have an answer that will express the gentleman's judgment.

Mr. PHELAN. My judgment might differ on different occasions. At the present time I doubt if it need be put at 50 at all, or even 25, and yet I can see where conditions might arise where it might be expedient to go as high as 50. I do not anticipate that, however. It would depend on the commercial condition of the country and on the need of finding an immediate market for bonds in an emergency. It depends on so many things that I would not want to be bound down to a particular percentage. But, answering the gentleman's question as straight as I can, I do not think there is any danger in the provision as it exists in the bill.

Mr. BACHARACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will.

Mr. BACHARACH. I understood you to say as to the discount on commercial or business paper presented by the person owning the same the banks could discount any amount. The banks can not discount beyond 10 per cent of their surplus and undivided profits. I understood you to make that statement some time ago.

Mr. PHELAN. They can discount more than that under the present law, because this is made an exception under this very section of the banking act. I will go to a bank that has a surplus and capital of $200,000, and I borrow money on my note. If I come along with notes of a corporation or individuals of which I am the actual owner I am not prevented from going to the bank and getting those notes discounted if the transaction is a bona fide transaction. But that I can not get on accommodation in my own name.

Mr. SNYDER. Just one word. In the report I noticed the Secretary of the Treasury says, in his letter to Mr. GLASS, referring to the 10 per cent limitation that now exists in the law:

> I am told that there are a good many banks which will, because of this limitation, decline to make loans where their customers desire to subscribe. It also furnishes a convenient excuse for those who do not want to assist in the liberty-loan campaigns.

Now, that shows in itself that banks are willing to go beyond the 10 per cent without any real proposed law giving them the right, and the only difficulty is that some of the banks that want to live closely with the law have used that as an argument and have been fearful of doing it, and prospective subscribers have used it as an excuse to not buy liberty bonds. Is that not what it means?

Mr. PHELAN. It may mean that.

Mr. SNYDER. That is a fair interpretation to put on it.

Mr. PHELAN. It may mean that. It is in the report.

I see other gentlemen rising to ask questions. I will be very glad to answer all questions, but I dislike to monopolize the time. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], the ranking Republican member, I know desires some time, and for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the rest of my time for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] is recognized, and the gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, there has been so much confusion on the floor during the discussion of this matter that I confess to almost total ignorance as to what has been said.

The bill under consideration, H. R. 10691, is a reenactment of the present law, except as to subdivision 3, on page 2. This subdivision is intended to modify the provision of the present law which limits a bank to loaning in all cases not to exceed 10 per cent of its capital and surplus to one individual, partnership, corporation, or association. The new provision provides that more than 10 per cent may be loaned to each, provided that the note is secured by liberty bonds or certificates of indebtedness of the United States of a face value equal to the amount of the note, and provided also that the limit of such loans fixed by the regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not be passed. The bill provides that from time to time the comptroller, with the approval of the Secretary, may make regulations which, from time to time, he may change.

Now, under ordinary conditions in the country I should not be in favor of removing in any way the limitation which the present law imposes upon loans by national banks, but under the present war emergency it seems to be very desirable, if we can do anything without endangering the safety of the banks and without unnecessarily limiting their capacity to take care of the commercial interests of the country, to induce the purchase by our citizens of these liberty bonds. It seems to me very much better that the individual should be encouraged to buy the bonds rather than the banks, and individuals would be more inclined to buy the bonds if they knew that if they need money they could get it from the banks upon these bonds. Suppose a large business man has ready money, and knows that later he will need this money, if he knows that on these bonds he can borrow their face in excess of the sum that his bank could now loan him, he could safely buy liberty bonds when otherwise he could not do so. I have money, say, in hand, with which I could buy from $20,000 to $50,000 worth of liberty bonds, but I know that later I will need that money, and I could be induced, in many cases, to buy $50,000 of liberty bonds if I know in case I need the money I can go to my bank and put them up and get the money on my note.

And that is the purpose of this bill. It is its only purpose, namely, to assist the Secretary of the Treasury in finding a market for bonds and to assist the banks and the customers of the banks in handling them themselves if they buy them. Under the conditions as they exist to-day in this country, it seems to me that it is safe and wise to pass this bill. Otherwise I would not approve it.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Under the present law, a bank capitalized at $100,000 can not allow any one individual to borrow more than $10,000?

Mr. HAYES. The present law allows 10 per cent of the capital and surplus.

Mr. KEARNS. This bill provides, as I understand it, if such a person has borrowed up to the limit, he can borrow another $10,000 from the same bank, provided he has $10,000 of bonds to put up as collateral?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; subject to the limitations fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a very important amendment to section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, that this bill seeks to amend, has gone unnoticed in the discussion up to the present time. Under the existing phraseology of section 5200, while a bank is limited to 10 per cent of its capital and undivided profits to loan to any one individual or corporation, with a further exception that bills of exchange, discounted in good faith upon existing value and discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating them, are excepted in the inclusion of that 10 per cent. There is this further limitation in the law to which no reference has been made and which is omitted in the bill under consideration, namely, "the total of such liabilities"—that is, owned by the bank exclusive of these two instances that I have referred to, namely, bills of exchange and discount of commercial paper, which are not included, and which under this bill are excepted also and further extended by not including the purchase or discount of any note secured by Government bonds or certificates of indebtedness; there is this further limitation, that "the total of such liabilities," referring to the class of loans made by the bank to individuals or corporations exclusive of these two classes that I have referred to "shall in no event exceed 30 per cent of the capital stock of the association."

There is no objection, so far as I find it, to allowing banks to loan money to individuals and corporations on notes secured by liberty bonds or by Government certificates of indebtedness as provided in this bill, and excepting them and adding them as a third class to the liabilities not to be included in the 10 per cent of the total of the capital stock and the surplus that a bank may loan to any one individual or corporation.

But I want some member of the Committee on Banking and Currency to advance some reason why we should lift the safeguard of placing the limitation of 30 per cent that a bank may loan other than these three classes named in this bill, namely, discount of bills of exchange, drawn in good faith; discount of commercial or business paper; and third, purchase or discount of any notes secured by not less than a like amount of bonds and certificates of indebtedness.

Bear in mind, gentlemen, these three classes are going to be excepted from the limitation formerly carried in the law that the bank could loan more than 10 per cent of its capital and surplus. This bill provides a further limitation as to the amount that the bank may advance on loans secured by Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness, that they can not go beyond 10 per cent of its capital and surplus. But remember these three classes that I have stated are excepted from the 10 per cent limitation of loans not of the character included in these three classes.

What I want to know is why the Committee on Banking and Currency lifted this limitation. It has nothing whatever to do with loans that will be made by banks secured by Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness as provided in this bill.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SHOUSE. The gentleman realizes why the 30 per cent is in the present law?

Mr. STAFFORD. I take it that it was for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the country.

Mr. SHOUSE. The present law provides for a liability of 10 per cent of capital and 10 per cent of surplus?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SHOUSE. With the further proviso that the loans to any individual can be no more than 30 per cent of the capital. That is the present law. The reason for that is that some of the banks in times past have had comparatively small capital and very large surplus.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. For instance, the Chase National Bank, in New York.

Mr. SHOUSE. Therefore the limit of 30 per cent was placed there. The Comptroller of the Currency, however, has assured the Committee on Banking and Currency that the financial conditions have been so adjusted in the banking world that the great differences between capital and surplus that formerly existed do not exist now. For that reason this was done.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has advanced a reason that was not advanced before, and it is a good reason for leaving off the limitation of 30 per cent, to which I directed attention.

Now, going a step further, for my part I agree with the committee in this provision of putting in the same class as bills of exchange and commercial paper these notes of corporations and individuals which are secured by Government bonds. Many of us know that any number of corporations are reducing their surplus by the purchase of Government bonds, and it is necessary, in order to furnish an inducement to them to purchase more Government bonds, that they may know that in time of stress, when they wish to get money, they can do so with the aid of these Government bonds as security.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for just one minute?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. The limitation on banks buying liberty bonds does not now exist—there is no limitation at all?

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that there is no limitation at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. A bank can put its entire stock into these bonds? The proposition is here that rather than have the bank put all its capital into them it will have the notes of good customers secured by the bonds, and it will then have the notes of the customers and the bonds themselves, both?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is largely an inducement to business concerns throughout the country to know that if they use their surplus and their reserves in the purchase of bonds they will not be restricted in time of need, when they wish a loan of money, and go to the banks and deposit these bonds as security; that the banks will not be restricted by any 10 per cent limitation of the amount of the capital of the bank and of its surplus.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Capital and surplus.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, there are other gentlemen who want to speak on this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No other gentleman addressed the Chair.

Mr. HAYES. I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] may have five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time will be vacated, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor more for the purpose of gaining information than of attempting to impart it. This is a question of banking and currency, nevertheless it involves a question of the interpretation of law. The latter comes more clearly within my province than the former.

I notice that the bill provides for an amendment to section 5200 of the Revised Statutes. When in order to inform myself I turn to section 5200 I find that it reads as follows. It is very short, and if you will pardon me I would like to read it in full:

> The total liabilities to any association, of any person, or of any company, corporation, or firm for money borrowed, including, in the liabilities of a company or firm, the liabilities of the several members thereof, shall at no time exceed one-tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such association actually paid in.

I find this change in the present act:

> Shall not exceed one-tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such association actually paid in and one-tenth part of its unimpaired surplus.

That is a new feature.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Not until I finish.

Mr. PHELAN. If the gentleman will read——

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I proceed with the reading of the statute:

> But the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values and the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same shall not be considered as money borrowed.

That is the old law.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield for just one moment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman pardon me for just a second? Now, when I take up this proposed amendment I find the interpolation of 10 per cent of the unimpaired surplus. Then I find on page 2, in the clause numbered (3), the following:

> (3) The purchase or discount of any note or notes secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States, shall not be considered as money borrowed within the meaning of this section.

Then I find a totally new provision attempted to be written into the law governing this question of bank discounts. That is as follows:

> But the total liabilities to any association of any person or of any company, corporation, or firm, upon any note or notes secured by such bonds or certificates of indebtedness, purchased or discounted by such association, shall not exceed 10 per cent of the capital and surplus of such association, except subject to such rules, regulations, and limitations as may be established from time to time by the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, that is an entirely new section sought to be written into this law. When section 5200 was passed it had no such provision. The banks were permitted to control and manage their business. No attempt was made to put further control of these banks and their property in the hands of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not care how good or estimable these men may be, you have no right to put in this bill a clause that will make this question of allowing loans upon these securities a matter of discretion in the hands of these two gentlemen or whoever may be their successors.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield for just one moment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he has not read section 5200 as it exists at the present moment. I have it right here in my hand. Possibly he has the old statute passed in 1864.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I understand that.

Mr. PHELAN. But that was amended subsequently.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman find in the new section any such control given to the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I was referring to the other part.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That is the part I am referring to particularly.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; but then you made the allegation about one-tenth of the surplus, and that is in the present law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I am not objecting to that. Understand, the purpose of this bill meets with my cordial and hearty approval. I will vote for any measure that helps us to dispose of liberty bonds, helps us to raise money to carry on the war, helps us to do our duty; but I am opposed to amendments that put it into the power of any two men to say what these loans shall be. That is what I object to. I am not opposing the bill as a measure to relieve the country or to help the sale of liberty bonds. I am opposing one part only of the bill, because the framers have sought to write into it a provision that does not exist in any law upon the statute books to-day, giving the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury the right to say, under regulations, what shall be done and what shall not be done in the matter of these loans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Some one says that this bill without such a limitation would be a great danger and peril. Is this true? Why, in the old law you left it to the board of directors and managers of your banks when you permitted commercial paper and bona fide drafts to be loaned upon or discounted ad libitum in every direction in their discretion. Is there any greater peril when you permit them to discount notes on the plighted faith of the United States Government behind its bonds par for par? I ask you as men why insert this clause? Could it be for any other purpose? Is there any ulterior motive in it to give greater control over the banking system of the country? I am opposed to putting a power so great as this in the hands of any two men or in the hands of any three men, whoever they may be—Republicans or Democrats—whatever their politics. It is not business regulation. Directors of banks and stockholders in banks have an interest in preserving their own property as great, if not greater, than that which any set of men could have in regulating this subject.

My friends, what peril is there when you permit a bank to discount its face value of a note backed with the face value of your Government bonds in excess of the 10 per cent allowed for other loans? Can not you leave that safely to the bank officials and let that matter be cared for in the usual routine of business of the banks? That is my objection. I have no objection to the 10 per cent of the surplus being recited, which I referred to. That seems to be reasonable and proper. I have no objection to any other feature of this bill. I am going to offer an amendment to the bill to strike out, in line 10, beginning with the word "but," all the rest of that paragraph.

Mr. PHELAN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make that motion now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unbroken rule of the House is that whoever has the right to the floor and yields time for debate, it is not in order for that Member to whom he yields to offer an amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Then I address the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the flood and has yielded 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, unless the previous question is ordered, the Chair will give him an opportunity to offer his amendment. Of course, the Chair can not control the gentleman who has the floor if he demands the previous question and the demand is sustained by the House.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest, as I always do, to any argument by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] involving a question of law. One mistake which the gentleman made was in reading from a statute that has been amended. That disposes of his objection to the "one-tenth of the unimpaired surplus" provision of the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I read the old section, because this bill refers to it. I knew the law with reference to the banking system had been changed relating to the surplus, but I read it because the statute is specially referred to in this act.

Mr. WINGO. If that is true, the gentleman should not condemn the committee for bringing it in here; and if his argument is addressed to anything, it was to the maintenance of the limitation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman from Arkansas ought not to criticize the gentleman from Pennsylvania when the bill itself refers to that very law.

Mr. WINGO. I do not criticize him, and he ought not to criticize the committee for the provision that is now in the law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, I want to make myself clear that I was not quoting the old statute for the purpose of criticism. The revised act, under section 425, has reference to section 5200. Now, your bill simply quotes section 5200.

Mr. WINGO. I am going to cover the two differences. I regret if the gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks I was criticizing him. He got the Revised Statutes when the change had been made, and if you will get the national banking act you will find that the section was amended in 1906 embodying the change the gentleman refers to. Now I will explain briefly the provisions of the present 10 per cent law, because I find that even some bank directors on the floor have not a clear conception of this 10 per cent provision.

What does the present law provide? It puts a limitation, a general limitation, of 10 per cent on the loaning power; that is, no national bank can loan more than 10 per cent of its capital stock and surplus to any one individual, firm, or corporation, or, in other words, to any one borrower. There is an apparent exception under the present law in two cases. The first is this: Say you have a bank that has a capital stock and surplus of $100,000. One person or corporation, one borrower could only borrow $10,000 under the general rule, but that would not preclude any one borrower who had gone to his limit on a direct loan from bringing a draft drawn against actual existing value.

I can give you an illustration on that, that will show you the necessity of that provision. To illustrate, I will take a product that I am familiar with, though, of course, it applies to other products, wheat, corn, oats, and so forth. Take cotton. A man buys so much cotton and puts it on the platform of a railroad. He get his bill of lading and takes it to the bank and draws on his principal for the value of the cotton, and this transaction is not a borrowing one under the 10 per cent limitation. That is an indorsement, that is a drawing of a bill of exchange, that has back of it actual existing value. Under the rule another exception is this: Say a man has borrowed $10,000 and he finds he needs more funds, and his customers have given him notes well secured. He may take them over to his bank, indorse them, and discount them to his bank. The bank may take them, and he may sell ten thousand worth additional if he wants to, or a hundred thousand dollars, whatever amount the bank is willing to take, and his indorsement, the contingent liability represented by that indorsement, will not fall within the inhibition of the 10 per cent rule. Those are the two exceptions of the general rule of 10 per cent under the existing law. The 10 per cent goes to both the capital stock and the surplus, but the present law puts a limitation of 30 per cent on the capital. That is, the capital stock and the surplus might be such that 10 per cent of the two combined would be more than 30 per cent of the capital alone, and under the present law you can not go beyond 30 per cent of the capital stock.

What do we propose to do by this bill? We leave out the proposition that the gentleman from Wisconsin has suggested—the 30 per cent provision—and I will be frank and say that I think that ought to be retained. We put in another proposition, that they shall not count under the 10 per cent rule obligations which represent loans that are secured by these liberty bonds, that the limit to which they may go will be controlled by general rules, regulations, and limitations that the Comptroller will make, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

That brings it down to the real criticism of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. I agree with him as to what I want done. I agree with him as to the necessity of having a limitation, but I differ from him in his interpretation of what is now being done and the purposes of it. Let us see. We still leave it to the discretion of the directors to control. The object of this provision is not to allow the whole thing to be left to the control of the comptroller. The present existing law gives the comptroller control in a great many instances that are more important than this.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Let me finish my statement first. It will be still left to the control of the directors of the bank, but suppose there are improvident directors, who let out all their loanable funds to one borrower, then should there not be some check upon those improvident directors? I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] would agree to that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not if they were secured by Government bonds.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. In connection with the gentleman's last remark, will he permit me to ask what difference there is between lending on Government bonds and lending on either one of the other two classes? The other two classes of paper are without limit; there is no limit on them. Why should there be a limit upon the subject of borrowing on your own Government bonds?

Mr. WINGO. Of course there is a difference between the securities. But security is not the basis of the 10 per cent limitation.

Under this bill we do not do what the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to think we do—leave it to the Comptroller of the Currency to determine the amount of loans that each particular bank can make. Instead of doing that we require him to make general rules, regulations, and limitations that will be applicable to every bank under given conditions, which would be a limitation to the action of the board of directors. If it permitted him to say that in no event should they make a loan in excess of 10 per cent unless the comptroller gave his permission in that particular instance, I, of course, would not favor that. I think these regulations should be general in character, and they should be applicable to every bank, and the question would come up, not, Am I violating the wishes of the comptroller with reference to my particular bank? but the rules and regulations which the comptroller by experience has laid down as applicable to all banks. I think there is a clear distinction between the two, and that instead of our giving power away that the power we have given is not one to be abused but a power to check an abuse in others. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. By removal of the 30 per cent limitation, as I understand the bill, you permit unlimited advances in the case of class 1 and class 2, but in the case of class 3, which is an infinitely better security, you would first impose a 10 per cent limitation and then you further provide that the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may further decrease or increase the amount that can be advanced under item 3.

Now, I would like to know, why do you impose no limitation in the case of class (1) and class (2) and you impose a limitation in the case of class (3), which is a much better security than class (1) or class (2)?

Mr. WINGO. The trouble with the gentleman is that he is in error as to his facts. The present existing law does not put any limitation upon class 1 or class 2.

Mr. HUSTED. Thirty per cent.

Mr. WINGO. The 30 per cent—here I will read into the RECORD, so those who want to study the RECORD can do so, the present statute, section 5200. The present existing law, not what we propose, but the present existing law, which can be found in the revised national bank act:

> The total liabilities to any association of any person, or of any company, corporation, or firm for money borrowed, including in the liabilities of a company or firm the liabilities of the several members thereof, shall at no time exceed one-tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such associations actually paid in and unimpaired and one-tenth part of its unimpaired surplus fund.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Can the gentleman give me five minutes more?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. PHELAN. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Let me finish reading the statute, and then I will answer the gentleman from New York, and then I will yield to the gentleman:

> Provided, however, That the total of such liabilities shall in no event exceed 30 per cent of the capital stock of the association. But the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values, and the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same shall not be considered as money borrowed.

Now, the gentleman from New York will see that 30 per cent limitation is not upon (1) and (2) under existing law, so we do not make any change as to them by this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Even assuming that to be true, and it undoubtedly is, why is the preference given to item (1) and item (2) over item (3)? Why are more liberal loans permitted under items (1) and (2) than under (3)?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has two erroneous impressions. The same limitation that is put upon the liberty loan proposition is put upon items (1) and (2). But I think if the gentleman will read the bill he will find he is in error. In other words, the limitation with regard to rules and regulations to be promulgated by the comptroller apply to everything except the broad general 10 per cent limitation.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman from New York seems to have the idea that the limitations are made on account of the security.

Mr. WINGO. No; I am in error about the last proposition. The gentleman from New York is right.

Mr. HARDY. If I understand it right the limitation is in the banking law at the present time, and the limitations you have proposed in this bill are not made on the ground of security, because the borrower might have securities worth more than the whole bank capital stock, but they are made for other purposes. This is to limit the power to absorb the funds by one borrower.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. PHELAN. I think I understand what the gentleman desires, and I would like to explain——

Mr. WINGO. Go ahead.

Mr. PHELAN. I will yield to the gentleman more time.

Mr. WINGO. All right.

Mr. PHELAN. Here is the proposition we must constantly keep in mind. It is not a question simply of security. You might have the very best security in the world, but one of the most important elements in connection with security is its liquidity. Now, sections (1) and (2) have to do with commercial transactions. The way it operates is this. If I borrow money from a bank under sections (1) and (2), I am going to get the money out of this very transaction to meet my obligation when it is due. Under (3), if I borrow money to buy bonds, I am not going to get out of the transaction the money to meet my obligation when it is due. It may be if I get too many bonds I am obliged to sell my bonds at an inopportune time. It may be if the bank demands those notes somebody will have to sell liberty bonds at a time when those bonds ought not to be sold, so there is a distinction made between (1) and (2) group and the (3) group. There is a distinction between those two, not on the ground of security but on the ground of liquidity, on account of the method of doing business. If I have not made it clear I would like to explain it further.

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Speaker, that brings us down to the question the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] brought up a while ago. There is not any distinction in this act and the war-finance bill on the question he raises, because we treat in this case only the question of limitation on amount that may be loaned to each borrower, and the question of security is not involved.

Mr. HARDY. I did not differ with the gentleman. My idea was to support the explanation that this limitation contemplated was not on account of the lack of security but for the convenience of the communities.

Mr. WINGO. It is only for the purpose of preventing one individual or group absorbing all the loaning power of a bank.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to the proposed amendment. If the bill is enacted as now drawn and this control is given to the comptroller and Secretary of the Treasury, will it permit them to change the rule with reference to (1) and (2) now? In other words, would they have the power then to change the method of discounting that paper in relation to the 10 per cent that the bank can loan to one individual?

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman refer to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand, he cuts out the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency to provide rules, regulations, and limitations.

Mr. SNYDER. I understand that.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, the comptroller would be left without any power at all to check any improvident directors who might want to permit one borrower or group of borrowers to absorb all the capital and even the deposits by their loans.

Mr. SNYDER. What I wanted to know was whether it would change the relation of notes that banks can now discount as referred to here in (1) and (2). Would it make any difference whether this control was put into this bill or not with regard to the discounting of unlimited amounts of that paper?

Mr. WINGO. Not on (1) and (2); not a bit.

Mr. GLASS. It seems to me that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has a total misapprehension of the purpose of this provision of the bill. It is really a limitation. It is a check upon improvident banking. Somebody must determine—some authority—how far a bank may go. In talking about taking the bridle off, if you eliminate this provision from the bill you will indeed have taken the bridle off, and there will be nobody to determine whether a bank is making improvident loans or not under the provisions of the act.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to have a question explained.

Mr. PHELAN. Then I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am not clear on this. Is the limitation of 30 per cent still retained in this bill if enacted in its present shape?

Mr. WINGO. No.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is entirely eliminated?

Mr. WINGO. The 30 per cent provision is not in the bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. There is no limitation?

Mr. WINGO. The limitation of 10 per cent of the capital stock and surplus is retained, but the 30 per cent provision of existing law is repealed by this bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then, would it be possible for a borrower, if he had borrowed 10 per cent from the national bank, to bring liberty loans to the bank and borrow all the rest of the capital under this bill?

Mr. WINGO. That would be true if we were to put in the 30 per cent provision, as it is in the present law, as it would not apply to the liberty loan at all, because the 30 per cent provision in the existing law comes after the 10 per cent provision, but before that provision covering the first and second classes of paper.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wanted to know if it was possible for a borrower, after he had borrowed 10 per cent under the existing law, to borrow the entire surplus of the bank remaining.

Mr. WINGO. Unless the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the rules and regulations would put some limitation upon it. If we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], it would take the whole bridle off, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said, and the idea is to adopt some rules and regulations that can put some limitation on the operation.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not leave it to the directors?

Mr. WINGO. Suppose we have improvident directors? The reason for the 10 per cent rule grew out of the fact that we did have some improvident directors.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, it seems to me we are getting valuable information upon this amendment. Some of the ground already traveled may be again gone over by myself in a way.

I wish to say that this amendment has to do with the best security of any of the classes mentioned in it. The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency says that if the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is permitted it will take the bridle off and open the door to improvident directors on unlimited loans. Now, the present banking law allows a man to borrow 10 per cent of the capital and surplus of any national bank, and it can cash its customers' paper to an unlimited amount, whether it be commercial paper or bills of exchange, not exceeding 30 per cent of its capital stock and surplus. That same restriction would still be in the law if the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] should prevail. You could not give your note secured by a liberty bond to exceed 30 per cent of the capital of the bank.

Mr. WINGO. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He does not want to make an inaccurate statement. The 30 per cent provision comes in the law now after the general rule of capital stock and surplus, and after that provision comes the provision as to class (1) and (2) and the liberty bond proposition. So if you reinstate the 30 per cent provision as it is now in the existing law it would not apply to the liberty bond loan at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think that this amendment is proper. We should do everything we can to aid in the sale and disposition of these liberty bonds. I incorporate the provision of the present banking law:

LIMITATION OF LIABILITIES WHICH MAY BE INCURRED BY ANY ONE PERSON, COMPANY, ETC.

425. SEC. 5200 [as amended 1906]: The total liabilities to any association, of any person, or of any company, corporation, or firm, for money borrowed, including in the liabilities of a company or firm the liabilities of the several members thereof, shall at no time exceed one-tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such associations actually paid in and unimpaired and one-tenth part of its unimpaired surplus fund: Provided, however, That the total of such liabilities shall in no event exceed 30 per cent of the capital stock of the association. But the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values and the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same shall not be considered as money borrowed.

What I would like to see is an amendment so that anyone wishing to borrow money at a bank and give liberty bonds as security could borrow to the full amount of the bonds, in the discretion of the bank, in the same way and to like extent that the bank can now take commercial paper or buy exchange. These liberty bonds are gilt-edged security, and their value and uses should not be restricted in any way; while if this measure becomes a law—and I quote from the bill—

(3) The purchase or discount of any note or notes secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States, shall not be considered as money borrowed within the meaning of this section, but the total liabilities to any association of any person or of any company, corporation, or firm, upon any note or notes secured by such bonds or certificates of indebtedness, purchased or discounted by such association, shall not exceed 10 per cent of the capital and surplus of such association, except subject to such rules, regulations, and limitations as may be established from time to time by the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Liberty bonds should at least be put upon the same footing as commercial paper and as bills of exchange. If the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania prevails, it will put them upon the same footing as to commercial paper and as to bills of exchange, without the added proviso that the restriction would be 10 per cent of the capital and surplus of the bank, in the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency and Secretary of the Treasury. I say that if a bank is perfectly secure when it can loan an unlimited amount upon commercial paper or bill of exchange, it does not take any chances whatever when it loans upon liberty bonds, the security of our Government. We want to sell these liberty bonds for the most righteous cause that ever was maintained, and we do not want these restrictions. I think the banks should be restricted, as the gentleman from Arkansas says, but this is the wrong place to restrict them when we have Government bonds behind a man's paper.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In a moment. And I say, gentlemen of the House, that we should put no restrictions that are improper upon the bonds of our Government. They are just as good as the Government itself, and when they are not good my property is no good and my personal liberty and security are impaired.

I say that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is proper, and I say further that under the banking laws and under the rules and regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency he can tell a bank what it must do, and when one improvident bank is penalized you would not want every bank in the country upon which the business of the country depends held down to the level of that little improvident bank.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. STEVENSON rose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. Then I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. WINGO. I suppose the gentleman agrees that the purpose of this provision is to make it possible to distribute these bonds throughout the country among the people as much as possible?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is what I want, so that we can go to the people and to the banks.

Mr. WINGO. If you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and take the bridle off and have no limitation, then it would be possible for one borrower of the bank, if the bank would permit it, to absorb all the loanable funds, and then when you want to dispose of liberty bonds you can not do so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think our banks are conducted in that way.

Mr. WINGO. But you may find that some are.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can name some where every dollar of the capital stock is in Government bonds already.

Mr. ROBBINS. Some of them fail, too.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not many, under our present Comptroller of the Currency, by the way he looks after them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I confess to comparatively little knowledge of banks or the banking business. I depend, to a considerable extent, in matters of this sort on the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES]. I assume that those gentlemen and all the other members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, having agreed that this legislation increasing the credits of the Federal reserve banks may extend on the security of Government bonds, is under present circumstances and conditions helpful or perhaps necessary for the success of the flotation of the third liberty loan, have arrived at that conclusion after careful consideration, and I am therefore constrained to follow them in their view. It is highly important that this loan be successfully launched and I am anxious to support any legislation that will aid in making it a success.

Now, I want to call the attention of the members of the committee having these matters in charge to this situation, which confronts the stockmen of my section of the country. At the present time there is a limitation on the Federal reserve banks in the acceptance of paper based on live stock to a maturity of six months. I imagine that so far as that relates to certain classes of the live-stock business, as it affects the feeder, the time may be quite long enough. But that is not true in the business as carried on in the western and range sections, where our people are making an earnest effort to increase the production of live stock. Our live-stock paper in the range country largely, in fact, generally, runs for a year. It is largely based on advances on purchases in the spring, while the marketing comes late in the fall or some time during the winter. Our people have found it difficult to secure the accommodation that they need with the present limitation.

I presume the gentleman will not at this time care to express an opinion as to whether an exception might safely be made in the case of paper of this kind, but I do hope that the committee will give careful consideration to the matter, and I trust there is reasonable ground for the hope of making an exception in paper of that sort, so necessary to the growth and success of the meat-producing industries.

Mr. GLASS. I will suggest to my friend from Wyoming that there is nothing in the law to prevent a renewal of those notes. It can be very easily adjusted in the local banks, I think. If a note matures in six months, I imagine there will be no difficulty in the world in renewing it for six months longer.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand if the paper is one-year paper, it is not available for discount purposes until a sufficient time has elapsed, so that it has six months or less to run before maturity.

Mr. GLASS. But at maturity it can be renewed for whatever period the transaction might seem to require.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the difficulty, as our people see it. There might be a renewal, but our people can not afford to take that chance; besides, the stockman is often far from the banks and the banks far from the Federal reserve banks, and there are too many elements of risk to make that procedure safe or satisfactory. I shall present the matter in the form of a bill for the further consideration of the committee.

Mr. GLASS. I think our committee would be glad if the gentleman would.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a matter of vital importance to the range stock-growing country; not only to the stockmen but to those engaged in all branches of agricultural industry. Their returns are annual; their loans must be for the same period. It is true if our banks were larger and could always be certain of their ability to extend credits, if we were not so far removed from reserve centers, and it was always convenient for stockmen to reach the banks and renew their paper, we might get along fairly well on six months' accommodations, but under our conditions the present limitation is most unsatisfactory.

I shall not take the time of the committee longer at this time, but will ask early consideration of a bill I will introduce to extend the loan period on agricultural and live-stock paper to one year.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to discuss this bill at this time. But following the suggestion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] as to the desirability of extending the time for agricultural paper from a 6 months' limit, as it now stands, to a 12 months' limit, as proposed in a bill which I recently filed in the House, and which is now, as I understand it, pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency, I desire to indorse the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming relative to the value of such a change to the farmers, cattle owners, and meat producers of the Northwest.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that paper limited to six months does not accommodate agriculturalists, whose crops are annual crops, sufficiently to give them the benefit they ought to have?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. In our part of the country nearly everything is measured in terms of 12 months. We have annual crops and the annual turning over of our live stock. The purchasers and producers having for years been in the habit of dealing with yearly paper instead of monthly, quarterly or semiannual paper, they do not get along, do not figure out so well, with paper limited to six months. Perhaps they ought to change their banking customs and revise their methods. This is difficult to do. Short-term commercial paper is made so because it is based upon the turn-over period of their stock in trade. But it would be a matter of great advantage to the beef producers of the West if this limit could be raised from 6 months to 12 months, because that is the turn-over period of their stock in trade.

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency if such a feature has been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency since the passage of the Federal reserve banking act, extending the limit of farm paper from six months to a year?

Mr. GLASS. There has been no formal consideration of that proposition by the committee. The gentleman has his bill before the committee, but we have not yet considered it.

Mr. SLOAN. I filed it only recently, and I wondered whether the matter had come up before the committee.

Mr. GLASS. It has not.

Mr. SLOAN. I was not in any wise suggesting that the committee has been derelict.

Mr. GLASS. We have not considered it, but we shall be very glad to consider it at any time the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. SLOAN. I should be glad to have such a hearing before the committee, because one of the large problems of this country, as gentlemen on this floor well know, is the production of meats and grains. The surplus production of meats and grains is quite largely in the Northwest. A large portion of the meats which come to the cities of the East and go across the sea is produced on these large ranches and farms. For their purposes it would be a vast advantage if there was this leeway of 12 months granted when loans are first made. I have talked with ranchmen and farmers as well as bankers, and it is so considered by all of them. It gives both the large producer and banker relief to know that his loan is made and does not have to be renewed in the middle of the turn-over period. I think the chairman of the committee [Mr. GLASS] suggested a few moments ago, and properly, that probably six-months' loans could be extended to make them a year from original date, but that is not always true. With a change in the character of the season, a drouth, flood, or crop failure from any cause, the banks may become cramped, and then they must say, "We can not extend this paper, or if we do extend it we can not do it on the terms that were considered at the time we made the original loan, because confidence at the center is weakened in us, and we either can not renew, or, if we do, conditions we impose must be onerous, because such are imposed on us." So it would be an advantage and a great source of confidence to the borrower and banker if everything could be figured in terms of one year. So that they could rest easy knowing they had a year ahead of them to make their arrangements to put out their crops, buy their cattle, run them through the grass season, and then feed them in the winter. Their terms of borrowing and the maturing of their investments would then coincide.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the gentleman that that phase of banking was thoroughly considered and discussed when we had the Federal reserve legislation originally under consideration, and we thought the six months' limitation was wise, in view of all the circumstances, particularly in view of the fact that there is nothing in the act and nothing intended in the act to prevent renewals of notes based on live-stock transactions. It is a matter which can better be determined by the local banks of the various communities than attended to by a general provision in the law.

Mr. SLOAN. But when the law was passed, of course it was considered with strict reference to a condition of peace. Now it is quite different, when the Government is anxiously insisting that men exert themselves strenuously and strain their credit, perhaps, in order to increase and sometimes multiply production. It has become a very acute question in our part of the country. Time limit of loans is made five years to corporations and others under the new War Corporation, in order to obtain the services of transportation companies, munition manufacturers, and other institutions rendering a service to the citizens and Nation.

Where is there such urging by the Government to produce as is constantly being made upon farmers and ranchmen to speed up, increase seeding that a greater harvest may result, multiply cattle and sheep that our armies may be fed? Are the producers the only ones to be kept, so far as credits are concerned, in the strait-jackets constructed for conditions of peace?

Quite recently complaint was made that regional banks were refusing to take member paper representing purchase price of tractors on the ground that tractors were not such agricultural articles as were contemplated by the law as a basis for member-bank purchase and rediscount at the regional bank. I took the matter up with the reserve bank officials here at Washington and obtained a statement that tractor paper was and could be used as agricultural paper if it conformed to the time limit. That is proper. Such paper should be permitted to run a year, because the tractor is taking the place of reduced man and horse power incident to the war and is taking up the "white man's burden" to speed up and increase the production of food for ourselves and the allies.

I hope that early hearing and favorable action may be given by the Banking and Currency Committee and after that by Congress on the bill which I have filed.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEARNS. Is this the proper time to offer amendments to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not, unless the gentleman has the floor in his own right, in which case it is permissible to offer amendments, but the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] has the floor.

Mr. HAYES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON]. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair?

Mr. EMERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. When will it be in order to offer amendments to this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When a measure is being considered in the House any gentleman who has the floor in his own right has the right to offer amendments; but the gentleman from Wisconsin is well aware that under the rules of the House, when time is yielded for the purpose of debate, it is not in order for the person having the floor for debate to offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it be in order for the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] to yield to any gentleman during the time that he has for general debate, for the purpose of offering an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would, but the gentleman from California would then lose the floor. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, one year ago April 6, which is next Saturday, this country declared war against Germany. Never since this country entered into the war has the hour been more crucial than it is at the present time. Our allies are battling to beat back the mighty army of the Kaiser. Our boys are going to the battle front every day. No greater responsibility ever rested upon this country and none will during this war than right now.

Now is our time to strike a blow for liberty, for democracy, and for civilization. Now is our opportunity as never before to strike against autocracy and one-man power. Nothing can do our allies as much good, nothing can encourage them, nothing can show them that we are with them until victory comes, and until peace comes with honor, for we want no other peace, as much as a large oversubscription to the third liberty loan, the campaign for the raising of which opens next Saturday, one year from the day of our entrance into the war. Nothing could give our brave boys who are now over the sea any more encouragement, nothing could give our brave boys who are going over the seas any more encouragement, as the buying of these liberty bonds speedily.

Let us show the world that we are in this war in earnest; that we mean to stay in the war until peace comes with honor, and until victory crowns our efforts.

Washington, Jefferson, and Hamilton call to us out of the past. Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, and McKinley, and all the mighty men of the Nation now dead call out to us to stand firm in this great crisis.

We must deny ourselves if necessary that the soldier and sailor has all the necessities and comforts, and all the guns and ammunition necessary.

Those of us who can not fight can buy liberty bonds and furnish these necessities and comforts and these guns and ammunition.

Let us tell the Kaiser that we are coming with $50,000,000,000 more of bonds if necessary.

The contest now raging in this world is not one between nations, it is between two great principles—autocracy and democracy; between the government by the few and the government by the many; between bigotry and civilization.

We have taken our stand on the side of right, and we must fight for right with every ounce of energy this Nation has, and never yield to wrong.

What is America's answer to the autocrat of the world? In the words of our fathers we have pledged our lives, our wealth, and our honor to this great cause of world democracy.

Our allies are engaged in the greatest battle of this war, and nothing could encourage them any more than a great oversubscription of this third liberty loan.

In this campaign for the third liberty loan the city of Cleveland and the great State of Ohio will not be found wanting. The city of Cleveland oversubscribed her quota in the first and second liberty loans, and she will oversubscribe herself in this third liberty loan. There is no doubt about the patriotism of the people of the city of Cleveland and the great State of Ohio. If the remainder of the cities and States in this Nation do as well as the city of Cleveland and the State of Ohio, this third liberty loan will be one grand success. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Ohio for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. HAYES. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] is recognized for debate for five minutes.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, when the proper time comes I want to offer an amendment to strike out all of the paragraph after the word "association," in line 15, page 2.

This bill was intended for only one purpose. Under the present law any man with the proper security can go to his bank and borrow an amount equal to 10 per cent of the capital stock and surplus of that bank. This bill was intended to allow a borrower, in addition to that amount, to borrow another 10 per cent of the capital stock of the bank and its surplus, provided he has that much represented by liberty bonds to put up as collateral security. Now, that is all that this bill provides, but here is a proviso that I would like to see stricken out of the bill, which provides that the borrower may do this, provided further, he can get the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury. It seems to me we are too prone to pass laws and then to provide that they shall be effective if somebody else says so. The very object of this bill is to allow men to borrow money with which to buy liberty bonds.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to the chairman of the committee asks for a law of this kind so that a man can go to his bank and borrow additional money up to 10 per cent provided he has liberty bonds to offer as collateral security. Then why leave the clause in the bill that after we have the law, before we can do what the bill provides, we must get the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why not put liberty bonds on the same footing as commercial paper where you can borrow to any limit?

Mr. GLASS. The answer to that is that commercial paper is a quick asset. It is a liquid asset; when the loan is made it is made with a view of automatically clearing itself.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, in defense of my proposition to strike out this language, I will say that the bank itself can use every dollar of its capital in buying liberty bonds. Why not allow its patrons to buy the bonds in their individual names and offer the bank the same collateral security that it would have if it bought the bonds itself. Why make the borrower get the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman does not understand. The banks can loan to the individual up to 10 per cent of the capital and surplus on liberty bonds, but before any bank can loan more than 10 per cent secured by liberty bonds there will have to be general regulations put out by the Comptroller and Secretary.

Mr. KEARNS. Yes; but if we are going to pass a law why can not we read that proposition into the law itself?

Mr. PHELAN. Read what into the law?

Mr. KEARNS. The very proposition the gentleman makes, if a borrower wants to borrow $10,000 from any one bank although he is a borrower before to the extent of $10,000—if he wants to borrow $10,000 more on liberty bonds as collateral security he can get it.

Mr. PHELAN. Because it is wiser to put some limitation on the amount of the loans that can be made by the bank even on liberty bonds as security.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, that might be true if this proposition was not true—that any bank in the United States can expend every dollar of its money in the purchase of liberty bonds, title to be taken in its own name. Why not then allow the borrower to buy the bonds in his own name and give the bank that same security by way of collateral that the bank would have if it expended its own money?

Mr. PHELAN. I can explain it to the gentleman, but I do not want to do it in the gentleman's time.

Mr. KEARNS. I think that my amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In reference to the answer of the chairman of the Banking Committee that they do not want the banks to invest in liberty bonds because they are not liquid, I want to say there will never be five minutes on earth that you can not dispose of liberty bonds on the market. There will be a safe market and a man can go in to-day and get every dollar of the bank's capital on commercial paper, so why not allow him to do it on liberty bonds?

Mr. KEARNS. That is what the bill provides. It provides that anyone who has the collateral security in the shape of liberty bonds can buy up to 10 per cent of the stock and surplus of that bank subject to such rules and regulations as may be established by the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury. What is the use of leaving that provision in there? There is absolutely no use, because that same bank could take its own funds up to the extent of its capital and buy liberty bonds. The object is to allow the people of the country to get these bonds, and if you can sell all the bonds to 10,000 different persons you ought not to do so if there are 20,000 who want to purchase them. Place the bonds in as many different hands as you possibly can.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from California have the floor, and the gentleman from Michigan has not the floor to make the request.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can not the time of the gentleman be extended by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House can do anything by unanimous consent, but the gentleman has not the floor to submit the request.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, to save time I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEARNS. The only thing I hope to do in this bill is to cut out all of the red tape. As it stands, the borrower at the bank would be required to depend on rules and regulations that might be drawn up and adopted under this bill by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency. I want this bill when it is finished, when it becomes a law, to so read that any man can go to the bank who wants to borrow $10,000, if he has $10,000 in collateral security represented by liberty bonds, and get the money or any less amount he so chooses. It seems to me to be a senseless procedure to give the banks the right to use every dollar of their funds in the purchase of these bonds in the bank's own name and then say to that bank you can not loan it to individuals on these bonds unless there is a provision made by the Treasury of the United States authorizing you to do the same thing that the banks have the right to do in their own name. That position can not be defended——

Mr. GLASS rose.

Mr. KEARNS. I would like to have the gentleman defend it in his own time. I do not believe there is any man on the floor of this House who can defend such a position as that, and I would like to appeal to the membership of this House to give this question great consideration, because it is the only important clause in the bill. It is the only new matter in the bill. I would like to impress upon the mind of every man who is going to vote upon this measure, and especially upon this amendment, that one of the great objects in selling these bonds, one of the great arguments that has been used and will be used in the future, is to let the little fellow all over the country buy them. In that way he will feel that he is more interested in being an American than he would be if he held none of the securities of the Government. Get as many men, women, and even children in the United States directly financially interested in their Government as you can and you will do much to engender in them a greater patriotism than even now prevails; they will be doubly patriotic, because they will have an additional financial interest in the outcome of this the greatest war that was ever waged in the history of mankind. I believe there is plenty of patriotism in America to-day. In all my acquaintance I do not know of a man, woman, or child who is not imbued with the idea of patriotism and the hope of winning this war; but I think I know something about human nature also, and I believe that the more people you get directly financially interested in your Government the more you will enhance the spirit of patriotism, the more you will awaken a patriotic thought and action; and if men, women, and children all over this country know that they can go to their bank and borrow money and give as collateral security the bonds they are going to buy with that money, there will be thousands who will seek these bonds who otherwise would not. I want to see this bill, when it leaves this House, so written that no man, however great he may be, can write into it a provision that would stop these men and women from buying these bonds.

I yield back any time that I have.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE].

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, there is a feature in reference to this bill to which I would like to call the attention of the House, and that is that it will encourage manufacturers and business men living in small places to buy bonds of the United States and to do a much larger and better business with their local banks. Nearly every large manufacturer throughout New England, for instance, has to have an account with a business bank in New York or Philadelphia or Boston, because the local banks can not loan him a sufficient amount of money. If that manufacturer could own $50,000 or $100,000 of bonds of the United States, then at the season of the year when he has to borrow money he could go to his local bank with his United States bonds and not be limited because the capital of that bank happens to be only $100,000 or $150,000. In other words, he would carry all his deposits there instead of being forced to carry deposits in New York, Boston, or Philadelphia, and at the same time be able in his rush season, when he is compelled to buy extensively, to do business with the local bank. He would not be forced to go to New York or Boston or Philadelphia to borrow his money if he could use as collateral the United States bonds. On the other hand, it would enable him to purchase a larger amount of United States bonds than he otherwise would feel able to take from the capital of his business.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWE. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. If he is required now to go to New York to get capital to run his business, how do you expect he will get $50,000 of bonds? He would have to buy and pay for them.

Mr. ROWE. Yes; but the bonds are purchased with surplus, but his borrowing is only once or twice a year, when he is purchasing large quantities of raw materials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from California used all the time that he is going to use?

Mr. HAYES. I think so.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] a few moments ago put his finger upon what I consider the weak spot in that amendment, although he used it to sustain the amendment. He says, and it is true, that the Comptroller of the Currency can control the amount of money that the bank loans in any one way or to any one concern, and that is true, but how does he do it? The bank examiner goes around and he discovers that this bank has loaned a very large amount to one concern, with certain securities. A report is made, and the comptroller says to the bank that it must unload a lot of that—that it is not safe. That occurs, however, after the loan has been made. We want the banks to know before they make these loans on United States bonds exactly what they can do, and not have a bank loaning very largely and then the comptroller coming around and saying that it must unload. We want the rules and regulations laid down beforehand, and not leave it to an unknown quantity when the bank comes to make these loans on these bonds, and for that reason that amendment should not be adopted, because otherwise it will enable every bank to know that while it is loaning largely it is loaning under a specific regulation which guarantees it against being required to unload at any particular minute; but if the amendment is adopted, it leaves it all in doubt until after the loan is made.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the case made by my colleague from South Carolina is conclusive. I simply want to refer to the suggested amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He seems to have the idea that there is some insidious purpose here to give the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury power that they do not already possess. As a matter of fact, the Comptroller of the Currency has been an autocrat in the banking community for 50 years. It is necessary that a man in that position should be an autocrat. He has now full control with respect to matters such as are involved in the discussion that has gone on here to-day. The Comptroller of the Currency can permit a bank to exceed this very requirement of 10 per cent in making loans.

It rests absolutely in the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency to compel a bank to restore its reserve which bears an essential relation to its loans. So that, in principle, there is not one particle of power given to the Comptroller of the Currency by this provision that he does not already possess with respect to loans by banks as affecting their reserves.

Now, furthermore, it has been asked why banks have been permitted to invest in United States bonds without limitation if it is desirable to prescribe this limitaton as to loans based on Government bonds as security. One reason is that, prior to the enactment of the Federal reserve law, United States bonds were used as the basis for national-bank circulation. It was scarcely possible, under that system, for a bank to so clutter itself up with these securities so as to be unable, almost instantly, to realize on them, because of their convertibility into currency. These liberty bonds do not bear the circulation privilege, and while it may not be wise at this time to limit the amount that a bank may buy on its own account, it is desirable to put a limitation, in the way of regulations to be made by the comptroller, upon the amount a bank may loan to any one person, firm, or corporation with Government bonds, having no circulation privilege, as security. We want to exceed the 10 per cent limit, but we do not want to leave the thing wide open. We have got to lodge discretion somewhere against ill-judged and improvident banking. We have to trust somebody to say that a bank shall go so far, but no further.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Why, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS], who would not yield to me a while ago, advanced a proposition that would have defeated his own avowed purpose. Under his suggested amendment a bank might loan a single individual every dollar of its available funds for the purchase of liberty bonds so it would not have a dollar left to loan to any other patron of the bank. Thus, instead of diffusing the ownership of those liberty bonds, as the gentleman professed to desire, it would concentrate ownership——

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. No; I can not yield to the gentleman, because I have not the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 10 minutes and the gentleman from California has 7.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the Speaker notify me after I have used seven minutes? I may not use all of that time. Mr. Speaker, I hope the offered amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not prevail nor that of the gentleman who spoke 5 or 10 minutes ago. Let me explain this once again. Under (3), which is the new part added to existing law, and the only part which is added to existing law—under (3) banks may take notes of individuals, firms, and corporations beyond the 10 per cent limit as laid down under the law, provided those notes are secured by liberty bonds or certificates. The limitation, however, is 10 per cent. Banks can only do this to the extent of 10 per cent of their capital and surplus on liberty bonds unless by action of the comptroller and the Secretary of the Treasury. If it is advisable at a later date that this limit be raised beyond 10 per cent, then that may be raised by general rules and regulations of the comptroller, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, so that the provision in this bill with reference to the comptroller is not something which bears down on the banks. It is an opportunity for the comptroller, if conditions warrant and necessity arises, to give to the banks even more liberal powers in the way of loaning money upon the security of liberty bonds. I want to repeat, because it was stated otherwise, it is not a limitation placed by the comptroller upon the bank, but an opportunity for the comptroller to give the bank a greater liberty to loan upon the security of liberty bonds. In this connection I just want to point out this thing—I explained it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED]—that even though the security is good, and of course it is good, it is not the only thing to be considered. We have to consider at the same time what is called liquidity. In the case of a commercial transaction the money is coming in from the transaction itself whereby to pay the loans of the borrower, but in the case of liberty bonds a man may be perfectly good, and he may have plenty of property, but he does not get anything, and he is not going to get anything from any commercial transaction when he buys liberty bonds. He may be obliged, in order to meet his note, to dispose of those liberty bonds. It would be disastrous if the banks loaned too much money on these bonds and then had to take them over because, without any question, although the liberty bonds could be sold, the market might be overburdened with those bonds and it would be an unfortunate thing for this country to have that condition arise.

Another thing I want to point out which has been mentioned: It has been asked, if a bank can buy bonds to an unlimited degree, why not permit them to loan on notes secured by liberty bonds to an unlimited degree? My friends, there is a great big difference between those two transactions. Let me see if I can illustrate by analogy. When I go to a bank to borrow money I know just what I am doing, I know exactly what my indebtedness is, but if I indorse somebody else's note I am likely to say and feel secure that he is going to pay that note when due. I am likely not to be as cautious in indorsing somebody else's note when I expect him to pay as I am to borrow on my own account when I know that subsequently I must pay back the money borrowed.

It is exactly the same way with the bank. When the bank goes out to buy bonds it knows right at the beginning it is going to keep those bonds, that it is a fixed investment; and the bank at the very beginning of the transaction will say, "Can we afford to put so much money into a fixed investment?" But when they loan to others on United States bonds as security they do not intend to carry those bonds permanently; they do not intend to own them; they expect the borrowers to pay, and there is always a greater danger of overextension when the bank loans on bonds than there is when the bank buys bonds itself. In addition to that, they have the power, as stated, to buy bonds. Now, if we give them the power in an unlimited degree to loan on bonds at the same time, we are merely increasing the danger, if there is a danger, of getting too much of their funds tied up in fixed investment. The whole proposition is this, that we must come back to that again and again. Most liabilities of a bank consist of demand deposits. If a bank does not keep its funds in such shape that it can get the cash when it needs it to meet its demands, that bank is going to get into difficulty. The best kind of an investment for a bank under those conditions is to put its money or credit into that kind of security upon which it can realize quickly, and upon which it is sure to realize when the time comes. If it gets too much of its funds invested in securities, even liberty bonds, on which it finds it difficult to realize when the time comes, the bank is going to get into trouble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used seven minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall move the previous question on this bill, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that amendments may be offered without debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to consider the bill under the five-minute rule in the House?

Mr. PHELAN. No, Mr. Speaker. I am doing this after an agreement with the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], the ranking Republican member. I desire to move the previous question, and ask unanimous consent that gentlemen may offer amendments without debate.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman modify his request so that there may be a few minutes on a side on each amendment—say five minutes on a side?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not desire to be arbitrary at all, except that I do not like to take up too much time. I am willing to agree on a vote at 3 o'clock, say, or on any arrangement so that we can get the bill disposed of without too much debate. Every point has been discussed, I think, as fully as it ought to be.

Mr. HAYES. Five minutes on a side?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Let me suggest that the amendments be sent to the desk now, so that we may see how many there are and if we can not reach some agreement as to the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules of the House now amendments are in order, unless by unanimous consent——

Mr. PHELAN. I would like to ask how many amendments there are.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I think there are three.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up to its final passage, and that 30 minutes——

Mr. GILLETT. Five minutes a side on each amendment?

Mr. PHELAN. Five minutes a side on each amendment, and then I shall move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS], and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] each be permitted to offer an amendment to this bill, the amendments to be pending; that there shall be five minutes debate on each amendment, after which time the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and pending amendment or amendments to final passage.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I meant five minutes for and five minutes against each amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes on each side of the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Reserving the right to object, I suggest the amendments be read first. We may not want to debate them at all.

Mr. GLASS. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I suggest the amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] will not require any debate, because it will be accepted here.

Mr. PHELAN. That is one of the three. We can limit the debate to 20 minutes. I make it 20 minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am going to ask unanimous consent that all those proposed amendments be reported in advance and read for information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendments being read for the information of the House? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman will send them up, and the Clerk will first report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAYES: Page 2, line 15, after the word "such" insert the word "general."

Mr. PHELAN. The committee is ready to accept that right now, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 14, after the word "exceed" strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty-five"; and on line 15, after the word "association" strike out the comma and insert a period, and strike out the balance of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEARNS: Page 2, line 15, following the word "association" insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] asks unanimous consent that these two amendments be considered pending; that there shall be 10 minutes' debate on each amendment, after which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the pending amendments to final passage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] for five minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment in one particular, and that is to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the modification will be accepted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the debate which has been carried on with respect to this bill. I am still of the opinion that the amendment which has been offered ought to prevail and that this power that is proposed to be placed in the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury ought not to be put in this bill.

On page 2 of the bill we have three provisos that are exceptions to the 10 per cent rule. The first relates to bills of exchange. The second to commercial paper. The third covers loans on notes secured by liberty bonds of the face value of the loans. There are the three distinct propositions. Under the law as it existed for many, many years the banks had the power to make loans on No. 1 and No. 2 of these provisos without any limitation whatever. The 30 per cent proviso that is written in the national banking act relates only to the 10 per cent loaning capacity to an individual, and not to any of these provisos that are exceptional and in excess of that power. So that these two powers existed in our national banking system with no limit whatever and without hurt or injury therefrom anywhere during all these years. This bill proposes——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I can not do it. The gentleman has covered the ground in his speeches, and I understand his views thoroughly.

This bill proposes, as I read it now, after the enlightenment of the discussion, to limit the borrowing capacity on your note, accompanied by a liberty bond, to 10 per cent of capital and surplus, unless the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury adopt some regulation permitting more. My amendment proposes to limit the right to loan to 20 per cent on liberty bonds. That, you see, would make a total power to loan out 30 per cent to one person—10 per cent under the limitation that already exists in the law and 20 per cent additional on a note secured by liberty bonds. That fixes a just limit in the bill; that will take care of the question of excessive loaning.

But it does seem to me that when a bank has the power to invest every dollar of its capital stock and surplus in liberty bonds you ought not to put in a limitation of this kind with respect to making loans. Why? My friend from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] says these bonds are not liquid. This very legislation is going to make them liquid. When you buy the bonds they are not liquid, are they? When you allow a man to borrow on a bond you do not take only the bond. You have his security also; his note, which is liquid, which must be met when it becomes due, and he is the man who must go out and sell his bond, and if there is a discount on it he must lose that discount and pay the money to the bank. The argument that the bond is not liquid is not a sound argument at all in this connection.

If, therefore, as I say, the banking system has existed for all these years without any injury, without any hurt, without any break, with no limit of this kind, why put it on? This is a new feature of the law. You are writing by this statute into the laws of the Nation the grant of a new power.

My friend from Virginia says it already exists. Then, if it already exists, why reenact it? It is a useless waste of effort. But if it does not, I for one will constantly object to the further delegation of our powers to others to exercise for us and in our place. If there is any limit to be put upon this power of loaning, let us, the Congress, put the limit on. That is for Congress, and not for the Comptroller of the Currency or the Secretary of the Treasury, I care not how immaculate or good they may be. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GLASS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the fundamental defect in the argument used by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] is that he persistently refuses to see or recognize a distinction that is, as I see it, perfectly clear. One reason why there has not heretofore been any such restriction as is proposed here upon the acquirement of liberty bonds in banking loans is the fact, as I stated a while ago, that other United States bonds issued prior to the war had the circulation privilege, so that they constituted a liquid asset, due to their convertibility. No matter what amout a given bank had in its vaults it could at any moment realize on them by impounding them in the Treasury at Washington and receiving therefor circulating notes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GLASS. No; I have not time to yield.

Now, that is a clear and vital distinction. Liberty bonds have not the circulation privilege, and if banks should clutter up with them to too great an extent on their own account they would have no relief, except by sacrificing the bonds.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. But are they not as good as commercial paper?

Mr. GLASS. No; they are not as good as commercial paper, because 95 per cent of the transactions of banks are based on commercial paper, which, as a general practice, automatically clears itself at maturity.

As to the power of the comptroller, of course the gentleman does not understand me to say that the comptroller has this particular power right now. If he had, it would be a waste of time of the House to propose to give to the Secretary of the Treasury and the comptroller a power already possessed. But what I did say, and what I now repeat, is that the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency in particular, has power not only tantamount to the power that we propose to give them here as a limitation upon improvident banking, but they have a greater power than we propose to give them here, and have had for 50 years. This provision is in a sense a limitation. In other words, we remove the restriction of 10 per cent on the right of banks to loan to an individual, firm, or corporation; but the removal of the limitation is made subject to authority given the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to provide general rules and regulations to guard banks against an improvident exercise of the right granted.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The difference between loaning money on liberty bonds and loaning money on 90-day commercial paper is that the liberty bonds run for a period of 30 years before they have to be taken up, while the 90-day commercial paper is liquidated in 90 days.

Mr. GLASS. It automatically liquidates itself, while the other is a long-time investment security. And, as my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] has stated to the House, there is a vast difference between the value of collateral and the nature of collateral.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. But is there not a note for which the bond is security, that matures in 30, 60, or 90 days or 4 months in every instance?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but if there is a failure to meet the note, there is no way to enforce collection and get the cash by sale of the security.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not mean to say that a liberty bond is not salable. Heaven forbid!

Mr. GLASS. Not always at par. Some of them have sold below par.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Who loses the difference if it sells below par? Does not the borrower lose it? It is not the business of the bank.

Mr. GLASS. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania has failed or refused to recognize the difference between practices heretofore, when United States bonds had the circulation privilege, and when it was impossible to embarrass the banks by holding bonds, because they were interchangeable for currency, and conditions now, when there is no convertibility of bonds into currency.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. But is not the same thing true of every other kind of collateral that it put up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] on his amendment, if he desires.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I ask for a vote on my amendment first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that both amendments were to be pending, but if it is the desire of the House to have the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania now, the Chair will put the question on that amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 29, noes 39.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEARNS: Page 2, line 15, after the word "association," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, the vote that has just been taken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] disclosed the fact that it was strictly a party vote. My amendment is exactly in harmony with the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], except that he asked to strike out 10 per cent and insert 20 per cent. I hope that when the vote is taken on my amendment it will not again disclose that this center aisle that runs through the Chamber will divide the votes again. In support of my wish and hope in this matter I am going to read just a short sentence from a letter written to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] by the Hon. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury. He says:

In our successive liberty loan campaigns I have been not inconsiderably embarrassed by the limitation imposed by section 5200 of the national bank act upon the amount of loans which national banks may make to any one borrower. I am told that there are a good many banks which will, because of this limitation, decline to make loans where their customers desire to subscribe. It also furnishes a convenient excuse for those who do not want to assist in the liberty loan campaigns.

And then further on he says:

There is no small inconsistency in asking a bank to subscribe for Government obligations for its own account, as it may do without limitation with reference to the amount of its capital and surplus, and at the same time prohibiting it from lending on these same Government securities and taking the obligation of a responsible borrower. The effect of the present limitation may be at some time to make it necessary to ask the banks to buy largely of the Government's bonds for their own account simply because they are prohibited from lending as freely upon the security of the bonds to responsible borrowers who, if loans were available, would be willing to make the subscriptions. It is obviously healthier in every way to induce persons and corporations to subscribe for the bonds though they must borrow freely to pay for them, and thus to place such persons and corporations in a position where they will be under pressure to practice economy in order to pay for them than to have the banks buy the bonds for their own account.

Secretary McAdoo has asked for this legislation, and the only thing I hope to obtain by the adoption of my amendment is that any man who is without funds can go to his own bank and buy liberty bonds and turn those bonds over to the bank as collateral security for the loan. This bill itself provides that this can be done provided the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall both concur in the view that it ought to be done. Secretary McAdoo has asked for it. Then, why should we write into this law a provision that this can be done if he again says it ought to be done. He has said that in his liberty-loan drives over the country, in his attempts to sell liberty bonds, this has been his one great handicap. Then, why not remove that handicap at this time? We are now on the eve of the sale of the third liberty bond issue. As he himself says, if a bank has the right to buy an unlimited number of liberty bonds, there is no reason why the bank should not be allowed to loan the money to let its customers buy them and hold them as security. That is all there is in this bill, and why should it not be done without rules and regulations being first written by these two men. Let the law itself be the rules and regulations. As I said a few minutes ago in this Hall it seems to me a very futile thing on the part of this Congress to write a law, pass it by both branches of Congress, and then put in a proviso that it shall become operative provided some other power says it shall.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the gentleman believe that if his amendment is adopted it will encourage the sale of liberty loan bonds?

Mr. KEARNS. I believe if this amendment is adopted there will be thousands of additional men and women in this country who will buy liberty bonds. We will find them going to the bank, borrowing this money and giving these bonds as collateral security, who otherwise would not be interested in the proposition because of lack of funds. As I said before, the more men and women and children you can induce in this way to become financially interested in this great war, the better I believe it will be for the country at large. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts opposed to the amendment?

Mr. PHELAN. I am opposed to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] said he hoped the dividing line on this amendment would not run up the center aisle, and that there would not be a party division. I sincerely hope that is so, and I desire to say that during the time I have been a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency it has been a pleasure to work with men who think so little of partisanship, and who so seldom bring partisanship into our deliberations.

Mr. KEARNS. I said that thought was engendered by the other vote.

Mr. PHELAN. I understand; but the Republican members of this committee joined with the Democratic members and brought in this bill by a unanimous report. I want to point out to the gentleman that I think his amendment will defeat the very purpose he seeks, because under his amendment the bill will be left in this shape that an individual can borrow only 10 per cent upon notes secured by liberty bonds, whereas with the words in the bill which he seeks to strike out the opportunity is given, if necessity requires, for the Comptroller of the Currency, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to increase that amount by general rules and regulations.

Mr. KEARNS. But you can not borrow that much unless the comptroller says so.

Mr. PHELAN. Oh, the gentleman is absolutely incorrect. Up to 10 per cent the comptroller has nothing to say about it. That is the plain and clear language of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the previous question is ordered on the bill to final passage. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PHELAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, the conferees yesterday afternoon on the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 9054) found that the clerks of the Senate in fixing the totals had made several mistakes. It was suggested that the conferees could not, within the rule, correct the totals. The Senate has passed a resolution asking for the withdrawal of the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the Agricultural appropriation bill was sent to conference the other day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to vacate the order of the House previously made sending the Agricultural appropriation bill to conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now the gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 3, 1918.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has reconsidered the vote by which it insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9054) "making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate said bill, with the Senate amendments and accompanying papers.

Attest:

JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow me to ask him a question? Will he explain what this amendment in the Senate is relating to the grading of potatoes? I have had a number of telegrams about it.

Mr. LEVER. I have also had a number myself. The Bureau of Markets in the Department of Agriculture has established some tentative grades for white potatoes. There are complaints in certain States about the grading, especially in Michigan. The Senate prohibits the Department of Agriculture from establishing or enforcing the grading of potatoes. The House bill said nothing about it.

CONSOLIDATION OF BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 10205 to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any two or more national banking associations located within the same county, city, town, or village may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, consolidate into one association on such terms and conditions as may be lawfully agreed upon by a majority of the board of directors of each association proposing to consolidate, and be ratified and confirmed by the affirmative vote of the shareholders of each such association owning at least two-thirds of its capital stock, at a meeting to be held on the call of the directors after publishing notice of the time, place, and object of the meeting for four consecutive weeks in some newspaper published in the place where the said association is located, and if no newspaper is published in the place, then in a paper published nearest thereto, and after sending such notice to each shareholder of record by registered mail at least 10 days prior to said meeting: Provided, That the capital stock of such consolidated association shall not be less than that required under existing law for the organization of a national bank in the place in which it is located: And provided further, That when such consolidation shall have been effected and approved by the comptroller any shareholder of either of the associations so consolidated may give notice to the directors of the association in which he is interested within 20 days from the date of the certificate of approval of the comptroller that he dissents from the plan of consolidation as adopted and approved, whereupon he shall be entitled to receive the value of the shares so held by him, to be ascertained by an appraisal made by a committee of three persons, one to be selected by the shareholder, one by the directors, and the third by the two so chosen; and in case the value so fixed shall not be satisfactory to the shareholder he may within five days after being notified of the appraisal appeal to the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall cause a reappraisal to be made, which shall be final and binding; and if said reappraisal shall exceed the value fixed by said committee, the bank shall pay the expenses of the reappraisal; otherwise the appellant shall pay said expenses, and the value so ascertained and determined shall be deemed to be a debt due and be forthwith paid to said shareholder from said bank, and the shares so paid shall be surrendered and after due notice sold at public auction within 30 days after the final appraisement provided for in this act.

SEC. 2. That associations consolidating with another association under the provisions of this act shall not be required to deposit lawful money for their outstanding circulation, but their assets and liabilities may be reported by the association with which they have consolidated.

The following committee amendments were read:

The amendments recommended by the committee are as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "association," insert the following: "Under the charter of either existing banks."

Page 2, line 9, after the word "consolidated," insert the following: "who has not voted for such consolidation."

Page 3, line 9, after the word "consolidated," insert the following: "And all the rights, franchises, and interests of the said national bank so consolidated in and to every species of property, personal and mixed, and choses in action thereto belonging, shall be deemed to be transferred to and vested in such national bank into which it is consolidated without any deed or other transfer, and the said consolidated national bank shall hold and enjoy the same and all rights of property, franchises, and interest in the same manner and to the same extent as was held and enjoyed by the national bank so consolidated therewith."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to simplify the procedure for consolidation of national banks. Under the present existing law, if two banks in a city desire to consolidate, one or the other has to liquidate under the tedious process now provided by statute for that purpose.

Under the proposed bill the question of consolidation is determined in the same way as is the question of liquidation under the present law. Under the law at present if a bank wants to go into liquidation that would be determined by a vote of two-thirds of the stockholders. Under this bill two-thirds might vote for consolidation of the two banks directly without going through the process of liquidation provided by statute. Ample provision is made in the bill to take care of the rights of dissenting stockholders who may not want to belong to the consolidated organization. Appropriate provision is made by the amendment to the last section for the transfer and vesting of rights of the two associations into the consolidated bank.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. McFADDEN. In the discussion of the bill in committee one question comes to my mind, and that is where banks are consolidated which charter number is to be used. How is that provided for?

Mr. WINGO. The first committee amendment is that they may consolidate under the charter of either of the existing banks. I think that would permit them to retain the number of one. That was the idea of the amendment, to permit them to go on in the name of one and under the charter of one, and if they wished to change the name they could do it under the same charter and under the same number.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it possible that the revenues would be affected by the passage of this bill, affording, as it does, an opportunity for banks to consolidate?

Mr. WINGO. Affected in what way?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it reduce Government revenues or taxes in any way?

Mr. WINGO. I can not off-hand think of any way in which it could be affected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it mean a reduction of capital or surplus affecting Government revenues?

Mr. WINGO. No; this provides for a consolidation under the charter of either bank. If they wish to reduce the capital, they could do it under existing law, or if they wished to increase the capital stock they could do so under existing law. It does not change the provisions of existing law with reference to the reduction or the increase of capital stock.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am asking this as a member of the committee having something to do with taxation. Would it have any bearing on the Government taxes upon excess profits or surplus or the division thereof?

Mr. WINGO. No; I should think not, because the rights of the Government would accrue under the facts as they exist prior to the consolidation, and if they consolidated the assets of the combined association would be the same as the assets of the two separate associations, and the tax would be determined upon the new association and the profits made after the consolidation. So I do not see how it could affect the war-profits provision of the present law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman confirms the statement set out in the report that the object of the bill is only to simplify the consolidation of any two banks that desire to consolidate?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. The bill was offered at the request of the Treasury Department, where their attention had been called to the necessity for it frequently.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask if any particular illustrations were brought to the attention of the committee showing how banks might avail themselves of this privilege?

Mr. WINGO. No; there was no particular case called to our attention. The gentleman will notice that we limit it to the same county, town or village. There was no particular case of any two particular banks in the mind of the committee at all.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I have given some thought to this bill and I can see no possible objection to it. It seems to me a very desirable thing to do, not only to permit banks to consolidate, but to encourage them to consolidate. It is very much better for any community to have one or two or three substantial banks, with ample capital to take care of the interests of the community, than it is to have five or six small ones competing for the same business, with less capacity to take care of their customers. Banking business by that sort of competition is often greatly overdone. Too many banks start in a community, and when men who are in charge of such institutions find there are too many, I can seen no possible objection or danger in permitting them to consolidate to such extent as they desire, because I believe they can better take care of the commercial interests of the community through consolidation than when they are divided, and when they so consolidate this should be accomplished without unnecessary expense. Much of the expense attending consolidation of banks heretofore this bill, if it becomes a law, will eliminate. I am heartily in favor of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if this bill were to be considered under the five-minute rule I would not take the floor, but I take the floor in order to obtain the opinion of the gentleman having the bill in charge as to whether there is any provision made in this bill after consolidation takes place to protect litigants in suits against a bank that is being merged, in the collection of their judgments. In section 2 it is provided that all of the rights, franchises, and interests of the said national banks so consolidated in and to every species of property, personal and mixed, and choses in action thereto belonging, shall be deemed to be transferred to and vested in such national bank with which it is consolidated without any deed or other transfer. There is no mention whatsoever to take care of a condition which might arise where suits are pending either in law or in equity against the bank that is going to be merged, in so far as the collection of judgments that may ultimately be entered against the bank that is going into what is virtually a liquidation, is concerned. Does not the gentleman believe some such amendment should be adopted for this reason. If you transfer all of the assets of the sued bank to the third party bank, where is there going to be any relief for the litigant in the recovery of his judgment. Of course, if he has a judgment, and the judgment has been entered, it is a lien upon the real estate of the merged bank, and it rests with the judgment holder to levy execution on the personal property of the bank. I am now assuming a case where the bank that is being sued in court, and ultimately a judgment recovered against it after the bank has merged its property under the provisions of the bill in a third party bank. How is that litigant going to recover his judgment. I yield to some distinguished lawyer on the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would have my personal opinion about that, it is this: The consolidation will be under one or the other of the charters. The bank will continue the corporate existence of one or the other of the two consolidating banks. If the liability is the liability of the bank whose name is retained and whose corporate existence is retained, then there is certainly no question but that it is responsible for any liability of the bank as it existed before it took on the new bank.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question about that in that case.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman will notice that there is no provision made for transfer of real estate. That is to be done by deeds. The assets of the bank that loses its existence are to be transferred to the two banks in trust, of course, for all liabilities of the bank which is being merged and consolidated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; I take issue there that it is a transfer in trust. Under the provisions of section 2 it is a transfer absolutely, first, upon the board of directions approving the merger; second, confirmed by a vote of two-thirds of the stockholders of the bank; and, third, that action being approved by the Comptroller of the Currency. When that action takes place, then the assets of the party bank immediately go over to the bank that is to continue in business.

Mr. STEVENSON. They are, however, made by law liable. The assets of each bank are made by law liable to the liabilities of the bank, and they can not be transferred without covering that liability.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is there any warrant to say that before judgment is entered against a bank that its assets are subject to a liability?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not say that, but they are made specifically liable to all debts of the corporation. I agree with the gentleman that it may be better to insert a provision there—I am not talking for the committee now—specifically making the new corporation, when it takes over the assets, liable for all the liabilities of both. I think that would be an amendment which would be beneficial.

Mr. WINGO. I will state to the gentleman very frankly that since the gentleman made his objection I have been turning it over in my mind, and I am satisfied that the consolidated institution is liable for the debts of each bank, but I will state this much, that if there is any doubt in the minds of anyone I see no objection to a reasonable provision being put in here that would make it beyond any question. Of course, there is no desire on the part——

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman believe as wholly in harmony with the idea of the bill that this bank that takes over the assets should be privileged to be substituted in court as the party to any action?

Mr. WINGO. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that it can come in and ask to be made a party, and have a right to insist upon being made a party.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there ought to be some specific amendment providing for that——

Mr. WINGO. But let me offer this suggestion to the gentleman: The rules of law with reference to the things are clear and well settled, and if we undertake to amend the rule of law now governing mergers, we do a dangerous thing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here are the assets of a bank that have been transferred absolutely over to the other bank by action of the board of directors and two-thirds of the majority of the stockholders. You also provide for any dissenting stockholder who does not approve of that merger within 30 days to submit his claim for the value of his shares, and have that amount determined through the procedure suggested here in the bill.

The whole idea of this bill is to allow the bank being merged to transfer all its assets over to another bank. Now, take a suppositious case, where a suit is pending against the bank that seeks to wind up its affairs by merger. The suit is prolonged a long time—an important suit involving hundreds of thousands of dollars. A long time after all the stockholders of the old bank have obtained stock in the new bank, and those who did not wish to accept stock in the new bank have sold their rights out, a judgment is entered. Where then can this judgment creditor seek relief? Only against the stockholders. Well, the stockholders who have obtained stock in the new bank could have no real grievance, but the stockholder who has sold out his right based upon the stock in the merged bank would have a grievance if he would be obliged to pay that judgment. I think there should be and ought to be some provision here whereby the bank that accepts all the assets should be also subject to the liabilities of the old bank.

Mr. WINGO. Let me make the suggestion to the gentleman right there. There is a clear difference in those two transactions—first, the purchase of one bank's assets by another for a specific consideration paid and the absorption of the assets of another upon consolidation. In the first instance now, where there was a purchase for value and the value paid, there is no question but the purchasing bank would take the assets free of the judgment lien afterwards created; but in the first case there is a sale for value which passes and is paid. In the consolidation case the only consideration is the implied liability for the debts of the consolidated concern, the concern that is taken into consolidation. What other consideration is there?

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, in this merger, as I understand it, the bank that is to continue in business purchases virtually all the property and rights of the old bank and pays for it in its own capital stock and gets full title to the assets. But suppose a suit is pending against the old bank? It runs along a number of years. There will be no assets of the old bank to pay the judgment. The only way to have it paid would be against the stockholders.

There are one or two minor matters to which I wish to call attention of the gentleman who has charge of the bill. I assume——

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like to say to the gentleman, if he will permit before going away from that, that I agree that the matter could be made plainer. Why not add this section as a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. The association into which said associations are consolidated shall be liable for the contracts of the consolidating associations and can be sued thereon.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have an amendment which I have prepared which is virtually the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to make inquiry concerning some minor matters. I ask the attention of the gentleman having the bill in charge. I suppose that the two-thirds of the shareholders for ratification as provided in section 1 refers to two-thirds of the outstanding capital stock, not the capital stock as represented by the authorization?

Mr. WINGO. It simply means the outstanding stock. There could not be any shareholders except those holding outstanding stock.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says shareholders of two-thirds of the capital stock.

Mr. WINGO. That means outstanding.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are banks which have treasury stock, and on that there will be no question. It says shareholders of two-thirds of the capital stock. If there was a capital of $300,000 and there was but $200,000 issued, all the shareholding of the two-thirds of the capital stock would be $200,000, but, of course, the intent of the committee is two-thirds of the capital stock outstanding.

There is one other matter of minor consequence, as to the time in which you require the dissenting stock shareholder who does not wish to join this merger to take exception, limited to 20 days. It says:

That when such consolidation shall have been effected and approved by the comptroller any shareholder of either of the associations so consolidated may give notice to the directors of the association in which he is interested within 20 days.

And then there is another time limit of 30 days, where the stock is to be sold by public auction. I thought that perhaps that 20 days was a little too short a time for the dissenting shareholder to express his determination to accept stock in the new corporation or to have his stock purchased by the bank.

Mr. WINGO. Twenty days is three weeks, approximately. Do you not think that a man ought to make up his mind in seven weeks' time?

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be some of these shareholders distant from the situs of the bank, and who probably would not get notice of the action.

Mr. WINGO. He has got to have at least 10 days. Each stockholder gets a notice by registered mail 10 days prior to the meeting, under the bill. The gentleman, I think, has forgotten that provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. He has 10 days' notice, but he does not receive under this bill any notice as to what action the shareholders take upon the consolidation.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. He has a right to be at the meeting.

Mr. STAFFORD. He has a right to be at the meeting, but there is nothing here which provides for him to receive notice as to what action the shareholders take at this meeting.

Mr. WINGO. He is supposed to be there, and if he has not enough interest to be there in person or send a representative or make inquiry of somebody that was there, do you not think that he ought to be able to find out in 20 days what was done?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can imagine a case where the shareholder was living at a distance, and where he would not receive notice in two weeks after the merger had been voted.

One further question and then I am through, and that is whether the gentleman does not think if this stock of the dissenting stockholder is to be sold at public auction it should not be sold under regulations to be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. WINGO. Why, no; I do not. It is a public sale. A legal sale at public auction is pretty clearly understood. And I think it is better to provide for public sale. It has a clear, definite meaning.

Mr. STAFFORD. One other question. In the case of this dissenting stockholder the value as ascertained is to be deemed a debt due, and later to be forthwith paid to the shareholder of said bank. Which bank?

Mr. WINGO. The bank that is consolidated; the bank that gets the assets.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the question, whether it was the merged bank or the consolidated bank.

Mr. WINGO. It is the bank that is consolidated. There would be but one bank then. He would get it from the bank that had the assets.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed on a subject not exactly in line with the bill now being considered before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks leave to proceed, not confining his remarks to the subject matter now under consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the great struggle that is now raging in northern France, and has been raging for now 14 days, has come to a temporary standstill. The line at the present time can be accurately located on the map. As no one knows how soon that line may be moved in either direction, and as we all feel an intense interest in the direction in which it may be moved, it occurred to me that it would be of interest and perhaps helpful to the membership of the House if I brought before you a map which very clearly indicates the present location of the western front in Picardy.

The map before you is on a scale of 3.95 miles to the inch, or approximately 4 miles to the inch. You can compute the distances approximated by multiplying each inch on the map by 4, which will give you the number of miles. A faint red line running down here [indicating] is the line that was held in July, 1916.

Mr. MADDEN. Held by whom?

Mr. TILSON. By both sides. It was the western front. Of course, if reduced to a mathematical line it should run through the middle of "no man's land." It represents the line as held before the great retreat of the Germans. This represents the line to which they retreated, the great Hindenberg line. It is represented in red across the map. This is Cambrai. This is Arras. This is Amiens. Here is the railroad running from the channel ports through Amiens down to Paris, and, unfortunately, it is not more than 5 miles from the present battle line.

This blue line represents the first week's advance of the Germans. That was last Thursday. The yellow line, showing a little gain here at Ayette, south of Arras, and a considerable gain here south of the Somme all the way to this point five or six miles west of Montdidier, indicates the gain of last Friday. You will note that at that time there was this deep salient thrust eastward on a line drawn roughly through Marcelcave, Caix, Warvillers, and Bouillancourt, which left two salients, one on either side, thrusting westward, creating two dangerous places to be attacked. It therefore appeared probable that if the Germans did not attempt to flatten the central salient, the allies would attempt to flatten the other two. So the next day the Germans proceeded to make their drive toward Demuin, Mezieres, and La Neuville, and flattened this salient out to the yellow line.

Since last Friday all the material gains that have been made—and they were made for the most part on the following day, on Saturday—have been in the region north and west of Montdidier. The farthest western thrust, which we all hope is the high tide of German military success, may be indicated roughly by a line drawn through Demuin, Moreuil, Mailly, Grivesnes, Cantigny, and Mesnilx. Since that time there have been a number of local successes where the line has shifted somewhat, sometimes one way and sometimes the other, but not enough to vary the line substantially.

The blue on the map is water, this being the Somme River, which winds around here and meanders toward Amiens. This, which the Germans used for a left flank protection on their advance, is the river Oise and the valley of the Oise, which makes a very strong position for them.

Looking at it geographically, this, the Oise Valley, would seem to be the place to counterattack the German line, but by looking at a map of this kind, which gives not only the geography but the topography and the terrain, you can see that it would be an extremely difficult line to attack, and thus far it has not been attacked. The only stiff fighting that has been going on in the last day or two has been in this region around Montdidier.

I do not attempt to explain the battle itself, but simply the map and the location of the line. Have gentlemen any questions to ask?

Mr. COX. How far is that retreat—the longest distance across there?

Mr. TILSON. You can measure it with your hand, figuring 4 miles to the inch. That is something like 9 inches, or 35 miles at the farthest point.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know how many square miles of territory the Germans have captured there? Does he know how much it will aggregate?

Mr. TILSON. No. It is divided up into 2-inch squares; and, of course, each one of those is nearly 8 miles on the side. That would make approximately 64 square miles to each 2-inch square.

Mr. MADDEN. If it is 35 miles wide and 8 miles long, it would be 280 square miles.

Mr. ROBBINS. How far is the advanced point from Paris now?

Mr. TILSON. The distance from Paris, as I recall, is fifty-odd miles.

Mr. SNYDER. Fifty-seven miles.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; about that.

Mr. COX. Where are our allies' lines now with reference to where they were when they settled down to trench warfare after the famous retreat of 1914?

Mr. TILSON. This faint red line running down through the map there shows that line.

Mr. COX. So that they are west of the line?

Mr. TILSON. They are west of the line all the way from a point about 12 miles north of Albert down to a point about 3 miles west of Lassigny.

Mr. COX. They are 12 miles west of the line of 1914?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. COX. The question I put was, Where are the armies fighting now with reference to where they finally settled down after the rush of 1914?

Mr. TILSON. After the Battle of the Marne was over they settled down to this line. Of course, they overran a lot of this country before the Marne.

Mr. COX. Then they are west of the line of 1914?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; but not west of the farthest point which the Germans reached. They are west of the line to which they retreated in 1914.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, in 1914 the farthest west the German patrols reached was in the vicinity of where they are now.

I wanted to ask the gentleman from Connecticut the distance from Montdidier to Paris. Assuming that Montdidier is the farthest west, it is about the nearest point to Paris, is it not?

Mr. TILSON. I think it is something over 50 miles.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think the gentleman will find it is very much less than 50 miles.

Mr. COX. What is the character of the ground there? Is it mountainous or flat?

Mr. TILSON. It is rather flat, according to this map. There are no elevations indicated in this region of over 100 meters.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I passed over there a number of times. The advance that the Germans made was over a hilly country. The Hindenberg line is in a rough, hilly, semimountainous country in a region perfectly desolated; villages absolutely destroyed. And when you read an account of this and that and the other village being occupied by the Germans you know they have occupied a point where the village once was.

Mr. COX. So that where they are fighting now is level land, practically.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes. East of Amiens it strikes a country that is as nearly level as any in France, a country that has been under excellent cultivation during the past year, one that has not been touched by the ravages of war, and which contains the finest roads in the world; and it must be admitted that the Germans have made a very distinct advance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, in the Sixty-second, Sixty-fourth, and in the Sixty-fifth Congresses I introduced a bill for the purpose of requiring receivers for insolvent national banks to file accounts in the district courts of the United States. I have never been able to find any reason why the Committee on Banking and Currency should not give consideration to a measure of this kind. I would offer it at this time as an amendment to one of the pending bills, but I am frank to say that I do not believe it is entirely germane.

But I want to make this statement in the way of bringing this matter, which I think has been overlooked by the honorable committee, to the attention of the House. If any Members here ever lived in a district where they have gone through the agony of taking care of an insolvent national bank, such Members will realize what those people have gone through. It may not be known, but the stockholders, the innocent stockholders of an insolvent national bank, are required to pay into the receiver of a national bank when it is declared insolvent and a receiver is appointed the par value of their stock. That man or that woman never knows from the time they make that payment what has become of their money. In other words, there is no public record accessible to the people who are directly interested in the affairs of that bank, and this bill would require a receiver appointed to take the assets of the bank and do with them just what the assignee of an assigned estate, or the trustee of a bankrupt estate, or the executor or administrator of a decedent's estate, would do. I think it is only fair that some such amendment should be made to the banking laws. In other words, the depositors of a national bank or the stockholders who have had nothing to say touching the affairs of the bank, are asked to walk up and pay over their money and pay the indebtedness of the bank. They do not know what the indebtedness is, they do not know what the expense of winding up the bank may be, they do not know what the attorney's fees will be, they do not know what the receiver's fees will be. It is a relic of the old archaic banking system of years ago whereby this money is paid in and the receiver accounts to no one except the Comptroller of the Currency, and that report of account is not accessible to anyone either for inspection or to file exceptions.

The bill I have introduced would require the receiver, six months after his appointment and annually thereafter during said receivership, to file an account in the district court of the United States for the district in which the bank is located, which account shall consist of a full and complete statement of all moneys received by said receiver on account of said receivership, and also a complete account or statement of all moneys paid out by said receiver, to whom and for what purpose paid, including the total cost of such receivership, attorney's fees, and other expenses. The account when so filed shall be marked "filed" by the clerk of said district court, and may be examined, as other accounts filed in said court, by any person or persons. Exceptions may be filed to said account or accounts by any person or persons or corporation interested in the affairs of said bank, either as stockholders, officers, or creditors, within 30 days from the date of the filing of said account, and such exceptions shall be heard and determined by the judge or judges of said court as exceptions are now heard and determined when filed to accounts now provided by law to be filed in said courts.

Now, what happens when the affairs of a national bank are to be wound up? The Comptroller of the Currency sends some young man, who knows nothing about the neighborhood, knows nothing about the people, but comes there with authority back of him to arbitrarily wind up the affairs of the bank. He tells the people to pay the money into the bank—that it is insolvent. They do not know why, never have a chance even to know anything about what becomes of their money, know nothing about the expenses of the receivership; and it seems to me that the time has come when we should treat an insolvent national bank as any other estate and wind it up legally, upon a fair and honorable basis, consistent with the principle of treating everybody with fairness, and not seek to keep from the people directly interested full knowledge of transactions in which they have a direct and vital interest. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order and revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DUTY OF THE CITIZEN IN TIME OF WAR.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, when the war resolution was being discussed on April 5, 1917, I said in the course of my remarks:

> But when it does pass it will become the duty of all citizens to uphold the hands of the Executive. Their loyalty, their Americanism, will not be questioned. We will all remain a unit in giving support to the war and will remain a united people, with common purposes and common aspirations.

When the selective-draft bill was being considered on April 27, 1917, I said:

> Congress in its wisdom has declared war. Every patriotic citizen should now respond to the Nation's call for service and bear the burdens laid upon him. This war will tax the coming generations. Sorrow, distress, misery, and death will follow; yet I believe the American people will patiently bear all of these burdens, even to crucifixion itself if need be, in defense of our liberties.

These were then my sentiments publicly expressed. So are they now. I have loyally supported the war program. Since the war began partisanship has had no place in my thoughts or purposes. I enlisted in my country's cause. This is my war and it is your war.

When the war began we made a covenant with the soldier boys who are fighting our battles that we would sustain and protect them. We must now fulfill this covenant. We have no right to send the boys into the trenches unless we are willing to back them with our money, our love, and our lives. While the cannons roar let no one pull back in the traces, nor by speech, act, or deed weaken the cause for which we are fighting.

On September 14, 1917, in the course of my remarks I called attention to the fact that the revenue bill then pending would not raise sufficient funds by taxation to carry out our war program and at the same time protect our national credit. The greatest problem now before the country is how to successfully finance the war.

From the best estimates I can obtain, the total expenditures of the Government, including loans to our allies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, will be $16,116,591,347, while the total authorizations for the year amount to about $21,000,000,000. In all probability a greater sum will be required to carry us through the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

It is difficult to comprehend the vastness of the required appropriations. If you had $20 for every minute, night and day, since the birth of Christ you would have less than the sum authorized for this fiscal year.

How much should we raise by taxation and how much by bonds? I have maintained that we should adopt something like the half-and-half plan which has frequently been suggested, namely, first deduct the sum loaned to the allies and raise the balance 50 per cent by bonds and 50 per cent by taxes.

The revenue laws now on the statute books will produce an amount estimated at $3,856,800,000 annually. To carry out the half-and-half plan the revenues received from taxation should have been approximately 40 per cent greater.

If the present rate of speed in making appropriations and in making loans to our allies is maintained for two or three years we will find our country badly crippled financially unless we materially increase our tax levies. If we fail to do so we must pay the penalty by constantly increasing the interest rate or ultimately sell our bonds at a discount.

Business is now good. Millions of war profits have been made during the last three years and will continue to accrue while the war lasts. The time to levy the war excess profits is now, while the war profits are being reaped. Now is the time to conserve our national resources. We are now subject to the dangers of inflation and the dangers of high cost of living.

Money wins the lawsuit; it rules the commerce, the business world; it wins battles upon land and sea. We must get it from those who have it. Insolvency brings failure, defeat, and ruin. We ought now to prepare for a long contest and make our victory sure. This we must do by economy; by guarding zealously our financial credit.

The continued bond issues will increase interest rates, while the bond dealers will hammer the bonds below par. During the Civil War bonds reached the low level of 41.49 cents on the dollar. We paid the debt in full. The interest charges and the depreciation penalized the Government as much as three times the amount received for the bonds. Our liberty bonds are now under par.

The Congress recognized the necessity of having an efficient Army and did not hesitate to say to the youth of the land, "We need you to fight the Nation's battles." The mother's tears, the happiness of the homes, love's companionships were all pushed aside because of the Nation's needs in an hour of peril.

We need money to carry on the war until an honorable peace can be secured. There is but one place to go for it, and that is to those who have it. The drafted boy may be a farmer, a laborer, a lawyer, a doctor, or business man with an earning capacity of $2,000 or more per year. Yet he must give up his income, his business, and his home. He must assume all the perils of the battle fields and all the horrors that await him in the trenches of Europe. If he should be so fortunate as to return, he will be without money, without practice, without business, and must commence all over again.

In this hour of peril money is just as necessary as men in our supreme effort to win the war. We find the taxpayers pursuing a lucrative business, many of them making immense profits out of the war, and living in fine homes in safe places. The same power that took the boy from the home now asks the taxpayer to give up only a portion of his excess profits. He should be asked to contribute a far greater amount, for, compared with the sacrifice of the conscripted man, his sacrifice is inconsiderable. Some must fight and some must pay, so men and money must be impressed for service together.

We are raising by taxation about 23 per cent of the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. Last year England levied 80 per cent on excess war profits. The chancellor of the exchequer now proposes to increase the levy to 88 per cent for the coming year. We are now levying less than 32 per cent on excess war profits. This levy should be doubled at least, and no injury would be done by increasing it to 80 per cent. Likewise, the levy on excessive incomes should be materially increased.

Armour & Co., in 1913, a year of peace, had a net profit of $6,028,197. The 1917 profit is estimated at over $30,000,000, largely reaped out of the misfortunes and miseries of war. A levy of 80 per cent on the excess profits above the year of peace would still give this company nearly $5,000,000 in excess of its peace profits. In 1916, in addition to the earnings, this company issued stock dividends in the sum of $80,000,000.

It is estimated that American corporations are now making in excess profits above the peace profits a sum of not less than $3,600,000,000. The steel companies are making more than nine times the profits they made during peace years. If the capital of these corporations is left unimpaired and they are permitted to earn their peace profits and allowed to keep 20 per cent of the excess war profits, they would still be making millions of dollars for the stockholders which they could not make except through the misfortunes of war. What sacrifice would they make as compared with the boys in our armies?

The world war is rooting love out of the human heart and is breeding a prolific crop of millionaires. In 1916 we had 14,571 millionaires; in 1917 we had 22,696, and 1918 promises a still greater increase.

The citizen's duty is plain. He should economize, avoid all waste, spend less, and save more. He should give up the nonessentials and stand ready for sacrifice. The Government needs all the essentials to carry on the war program, and the citizen should not compete with his Government or increase its burdens.

The big question at this hour of the war program is shipbuilding, and next to it is production of food. Without ships to transport the food we fail. Without ships to transport our troops, guns, and war material we fail. The citizen who helps in food production or in building ships is rendering a great service to the Nation in its hour of peril. A blanket offer to help and waiting to be called will not suffice. The Nation's call is for initiative and assistance in the whole war program by acts and deeds.

Our soldiers can fight the real battles successfully only when we are united at home, only when every citizen becomes a part of the contest. The brave boys who are fighting for us should know that we are sacrificing at home. It will give them inspiration and courage. If they know we refuse to give them our utmost support, how can we expect them to courageously fight our battles?

The people must recognize that this is their war, and that it will cost more to lose than it will to win. To win means the preservation of our liberties. To lose means indemnity and destruction of our liberties. Every citizen who loves his country should support the liberty loan to the best of his ability, contribute liberally to the Red Cross, and help all Christian associations engaged in looking after the welfare of our soldiers. [Applause.]

While the war continues we must stand as a unit behind the Commander in Chief of the Army. Only constructive criticism should be indulged in, and then only for the betterment of the service. Inefficiency should be eliminated. We can not tolerate it.

In the march our flag represents our purposes. We know no other law or duty. The poor and the rich, the weak and the strong, hold it in reverence. It is a symbol of the story of our fight for equal rights and liberty. With patriotic zeal we see our waving banner and exclaim:

O folds of white and scarlet! O blue with your silver stars! May fond eyes welcome you, willing feet follow you, strong hands defend you, warm hearts cherish you, and dying lips give you their blessing! Ours by inheritance, ours by allegiance, ours by affection—long may you float on the free winds of heaven, the emblem of liberty, the hope of the world! (Anon.)

[Applause.]

Speed the day when the people of the world may lay down their weapons of war and follow the Prince, the Prince of Peace, that they may abide in that perfect love that knows no evil. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I am personally in favor of the bill and see no objection to it whatever. But I can not resist the temptation to take the floor for a few minutes to express my astonishment—my amazement, I may say—that nobody on the floor of the House, especially on the other side of the Chamber, has raised his voice against the money bund. Here is a bill that not only permits but encourages the great financial institutions of the city of New York—institutions some of which now have a capital and surplus of $50,000,000 or more—to consolidate into one institution with hundreds of millions of capital, and nobody has raised a word of protest; nobody has declared that such consolidations would create a great money trust, imperiling the liberties of the people.

What has happened to these people who only a few short years ago were raising their voices against the money trust? Have they acquired in some way a courage that prevents them from trembling every time they hear of a bank consolidation, and are they actually ready to support a bill making consolidation easy? This bill permits banks to consolidate without even liquidating their assets. It permits them to consolidate by transferring the property from one bank to the other. They do not even have to go into the local recorder's office or county clerk's office—perhaps they do for deeds, but not for transfer of personal property. It makes it easy for these great financial institutions to consolidate into one, and no one raises a protest. Personally I think the United States is big enough to take care of its affairs, and we do not need to tremble; but, remembering only a few years ago how much oratory used to be poured out in this House against this money bund, I could not resist the temptation to refer to it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is it not possible under this bill to create an actual money trust?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly it is, and you might almost say that that was its purpose.

Mr. STEENERSON. They could consolidate all the banks of New York and Brooklyn, could they not?

Mr. PLATT. I can not see why they could not.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman does not mean to say that it is the purpose of the bill to create a money trust?

Mr. PLATT. I say it makes easy the creation of what you might call a money trust.

Mr. STEENERSON. The purpose of this bill, as I understand, is to create an actual money trust.

Mr. PLATT. I would not say that. I would say that it makes easy the creation of a great financial consolidation or corporation.

Mr. STEENERSON. Suppose we call it a money octopus?

Mr. PLATT. We will not quarrel over definitions. You can call it a money trust, if you want to.

Mr. STEENERSON. It was known by that name a few years ago.

Mr. PLATT. That is exactly what it was known by a few years ago.

Mr. STEENERSON. And now it is sponsored by the majority party in Congress as a war measure.

Mr. PLATT. Worse than that; it is not even called a war measure, but is just a bill to make bank consolidation easy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], a member of the committee.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, the question was propounded awhile ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] as to the liability of the consolidated bank for the liabilities of the consolidating banks. I expressed the opinion then that I was satisfied the law was that whenever two corporations consolidated, whether they undertook to make any provision or whether the statute under which they consolidated made provision for the creditors of the constituent companies or not, the law imposed a liability on them. That, of course, was a "horseback" opinion, as they say in the courthouse. I have taken occasion since that time to go down to the Library and consult Thompson on Corporations, and I find that is laid down as unquestionably the law, and is followed by the Supreme Court of the United States. I read:

The consolidated corporation as a rule, even in the absence of statute or agreement, assumes all of the liabilities of the constituent companies, and they may be enacted by a direct action against it, as it is presumed to have notice of the rights of creditors. Ordinarily the creditor may sue the new corporation direct without proceeding in equity.

In some jurisdictions it has been held that he proceeds in equity.

The consolidated corporation in an action against it on a claim against one of the constituent companies may assert the rights and equities and defenses of the original corporations.

For instance, if the constituent company held a counterclaim or a set-off against a claim, the consolidated company has a right to set up that as a counterclaim, just as the original company would have.

The Supreme Court of the United States has gone to this extent. They have held that that applies where by a statute of a legislature, and notoriously for the purpose of defeating the creditors, two towns have been consolidated and no provision made anywhere for taking care of their liabilities and a new name given. They have held you can proceed against the constituent corporation without any provision of statute or otherwise; and why? Because the same liability exists. A corporation that has taken over the assets is presumed to have taken them over with knowledge of the fact that they were liable for the liabilities of constituent companies which it has absorbed, and it can not be heard to come in and repudiate the debts which were a charge against the assets of the corporation for the purpose of defeating those debts after it has received the assets of the corporation. That is based on this doctrine that has been laid down a number of times by the Supreme Court of the United States, and all other courts in which I have ever practiced, that the assets of a corporation or the capital stock are trust funds in the hands of the officers for the creditors first, and then for the stockholders, and the creditors always stand first. That has been the liability which has been enforced against all of these consolidated corporations, and, therefore, in order not to encumber this bill we do not care to offer amendments to take care of what the general law takes care of, because it is always raising questions of construction whenever you undertake by statute to vary or even reenact what is law generally and generally recognized and construed for 200 years in this country.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, no one having any amendment to offer, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "association," insert the words "under the charter of either existing banks."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "consolidated," insert "who has not voted for such consolidation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, at the end of section 2, insert the following: "And all the rights, franchises, and interests of the said national bank so consolidated in and to every species of property, personal and mixed, and choses in action thereto belonging, shall be deemed to be transferred to and vested in such national bank into which it is consolidated without any deed or other transfer, and the said consolidated national bank shall hold and enjoy the same and all rights of property, franchises, and interests in the same manner and to the same extent as was held and enjoyed by the national bank so consolidated therewith."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to offer an amendment on page 1 in line 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would take unanimous consent, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "stock," insert the word "outstanding."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "stock," insert the word "outstanding."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think that the word "may," on page 3, line 14, in order to conform to existing law, should be "shall"; therefore I ask unanimous consent to offer that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 14, after the word "liabilities," strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 10.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is very evident——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that point for a while? Is the gentleman opposed to this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I want a roll call on this bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman withhold——

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors——

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the point.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman can not withdraw it after the Chair has stated that there is no quorum here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has announced an evident fact, that there is no quorum present——

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 293, nays 14, answered "present" 3, not voting 121, as follows:

YEAS—293.

Alexander	Beshlin	Burnett	Chandler, N. Y.
Almon	Black	Butler	Chandler, Okla.
Anderson	Bland	Byrnes, S. C.	Clark, Fla.
Ashbrook	Blanton	Byrns, Tenn.	Clark, Pa.
Aswell	Booher	Caldwell	Claypool
Ayres	Bowers	Campbell, Kans.	Cleary
Bacharach	Brand	Cannon	Coady
Barkley	Britten	Cantrill	Collier
Barnhart	Browne	Carlin	Connally, Tex.
Beakes	Browning	Carter, Okla.	Connelly, Kans.
Bell	Buchanan	Cary	Cooper, W. Va.
Cooper, Wis.	Gray, Ala.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sinnott
Cox	Green, Iowa	Magee	Sisson
Crago	Greene, Mass.	Maher	Slayden
Crisp	Greene, Vt.	Mansfield	Sloan
Currie, Mich.	Gregg	Mapes	Small
Dale, N. Y.	Griest	Martin	Smith, Idaho
Dale, Vt.	Hadley	Mason	Smith, Mich.
Dallinger	Hamilton, Mich.	Mays	Smith, C. B.
Darrow	Hamlin	Miller, Minn.	Snell
Davis	Hardy	Miller, Wash.	Snook
Delaney	Harrison, Va.	Mondell	Snyder
Dempsey	Hastings	Montague	Steagall
Dent	Haugen	Moore, Pa.	Stedman
Denton	Hawley	Moores, Ind.	Stephens, Miss.
Dickinson	Hayden	Morgan	Stephens, Nebr.
Dies	Hayes	Neely	Stevenson
Dill	Heaton	Nelson	Stiness
Dillon	Helm	Nicholls, S. C.	Strong
Dixon	Hensley	Nichols, Mich.	Sumners
Dominick	Hersey	Nolan	Sweet
Donovan	Hicks	Oldfield	Swift
Doolittle	Hilliard	Oliver, Ala.	Switzer
Doremus	Holland	Olney	Tague
Doughton	Houston	Osborne	Talbott
Dowell	Howard	O'Shaunessy	Taylor, Ark.
Drane	Hull, Iowa	Overmyer	Temple
Dupré	Hull, Tenn.	Overstreet	Thompson
Dyer	Humphreys	Paige	Tillman
Eagle	Husted	Park	Tilson
Edmonds	Hutchinson	Parker, N. J.	Timberlake
Elliott	Igoe	Peters	Towner
Ellsworth	Jacoway	Phelan	Van Dyke
Elston	James	Platt	Venable
Emerson	Johnson, Ky.	Polk	Vestal
Evans	Johnson, Wash.	Pou	Vinson
Fairchild, G. W.	Jones, Tex.	Pratt	Voigt
Fairfield	Jones, Va.	Price	Waldow
Farr	Kearns	Purnell	Walker
Ferris	Keating	Quin	Walton
Fields	Kehoe	Ragsdale	Wason
Fisher	Kelly, Pa.	Ramseyer	Watkins
Flood	Kennedy, Iowa	Rankin	Watson, Pa.
Focht	Kettner	Rayburn	Watson, Va.
Fordney	Key, Ohio	Reed	Weaver
Foster	Kincheloe	Riordan	Welling
Francis	Kinkaid	Robbins	Welty
Frear	Kraus	Robinson	Whaley
French	Kreider	Rodenberg	Wheeler
Fuller, Mass.	La Follette	Romjue	White, Me.
Gallagher	Lazaro	Rowe	White, Ohio
Gard	Lea, Cal.	Rubey	Williams
Garland	Lesher	Russell	Wilson, Ill.
Garner	Linthicum	Sanders, Ind.	Wilson, La.
Garrett, Tenn.	Littlepage	Sanders, La.	Wilson, Tex.
Garrett, Tex.	Lobeck	Scott, Mich.	Wingo
Gillett	Lundeen	Sears	Winslow
Glass	Lunn	Sells	Woods, Iowa
Glynn	McArthur	Shackleford	Woodyard
Godwin, N. C.	McCormick	Sherley	Wright
Goodall	McFadden	Sherwood	Young, Tex.
Goodwin, Ark.	McKenzie	Shouse
Gordon	McKeown	Siegel
Gould	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sims

NAYS—14.

Baer	King	Steenerson	Wise
Cramton	Knutson	Sterling, Ill.	Young, N. Dak.
Esch	Randall	Volstead
Huddleston	Stafford	Walsh

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Graham, Ill.	Juul	London

NOT VOTING—121.

Anthony	Flynn	Lenroot	Rose
Austin	Foss	Lever	Rouse
Bankhead	Freeman	Little	Rowland
Blackmon	Fuller, Ill.	Lonergan	Rucker
Borland	Gallivan	Longworth	Sabath
Brodbeck	Gandy	Lufkin	Sanders, N. Y.
Brumbaugh	Good	McAndrews	Sanford
Burroughs	Graham, Pa.	McClintic	Saunders, Va.
Campbell, Pa.	Gray, N. J.	McCulloch	Schall
Candler, Miss.	Griffin	McKinley	Scott, Iowa
Caraway	Hamill	McLemore	Scott, Pa.
Carew	Hamilton, N. Y.	Madden	Scully
Carter, Mass.	Harrison, Miss.	Mann	Shallenberger
Church	Haskell	Meeker	Slemp
Classon	Heflin	Merritt	Smith, T. F.
Cooper, Ohio	Heintz	Moon	Steele
Copley	Helvering	Morin	Sterling, Pa.
Costello	Hollingsworth	Mott	Sullivan
Crosser	Hood	Mudd	Taylor, Colo.
Curry, Cal.	Ireland	Norton	Templeton
Davidson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver, N. Y.	Thomas
Decker	Kahn	Padgett	Tinkham
Denison	Kelley, Mich.	Parker, N. Y.	Treadway
Dewalt	Kennedy, R. I.	Porter	Vare
Dooling	Kiess, Pa.	Powers	Ward
Drukker	Kitchin	Rainey	Webb
Dunn	LaGuardia	Raker	Wood, Ind.
Eagan	Langley	Ramsey	Zihlman
Estopinal	Larsen	Reavis
Fairchild, B. L.	Lee, Ga.	Roberts
Fess	Lehlbach	Rogers

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. ZIHLMAN.

Mr. CAREW with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. GRIFFIN with Mr. SANFORD.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. ROGERS.
Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania with Mr. WARD.
Mr. BLACKMON with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.
Mr. GANDY with Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island.
Mr. BORLAND with Mr. GOOD.
Mr. SCULLY with Mr. ROWLAND.
Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania with Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. ROUSE with Mr. HASKELL.
Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. SANDERS of New York.
Mr. BRODBECK with Mr. AUSTIN.
Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. COOPER of Ohio.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania with Mr. COPLEY.
Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi with Mr. BURROUGHS.
Mr. CARAWAY with Mr. COSTELLO.
Mr. CHURCH with Mr. DAVIDSON.
Mr. CROSSER with Mr. TINKHAM.
Mr. DECKER with Mr. DUNN.
Mr. DEWALT with Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD.
Mr. EAGAN with Mr. FESS.
Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. FOSS.
Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. FULLER of Illinois.
Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. FREEMAN.
Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.
Mr. HEFLIN with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.
Mr. HELVERING with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.
Mr. HOOD with Mr. HASKELL.
Mr. LARSEN with Mr. IRELAND.
Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. KAHN.
Mr. LEVER with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.
Mr. LONERGAN with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.
Mr. FLYNN with Mr. LANGLEY.
Mr. MCCLINTIC with Mr. LEHLBACH.
Mr. MCLEMORE with Mr. LITTLE.
Mr. MOON with Mr. LONGWORTH.
Mr. OLIVER with Mr. LUFKIN.
Mr. PADGETT with Mr. MCCULLOCH.
Mr. RAINEY with Mr. MADDEN.
Mr. RAKER with Mr. MEEKER.
Mr. RUCKER with Mr. MERRITT.
Mr. SABATH with Mr. MOTT.
Mr. SAUNDER of Virginia with Mr. MUDD.
Mr. SCHALL with Mr. NORTON.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER with Mr. PORTER.
Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. POWERS.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. RAMSEY.
Mr. THOMAS with Mr. REAVIS.
Mr. WEBB with Mr. ROBERTS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

On motion of Mr. WINGO, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LANGLEY, for 10 days, on account of serious illness in his family.

AMENDMENTS TO 5136, 5137, 5139, 5147, 5172, 5222, AND 5230, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 11020.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11020) to amend and reenact sections 5136, 5137, 5139, 5147, 5172, 5200, 5222, 5230, and 5239 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 5136 and 5139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and reenacted so as to read:

"SEC. 5136. Upon duly making and filing articles of association and an organization certificate, the association shall become, as from the date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such, and in the name designated in the organization certificate, it shall have power—

"First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"Second. To have succession for the period of 20 years from its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provisions of its articles of association, or by the act of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law.

"Third. To make contracts.

"Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law and equity as fully as natural persons.

"Fifth. To elect or appoint directors, and by its board of directors to appoint a president, vice president, cashier, and other officers, define their duties, require bonds of them, and fix the penalty thereof, dismiss such officers or any of them at pleasure, and appoint others to fill their places.

"Sixth. To prescribe, by its board of directors, by-laws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its directors shall be elected or appointed, its officers appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

"Seventh. To exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes according to the provisions of this title.

"But no association shall transact any business, except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization, until it has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence the business of banking.

"SEC. 5139. The capital stock of each association shall be divided into shares of $100 each and be deemed personal property. There shall be kept by each association a book to be known as a stock ledger, in which shall be entered the name of the person or persons, firm, company, or corporation to whom each share of stock is issued, the date of issue, the number or numbers of the certificates issued, and the number of shares represented by each certificate.

"Any stock transferred as hereinafter provided shall be entered upon the stock ledger by entering after the original entry of the issuance thereof the date upon which the same is canceled and the number or numbers of the new certificate or certificates issued therefor. The entry of such original issue or such transfer upon the stock ledger shall be prima facie evidence of the ownership of the stock. Every person becoming a shareholder by such transfer shall, in proportion to his shares, succeed to all the rights and liabilities of the prior holder of such shares; and no change shall be made in the articles of association by which the rights, remedies, or security of the existing creditors of the association shall be impaired.

"Transfer of stock in any association shall be made only upon the surrender of the duly issued certificate therefor properly and duly indorsed and by the issuance of a new certificate or certificates, records of which transfer shall be kept in the stock ledger in the same manner as the record of the original issue of stock with the addition that a record shall be made therein of the number of the certificate surrendered and canceled." In the event of loss or destruction of a certificate and upon satisfactory proof of such loss or destruction being made to the board of directors, the board may cause to be issued to the lawful owner a new certificate.

SEC. 2. That section 5137 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5137. A national banking association may purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no others:

"First. Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business.

"Second. Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith by way of security for debts previously contracted.

"Third. Such as shall be conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts previously contracted in the course of its dealings.

"Fourth. Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by the association, or shall purchase to secure debts due to it.

"But no such association shall hold the possession of any real estate under mortgage, or the title and possession of any real estate purchased to secure any debts due to it, for a longer period than five years; nor shall any such association hereafter invest in a site and bank building or bank and office building for its accommodation in the transaction of its business an amount in excess of its paid-in and unimpaired capital stock."

SEC. 3. That section 5147 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5147. Each director, when appointed or elected, shall take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves on him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of such association, and will not knowingly violate, or willingly permit to be violated, any of the provisions of this title, and that he is the owner in good faith and in his own right of the number of shares of stock required by this title, subscribed by him, or standing in his name on the books of the association, and that the same is not hypothecated, or in any way pledged, as security for any loan or debt. Such oath, subscribed by the director making it and certified by the officer before whom it is taken, shall be immediately transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, and shall be filed and preserved in his office. If any director shall fail to qualify and forward his oath to the Comptroller of the Currency within 60 days after his election, unless on account of illness, absence, or other good cause approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, a vacancy shall be immediately declared and the party so elected and failing to qualify shall be ineligible for reelection as director for that year."

SEC. 4. That section 5172 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5172. In order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved, in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom, and numbered, such quantity of circulating notes in blank or bearing engraved signatures of officers as herein provided of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall express upon their face that they they are secured by United States bonds, deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury; and shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the written or engraved signatures of the president or vice president and cashier; and shall bear such devices and such other statements, and shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, by regulation, direct."

SEC. 5. That sections 5222 and 5230 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5222. Within 90 days from the date of the vote to go into liquidation the association shall deposit with the Treasurer of the United States lawful money of the United States sufficient to redeem all its outstanding circulation. The Treasurer shall execute duplicate receipts for the money thus deposited and deliver one to the association and the other to the Comptroller of the Currency, stating the amount received by him and the purpose for which it has been received, and the money shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of such association upon redemption account."

"SEC. 5230. Whenever the comptroller has become satisfied, by the protest of the waiver and admission specified in section 5226, or by the report provided for in section 5227, or by a declaration of insolvency, that any association has refused or is unable to pay its circulating notes, or when any association in voluntary liquidation has failed to deposit lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States sufficient to redeem its outstanding circulation, as provided by section 5222 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, he may, instead of canceling its bonds, cause so much of them as may be necessary to redeem its outstanding notes to be sold at public auction in the city of New York after giving 30 days' notice of such sale to the association. For any deficiency in the proceeds of all the bonds of an association, when thus sold to reimburse to the United States the amount expended in paying the circulating notes of the association, the United States shall have a paramount lien upon all its assets; and such deficiency shall be made good out of such assets in preference to any and all other claims whatsoever, except the necessary costs and expenses of administering the same."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 11020 amends seven sections of the national banking act. While the bill is a long one, most of the phraseology of it is already in existing law. The first section refers to 5136 of the Revised Statutes. It amends 5136 by striking out a few lines, and it subsequently amends 5139 by putting in some provisions to take care of what was stricken out in 5136. Under the present law the stock ledger is kept according to by-laws of national banking associations. There is no statutory provision as to just how a record of the stock and the transfers of the stock shall be kept. Provision is made in 5139 by statute relative to the keeping of a record of stock and transfers. The provision will be found on the bottom of page 3, from line 16, beginning with the word "there," down to and including the word "stock," on line 3 of page 4, and from line 10 to line 20, inclusive, on page 4. Provision is made whereby national banking associations shall be obliged to keep the record of the ownership of the various certificates of stock and a record of every transfer made. At the present time there is in many banks a confusion. The records, which have to be kept only according to by-laws, are not kept up to date, and at times it is extremely difficult for anybody, including the Treasury Department or the Comptroller of the Currency, to find out who owns the stock. Occasions have arisen when it has seriously impaired the rights of creditors through their inability to find out what they have a right to know about the ownership of stock in the various national banks of the United States.

The provisions in these two sections, or the amendments, are intended to do away with this difficulty and require the keeping of the stock ledger in proper shape.

Section 2 of the bill amends the present law by adding the words, on page 5, beginning with the word "nor," on line 13, and down to and including line 17:

Nor shall any such association hereafter invest in a site and bank building or bank and office building for its accommodation in the transaction of its business, an amount in excess of its paid-in and unimpaired capital stock.

The purpose of that amendment is to prohibit national banking associations from investing more money in a site and building, or bank building and office building, than is equal to its paid-in and unimpaired capital stock. Banks have gotten themselves into difficulties in the past because they have invested too much in real estate and buildings in which to do business. As I have before stated on the floor of the House, a bank's assets ought to be kept, so far as possible, in liquid shape. Even though the bank has its assets in the very best of investments, so far as safety is concerned, that is not enough. Because of the danger there is attendant upon putting too much money into real estate, the committee, upon the recommendation of the Treasury Department, has offered this amendment to the present law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would that prevent a bank from putting up an office building in connection with its bank, say, make a banking room below, with offices above extending five or six stories high?

Mr. PHELAN. Not unless it spends too much money for it. It limits the amount which a bank can invest in that kind of property to an amount equal to the paid-in and unimpaired capital stock of the bank.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. So that if the capital stock of the bank is $200,000, they could not put up a building——

Mr. PHELAN. They could not spend over $200,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On that kind of a building?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; that is it.

Section 3 amends the present law by the line on page 6, beginning with the word "if" on line 9, and down through line 15. The provision is simply this: At the present time a man will be elected a director of a bank and will fail to qualify for some reason or another, perhaps his carelessness, perhaps because he is away and does not pay any attention to the requests that he qualify. As a result confusion has arisen and banks have gone along without their full directorate. There is nothing harsh in this provision. It simply provides that if a man who is elected a bank director does not qualify within 60 days, unless on account of illness and absence, or other good cause, he shall be disqualified for the rest of that year. An opportunity is given to elect somebody in his place. This amendment has the recommendation of the American Bankers' Association, as well as that of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The next section, section 4, has only a slight addition to the present law. That addition will be found on the bottom of page 6, line 25, beginning with the word "or" through the word "provided," on line 1 of page 7, and the words "or engraved," on line 10 of page 7.

It provides that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing may engrave the signature of the proper officers of a national banking association upon bank notes put out by that association. In other words, it enables these bank notes to have the engraved signature instead of the actual signature of the proper officers of the bank. At the present time under the law the proper officer of a national bank has to go through the physical exercise of signing every national bank note put out by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This obviates that difficulty, and saves time. Sometimes a rubber stamp is used. At first it might seem dangerous, but there is no danger in the proposition. If anybody desires an explanation I will explain why it is no serious violation of the present practice.

The next section is section 5. That makes an insertion in section 5222 of the Revised Statutes. It changes the words in line 18, page 7. Under the present law, instead of "ninety days," the words "six months" are to be found. We strike out the "six months" and insert in place thereof "ninety days." It provides this slight change so that when a bank goes into liquidation under the present law it is obliged within six months to deposit sufficient lawful money to redeem its outstanding circulating notes, and under the proposed amendment it is obliged to do that within 90 days, or three months.

There is an amendment on page 8 to section 5230, beginning with the word "or," in line 9 of page 8, and running on down to and including the words "United States," in line 14. Those words are inserted simply to take care of the provisions in the preceding section, No. 5222.

I have explained these various provisions briefly, because I think that is all that is necessary; but if I have not made myself clear, I shall be glad to answer all questions that may be asked.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. On page 5 there is a provision to amend, that the bank can invest in a site and bank building. Suppose a bank had a capital stock of $200,000 and had an opportunity to purchase a building worth $600,000 on which it had a mortgage of $400,000. Would it have the right to do it under this provision?

Mr. PHELAN. That is a matter of construction of that statute which ultimately, if the question were raised, would have to be decided by the courts. But I think the intention is not to permit that transaction.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The bank does not actually invest more than $200,000, the amount of its capital stock, but it could invest it so that there would be no additional liability.

Mr. PHELAN. No; it would be very difficult for it to assume that obligation or obtain that building without assuming the entire obligation, either directly or indirectly, and I think it is the intention of this provision to prohibit them from incurring that obligation. As I said, that is a matter of construction. I am trying to give the gentleman the intention, as I think it was held by the committee, when it reported this bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Suppose they took the conveyance, subject to the obligation, and assumed no liability at all. Would the bank, in the gentleman's opinion, be permitted to buy?

Mr. PHELAN. I am trying to conceive how those conditions might arise.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That very frequently arises.

Mr. PHELAN. I think perhaps it does.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Conveyance may be made either with a guaranty, assuming the obligation, or simply taking the conveyance subject to the obligation. In the latter case he incurs no liability. Now, here is a bank that wants to buy a building. They are not going to invest more than $200,000.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. PHELAN. I think that comes outside of the intention of the committee. I would not like to say positively that that is forbidden without giving it further consideration.

Mr. DIXON. The property of the bank would be subject to that lien?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; the property of the bank would not be subject to that lien. In order to save the investment they had already made, they would have to take care of the lien.

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. They could therefore either sacrifice or make good.

Mr. DIXON. Their original investment would be lost unless they bid in the security.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SUMNERS. I think myself it would be outside the spirit, but I suggest, for the consideration of the committee, that it would probably be well to add some words to the effect that the total value of the property should not exceed the capital stock and surplus.

Now, just a few words to make that absolutely clear. While I have the attention of the gentleman I would like to ask him a question. In line 7, page 3, the words "personal security" appear.

Mr. PHELAN. That is the existing law.

Mr. SUMNERS. I was under the impression that in the financial legislation enacted in the last Congress banks that are permitted to loan money on real estate security, that right being granted in the regional reserve bank act, if I am not mistaken——

Mr. PHELAN. I do not get the gentleman's reference. What page and line is it?

Mr. SUMNERS. Line 7, page 3.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the language?

Mr. PHELAN. What is the language to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. SUMNERS. The words "on personal security" in line 7, page 3. Does the chairman of the committee locate the particular words?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I have the place now.

Mr. SUMNERS. I am not as familiar with the legislation dealing with the subject as I ought to be in order to ask this question.

Mr. PHELAN. I think there is no inconsistency there, because the statute is brought down to date, and I think it would be noted in this book if there were any inconsistency.

Mr. STEVENSON. That exception as to real estate is in the next section. This section, exactly as it is, stands as a part of 5136, and then there is a provision of law separate from that, section 24 of the Federal reserve banking act, which gives them special authority to loan on real estate under certain circumstances, and this does not limit that at all.

Mr. SUMNERS. That is why I directed attention to it.

Mr. PHELAN. I did not have the right page at first. This simply gives certain power. There is an additional power given in the next section, just as my colleague [Mr. STEVENSON] has pointed out.

Mr. SUMNERS. The reason why I took the time of the committee and interrupted the chairman is that when you attempt to enumerate the things that may be done, it is always a little dangerous unless you include everything that you want to include.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes. I understand the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] has perhaps sufficiently explained most of this bill, and unless some one wants to ask further questions or wants further time, I do not care to say much, except that this bill is an excellent illustration of how much time the House might save if our bills were printed with the new matter in italics. On the second page of this bill there are only five words inserted as new matter, and yet there is a whole page which we must read. If it were possible at a glance to see the words that are new, by having them in italics, or with the old matter struck through and the new matter in italics, it would make it very much easier to consider all these bills and would save our time.

It seems to me there can hardly be very much objection to anything in this bill. I think a few things ought to have a little more discussion though, especially the section which limits the amount of money that a bank can spend on its building. I should think there might be some question in regard to that, and also the provision in section 5 changing 6 months to 90 days. I do not think the gentleman fully explained that, although I have heard no serious objection to it.

Of course, everybody knows that national banks in some places are more or less given to erecting rather palatial buildings, very often of only one story, which can not be used for any other purpose. They are put down in the assets of the bank at a pretty high figure, and yet if they had to be sold, if there should be a consolidation of banks in the city and that left one of these buildings on the market, there would be hardly anything you could do with it, and it would not bring much at a sale. It would have to be entirely remodeled for ordinary business or office purposes. Therefore I think this limitation of the amount that a bank may spend upon its building is rather a wise provision.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take the time of the House to discuss this bill in detail, but since it was discussed in our committee a question has come up in regard to section 5147, which is that section pertaining to the election and duties of directors. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN], who has charge of this bill, to the latter part of that section, in which it says that if any director shall fail to qualify and forward his oath to the Comptroller of the Currency within 60 days after his election, unless on account of illness, absence, or other good cause, approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, a vacancy shall be immediately declared, and the party so elected and failing to qualify shall be ineligible to reelection as a director for that year.

Since this matter was discussed by the committee an important case has been pointed out to me, and if this amendment is permitted I hope some exception may be made in this case. I refer to the case of Brig. Gen. W. W. Atterbury, general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who is now serving his country so admirably in France as director of our railroads there. Mr. Atterbury is a director of the Franklin National in Philadelphia, and was elected at their last annual meeting, but because of the fact that he is now serving his country patriotically in France he has not qualified, and evidently can not qualify as a director of that institution because of his service in France.

Mr. SHOUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SHOUSE. Why can not he be qualified?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I can not answer the gentleman. Unless the fact that there are no facilities in that part of France where his duties call him to permit him to qualify.

Mr. SHOUSE. Does not the gentleman believe that 60 days is ample for a man in France to qualify?

Mr. MCFADDEN. In this case the gentleman has not qualified owing to his duties in France. The reason why he has not done so I am unable to say further than I have already stated.

Mr. SHOUSE. Will the gentleman yield to a further question?

Mr. MCFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SHOUSE. I think the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, himself a director in a national bank, said that he had not qualified as a director in his bank merely because there was no reason why he should, and there was no penalty attached to it. This seeks to cure that situation.

Mr. MCFADDEN. But here is a different case—a man serving his country, which is at war, in a foreign country.

Mr. SHOUSE. Does not the gentleman think he has merely failed because there was no reason why he should give the matter his attention?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I do not think that is the case. The bank is loath to lose him as a director and does not want to be deprived of his services or his name from their directorate.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. MCFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. I would like to state to the gentleman that we adopted the language recommended by the legislative committee of the American Bankers' Association to insert the words "on account of illness, absence, or other good cause approved by the comptroller." I think that was to meet the situation that the gentleman has stated. I think, if he will reflect, he will see that under the provision as we have it in the bill in the very case he presents it will come within the provisions, and he will not be prohibited from qualifying at a later date as a director in a bank.

Mr. MCFADDEN. I am glad the gentleman has made that statement, and I hope it will prevail in this case. Mr. Atterbury is one of the leading railroad men in the United States, general manager of one of our greatest systems; and when this country became involved in this war, and the need for a big man to take charge of our railroads in France was made apparent, Mr. Atterbury responded, and immediately his services were offered, and great results have been, and now are, being accomplished by this man—Brig. Gen. William W. Atterbury, all honor to him—and now, just because he is in France serving his country, I do not think Congress should enact a bill to drive him off the boards of financial institutions in this country in which he has large financial interests.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] take the floor, so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. I will, and I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe it is not a change in existing law, but in reading the bill with reference to section 5136, I was impressed with the idea that the board of directors formulate the by-laws of the various banking associations without any approval by the shareholders. I believe that is existing law.

Mr. PLATT. I think that is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform us why the board of directors should have the formulation of the by-laws of a corporation without the sanction by the shareholders of the association? I realize that the gentleman is not a lawyer, but he is a good business man, and perhaps he can answer the question.

Mr. PLATT. Of course, the shareholders have the election of directors.

Mr. STAFFORD. But usually in the organization of a corporation the by-laws are adopted by the shareholders and not by the board of directors. Here we have an exception in the case of a banking association, where the board of directors determines the by-laws without even the approval of the shareholders. It seems to me to be an exceptional case, and I rose to inquire the reason for it.

I direct the gentleman's attention to the subdivision on page 2, the sixth subdivision:

> To prescribe, by its board of directors, by-laws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its directors shall be elected or appointed, its officers appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

That, I assume, restricts the powers of the board of directors as to by-laws of that character. Perhaps as to by-laws of a general character they are to be formulated and adopted as usual by the shareholders of a corporation.

Mr. PLATT. I think there has never been any complaint in the way of by-laws so adopted. There are certain legal restrictions, as the gentleman will see if he looks over the act.

Mr. STEVENSON. The present law is that they shall be made by the directors, and there is merely a slight amendment here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I said it was the present law; but why should there be an exception in the case of banking associations from the general rule applying to corporations in general?

Mr. STEVENSON. I was not here in 1864, when that was enacted, but I presume there was some good reason for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman is here in 1918, and a very prominent and industrious member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and I thought the gentleman might give us some reason.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman will notice that we are taking powers from the board of directors in the bill with reference to the transfer of stock.

Mr. STAFFORD. A very commendable amendment, which, I suppose, is predicated upon the idea of publicity requiring a registry of stock showing the amount of stock held by various shareholders. In many of our States that same condition is required as to private corporations.

Mr. PLATT. I think that was one of the items. There was a certain amount of variation in by-laws in this matter, and occasionally banks did not know who their shareholders were and it occasioned some inconvenience.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose there are some instances where some messenger boys were the titular shareholders, but where the real shareholders were their employers.

Mr. PLATT. I have never known of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman knows of messenger boys being incorporators?

Mr. PLATT. I have heard of it; yes.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few minutes to ask a few questions.

Mr. PLATT. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I notice that the amendment of section 5172 has been so drawn that it seems to me there are unintentional omissions in it as it now stands. I would like to ask the committee if this section 5172 has been amended since 1908?

Mr. PHELAN. Since 1908?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. My recollection is it was amended within a year to provide for a larger issue of small bills, one and two dollar bills.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I call the committee's attention to the fact that this amendment provides for one and two dollar bills.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes. If the gentleman will recollect, Mr. GLASS brought in a bill at the request of the Treasury Department so as to get out a greater number of bills, and my impression is that the House was unanimous because everybody wanted more money.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Then was it so amended also as to provide to strike out the other securities?

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman tell me just what he means?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. The act of 1908 provided—that amendment—that such notes shall "state," and you use the word "express," upon their face that they are secured by United States bonds or other security certified by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury.

Mr. PHELAN. I have not the statute before me, but I think I know what the gentleman is talking about. I think he is talking about the Aldrich-Vreeland Act.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. And under that act bank notes could be put out on security other than the United States bonds in certain emergencies.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. PHELAN. The Aldrich-Vreeland Act would have died by operation of its own provisions if we had not extended it under the Federal Reserve Act. My recollection is the term for which we extended it was a year. That year has lapsed, and the Aldrich-Vreeland Act is no longer in force in the United States.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Then the omission of the other securities was intentional. I have no criticism to make of it.

Mr. PHELAN. It is not contained in this act. The present law does not have those words in it.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I now direct the committee's attention to the evidently mistaken omission of the word "certified" in line 6, after the word "States," on page 7, which ought to be in there.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will permit, I have just compared this with the present law, in company with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], and there is no change from the present law in line 6, page 7.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Except the omission of that word "certified."

Mr. SHOUSE. There is not any change. I am reading from the national bank act.

Mr. PHELAN. If there is any such error, it is an error in the compilation put out by the Treasury Department, and I am now looking at it to see. This language is the exact language as compiled by the Treasury Department in the national bank act, as compiled down to date by the Treasury Department.

If there is any mistake, it is a mistake in the compilation of the book put out through this document room and not a mistake on the part of the committee that reported. If there is any question, why, it will be corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. If nobody wants to offer an amendment, I wish to move the previous question. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the previous question, and pending that to ask unanimous consent that if amendments be offered, those amendments be offered without debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are some committee amendments——

Mr. PHELAN. I will have to find out first if anybody wants to offer an amendment. We have one or two typographical errors to correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no desire to direct things, but the Chair thinks that if amendments are offered they can be disposed of and the House can get along in accordance with the rules and expedite matters.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer four small committee amendments to correct grammatical errors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 23, after the word "entering" insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 24, after the word "thereof" insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 17, after the word "canceled," strike out the quotation mark and insert quotation marks following the word "certificate," in page 4, line 20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 19, after the word "sold" insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHELAN. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] offers an amendment, will he have the floor for an hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Is there any way by which I can ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes instead of an hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes in which to offer his amendment and speak to it, and no more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may be permitted to offer an amendment, and to be limited to five minutes of debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 15, after the word "building," strike out the following "for its accommodation in the transaction of its business."

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, the following provision is added to existing law:

Nor shall any association hereafter invest in a site and bank building or bank and office building for its accommodation in the transaction of its business, an amount in excess of its paid-in and unimpaired capital stock.

This may be a proper limitation, but I do not think that a national bank should be prohibited from building an office building and allow a part of it to be used and rented for other purposes. It occurs to me that it is doubtful under the provisions of the bill as it is written whether a national bank would be authorized to build an office building and permit any part of it to be used for any other purposes except for its accommodation and the transaction of its business unless my amendment is adopted.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Has a national bank under the law any right to hold any real estate for more than five years, except such real estate as is held for its accommodation and conduct of its business, and is not that necessary in order to give them the right to hold real estate?

Mr. ALMON. That may be true, but I believe a national bank should be authorized, if it desired to do so, to invest in what is usually known as an office building and rent such parts as are not needed for banking purposes.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I will.

Mr. PHELAN. I do not believe there is any necessity for this amendment, but the committee has no objection, if the gentleman does not like those words.

Mr. ALMON. I think it will remove any doubt about the purposes for which the building can be used.

Mr. WINGO. Let us see what the amendment is.

Mr. ALMON. My amendment strikes out, in lines 15 and 16, the following words: "For its accommodation in the transaction of its business."

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman accept this provision? As I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN], the proposition is to cut out the language next in line.

Mr. PHELAN. I will have to withdraw my statement, because some members of the committee state that they are unwilling to have those words stricken out. Inasmuch as they are not, I shall have to withdraw my statement.

Mr. ALMON. I would not want them to be required to use every part in the building for banking purposes.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I had some idea about this matter before the gentleman spoke. It seems to me the way to eliminate the condition brought forward by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] would be to put in this phrase, in line 15, after the word "building," "a part of which shall be used," and then strike out "for its accommodation in the transaction of its business."

Mr. ALMON. That is all right.

Mr. HICKS. That, I think, would cover the very objection the gentleman from Alabama has raised. It seems to me, if the gentleman will permit me speaking in his time, that there is a certain amount of confusion in this bill as it is worded, and I think the committee have an idea that the bank should be permitted to erect a building for office purposes as well as for its own purposes.

Mr. PHELAN. I think we are looking at the wrong place in the bill. At the top of page 5 the present law permits money to be spent for a building necessary in the transaction of its business. The section we are talking about is a limitation. It says:

Nor shall any such association hereafter invest in a site in bank building or bank and office building for its accommodation in the transaction of its business an amount in excess of.

The intention of the committee is that a bank can erect a bank building for bank purposes or bank building for bank purposes and for business purposes, letting offices to anybody who wants to hire them.

Mr. HICKS. Is it not rather ambiguous as it is worded here?

Mr. PHELAN. It is all controlled on the top of the page.

Mr. ALMON. I ask the gentleman if it would not be perfectly clear, and the intention of the committee be carried out fully, if it read in this way:

Nor shall any such association hereafter invest in any site and bank building, etc., an amount in excess of its paid-up capital stock.

That is the way it would read with my amendment adopted. There could not be any objection to it. It would make it perfectly clear.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. I have some time left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. PHELAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, at first I did not recall the fact that in the first subdivision, at the top of page, there occurs the same language, so I saw no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama. To say the least, it is superfluous language which he wishes to strike out. But in that connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this, that my main purpose in taking the floor was to say that I do not agree with this limitation at all. I think it is vicious and unwise, and I think if directors can not be trusted to determine how much money to put in their bank building they ought to get new directors. I think the whole proposition is unwise and unnecessary. For that reason I opposed it in the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be read.

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, we had unanimous consent that debate would close in five minutes, and I think the gentleman from New York and I still have control of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that unanimous consent was that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] be permitted to offer an amendment and that he be limited to five minutes of debate. The Chair thinks there was no one else addressing the Chair, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin. Under the rules of the House the gentleman from Wisconsin has an hour.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to shut anybody out——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. "The gentleman from Wisconsin" does not want any more than possibly a minute, or possibly two, or it may be extended to three. [Laughter.] He does not want gentlemen to labor under any misapprehension. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if this language here does not embody the law, as far as real estate is concerned, as it has been since the first national banking act?

Mr. PHELAN. I think it goes as far back as that, but I am not sure how far it does go.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think the old law restricts them within very rigid limits as to the amount of money that they can put into real estate and the purpose for which they can use the real estate, and very wisely; and I do not think in a House with a membership as small as it is just now we ought to proceed to amend it in any such way as this. I shall not consent to that amendment myself, and I shall do what I can to defeat it, because I do not believe in that way of legislating on such exceedingly important matters. I shall raise the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker, if that thing is insisted on. The gentleman better withdraw the amendment.

I yield the floor on the promise of two gentlemen that we are going to adjourn.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHELAN. Has the gentleman any right to the floor when we meet one week from to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the House meets on next Wednesday and this matter comes up, it will be entirely with the Speaker as to whom he will recognize.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce inviting attention to a deficiency estimate of appropriation for the purchase of paper for printing charts for the Navy, Army, and Shipping Board, and for other necessary expenses of the Coast and Geodetic Survey (H. Doc. No. 1014); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Attorney General submitting deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Justice and United States courts, fiscal year 1918, and prior years (H. Doc. No. 1015); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. McCLINTIC, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 456), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7236) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, approved May 11, 1898, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 457), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5720) granting an increase of pension to Harriet K. Baillie, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PARK: A bill (H. R. 11216) to amend section 1009 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11217) extending the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1917; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 11218) to amend section 16 of the Federal reserve act so that maturity of paper drawn for agricultural purposes or based on live stock may extend to one year; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11219) providing for the appraisal and sale of the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HOUSTON: Resolution (H. Res. 300) providing for the consideration of H. R. 9960; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DENT: Resolution (H. Res. 301) to set apart April 8 for the consideration of business from the Committee on Military Affairs; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. AYRES: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 275) authorizing dismissal from the service of any Government employee showing disloyalty; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the independence of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEAKES: A bill (H. R. 11220) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Dobbins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 11221) granting an increase of pension to Martin B. Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 11222) granting an increase of pension to Jethro J. T. Garde; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11223) granting an increase of pension to John Hobart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 11224) granting an increase of pension to Edward Stephens; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11225) granting a pension to Dosia Bell Weimer; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11226) granting a pension to Lucy A. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11227) granting an increase of pension to Frank Lynch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 11228) granting a pension to Thomas Foreman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11229) granting a pension to Walter Sewell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULLIVAN: A bill (H. R. 11230) granting an increase of pension to Timothy K. Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of 40 churches of Washington, D. C., asking that a day be set aside for prayer by the people for the success of the war for democracy; to the Committee on the Library.

Also (by request), petition of the Manuscript Club, of Boston, Mass., and Channing Pollock, of New York City, against the zone system for second-class postal matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also (by request), petition of the Woman's Municipal League, of Boston, Mass., relative to housing of Government workers; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also (by request), petitions of the Star Farmers' Club, of Stanberry, and the Jester School Farmers' Association, of Saline County (Mo.), against reducing the price of corn; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also (by request), petition of Wisconsin State Council of Defense, asking for prohibition during war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of A. J. Conroy, Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill to eliminate the potato grading feature of that act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CURRIE of Michigan: Petition of O. H. Smith and various other citizens of Harrisville, Mich., protesting against the passage of Senate bill 3476; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of the G. B. G. Manufacturing Co., asking that income taxes may be paid in installments; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DILLON: Petition of citizens of Huron, S. Dak., asking for the defeat of the postal zone law, relating to postal rates for publications; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of the Crockery Board of Trade of New York opposing the discontinuance of the pneumatic-tube mail service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, memorial of the Medical Society of the County of New York, urging the passage of the Owen and Dyer bills giving advanced rank to officers of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELSTON: Resolution adopted by Butchers' Union, Local No. 120, of Oakland, Cal., containing recommendations for conservation of the meat supply; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. EMERSON: Resolutions of the Cleveland Association of Credit Men, urging extension of time for the payment of income taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HILLIARD: Resolutions adopted by the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, protesting against increased postage rates on periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of W. C. Sweeney, Emma Dieter, Rev. T. J. Hamilton, and 10 others, all citizens of the State of Colorado, urging prohibition as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REED: Papers to accompany House bill 11211, granting a pension to Carl C. Dunham; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 4, 1918.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we recognize Thy rulership, and while clouds and darkness may be round about us, we know that righteousness and judgment are the habitation of Thy throne. We therefore invoke Thy help that the forces that represent the establishment of righteousness in the earth may be guided by Thee to final victory. Hear us as we supplicate for our land and for all its interests and all those who are dear to us in these times of crisis. We ask in our Lord's name. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10265. An act to authorize the Secretary of Labor to provide housing, local transportation, and other community facilities for war needs, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO 212).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Postmaster General submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $50,000 required by the Post Office Department for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, for the enforcement of the espionage and trading-with-the-enemy acts, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10691) to amend section 5200 of the Revised Statutes as amended, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3714) to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Golden Valley, N. Dak., praying for a repeal of the present zone system of postage on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KNOX presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Bourse, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the abolishment of the Subtreasuries in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am in receipt of a telegram from citizens of my State, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAKE PROVIDENCE, LA., April 3, 1918.

Hon. J. E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate, Washington:

On April 2 East Carroll Parish liberty loan committee received wire from Federal reserve bank of Dallas naming allotment of $107,600 for East Carroll Parish for third liberty loan. Wire was received here at 3.46 p. m.. At 4.30 p. m. J. N. Hill, chairman of liberty loan committee, wired Federal reserve bank that entire amount had been subscribed. East Carroll Parish wins honor flag for Louisiana. Entire allotment subscribed in 44 minutes after being notified of amount. We consider this a great record. Please notify Senate and Secretary McAdoo and President Wilson.

J. MARTIN HAMLEY.

Mr. PHELAN presented resolutions adopted by the farm-labor committee of the State Council of Defense of California, relative to the farm-labor situation and favoring the enactment of legislation providing for a better distribution of the labor of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9612) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 356) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4259) for the relief of George K. Kitchen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 4260) for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co., and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4261) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 4262) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased; and

A bill (S. 4263) for the relief of Capt. Frederick B. Shaw; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 4264) granting a pension to Jane L. Baker (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4265) granting a pension to Gabriel N. Hildreth (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4266) granting a pension to Robert E. Lee (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4267) granting a pension to Edward F. Rostock (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4268) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Ann Kelly; and

A bill (S. 4269) granting a pension to Mary E. Stafford (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 4270) granting an increase of pension to Giles J. Burgess (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 4271) for the relief of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and

A bill (S. 4272) for the relief of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHAFROTH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for statistician for Congress, Arthur MacDonald, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in response to the request of the Senate, the House has returned the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 9054) and in order to expedite its reference to conference I ask unanimous consent now to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUMMINS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. GORE. I move, on page 23, line 18, to strike out the figures "$291,505" and to substitute "$441,505." The necessity for this amendment was an error in summing up the total.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the Secretary be authorized to correct the other totals in the bill to conform with the Senate amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on Tuesday I presented the report of the committee of conference on House bill 2316, which is known as the export-trade bill. My attention has been called to a clerical error in the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report. I assume that the error will be corrected and that report will be submitted later in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none, and the conference report is withdrawn.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. CURTIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

RETIREMENT OF CHIEF WARRANT OFFICERS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House amending the title, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House inserting section 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the engrossed amendments strike out the words "performed or" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "been on active duty since August 29, 1916, or who"; and the House agree to the same.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I simply submit the conference report, and the House of Representatives will have to act first on it, as the original papers are in the possession of the House. I do not want the report acted upon at this time, but I ask that it lie on the table for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10691. An act to amend section 5200 of the Revised Statutes as amended was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the discussion of the bill begins, I feel that it is necessary for me, on account of Senators not being present who are interested in it, to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sutherland
Baird	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Swanson
Bankhead	Kellogg	Poindexter	Thomas
Beckham	Kendrick	Pomerene	Thompson
Borah	King	Ransdell	Townsend
Chamberlain	Kirby	Reed	Trammell
Culberson	Lewis	Robinson	Underwood
Curtis	Lodge	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Dillingham	McCumber	Shafroth	Wadsworth
France	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Sherman	Warren
Gallinger	McNary	Shields	Watson
Hale	Martin	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Harding	Nelson	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Henderson	New	Smith, S. C.
Hitchcock	Norris	Smoot
Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Sterling

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is detained by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8753.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood that the bill was taken up, and then after it was taken up the Senator from Utah called for a quorum. The RECORD will show that.

Mr. LODGE. If that is the case, I can not call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us see what the RECORD says.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reporter will read the RECORD.

The reporter read as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.
Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753), etc.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. SMOOT. Before the discussion of the bill begins, etc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary reporting this bill to say a few words in explanation of it.

The necessity for this legislation arises first from the fact that the existing law makes no specific provision whatever for the punishment of those who through disloyalty or some kindred sentiment might be moved to discountenance investments in the liberty bonds and other securities of the United States or to embarrass the Government in endeavoring to make sale of them, and, secondly, because of the strained construction which has been given to the espionage act by some of the Federal courts, under which effective aids in the German propaganda that is notoriously being conducted in this country are permitted unmolested to disseminate the poison with which they have become infected.

The most startling of these, and possibly the most notorious, was rendered by the district court for the district of Montana. I send to the desk the opinion rendered by that court in the case of the United States versus Hall and ask that it be incorporated at large in the RECORD, but I shall ask the Secretary at the desk to read from the opinion only the charges made in the indictment and established by the evidence upon which the court directed the jury to acquit the defendant, taking the position that the acts charged and proven did not constitute a crime.

Mr. REED. Will not the Senator have the entire opinion of the court read? It is short.

Mr. WALSH. I would be very glad to have it read, but I am obliged to leave the Senate very shortly, and I shall ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. The Secretary will read the portion only in brackets.

The Secretary read as follows:

At divers times, in the presence of sundry persons, defendant declared that he would flee to avoid going to the war; that Germany would whip the United States, and he hoped so; that the President was a Wall Street tool, using the United States forces in the war because he was a British tool; that the President was the crookedest ——— ever President; that he was the richest man in the United States; that the President brought us into the war by British dictation; that Germany had right to sink ships and kill Americans without warning; and that the United States was only fighting for Wall Street millionaires and to protect Morgan's interests in England.

The decision referred to is as follows:

"In the District Court of the United States, District of Montana.

"UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF, v. VES HALL, DEFENDANT.

"Bourquin, J., orally:

"The indictment charges that defendant violated section 3 of the espionage act, in that (1) he did 'make and convey false reports and false statements, with intent to interfere with the operation and success of the military and naval forces of the United States and to promote the success of its enemies'; and (2) that he did 'cause and attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States and obstruct the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service of the United States, specially as follows: At divers times in the presence of sundry persons defendant declared that he would flee to avoid going to the war; that Germany would whip the United States, and he hoped so; that the President was a Wall Street tool, using the United States forces in the war because he was a British tool; that the President was the crookedest ——— ever President; that he was the richest man in the United States; that the President brought us into the war by British dictation; that Germany had right to sink ships and kill Americans without warning; and that the United States was only fighting for Wall Street millionaires and to protect Morgan's interests in England.'

"Having in mind the rule applicable to this motion for a directed verdict, the evidence would justify a finding that defendant did so make the declarations charged.

"But it would not support a verdict of guilty of any of the crimes charged.

"It appears the declarations were made at a Montana village of some 60 people, 60 miles from the railway, and none of the armies or Navy within hundreds of miles, so far as appears. The declarations were oral, some in buildings, with the landlady in a hotel kitchen, some at a picnic, some on the street, some in hot and furious saloon arguments.

"Adverting to the crimes designated (1), false reports and false statements import reports and statements of facts and not accused's opinions, beliefs, intentions, and arguments. Hence defendant's beliefs, opinions, and hopes are not within the statute, but his slanders of the President and Nation are false reports and false statements, and are within the espionage act. While the act makes the (1) offense substantive, they are of the nature of attempts lame in principle and largely to the extent indicated governed by the law of attempts. It is settled law that attempts are efforts with specific intent to commit specific crimes, which efforts fail, are apparently adapted to accomplish the intended crimes, and of sufficient magnitude and proximity to the object of their operation that they are reasonably calculated to excite public fear and alarm that such efforts will accomplish the specific crimes, if they do not fail. These slanders by defendant satisfy magnitude and apparent adaptation, but in view of all the facts and circumstances in proof neither the specific intent to interfere with, nor proximity to, the military and naval forces appears.

"When facts and circumstances will justify a finding that accused intended the natural and ordinary consequences of his acts, the intent may be inferred. There are two fatal objections to such inference: (1) Interference with the operation or success of the military or naval forces is not the natural and ordinary consequence of said slanders, but rather breach of the peace and a broken head for the slanderer, are (2) the facts and circumstances, times and places, or kitchen gossip and saloon debate, the impossibility of far-distant military and naval forces hearing or being affected by the slanders, and also else render the inference unjustified, absurd, and without support in the evidence. Military and naval forces in the espionage act means the same as in the declarations of war, viz, those organized and in service, not those merely registered and subject to future organization and service. Furthermore, even if the slanders were with the specific intent denounced by the espionage act, they fail of the required proximity to constitute attempts and the said (1) offenses. Under the circumstances they were not reasonably calculated to create public fear and alarm that they would interfere with the operations and success of far distant armies and navy. Rather would they create anger, disgust, and desire to punish the slanderer. It is as if A shot with a .22 pistol with intent to kill B two or three miles away. The impossibility would prevent public fear and alarm of homicide, and A could not be convicted of attempted murder.

"There is now no claim to intent to promote enemy success. Otherwise the foregoing also applies to those crimes charged.

"It is admitted no insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty by the military or naval forces was caused by the charges of attempt thereto, likewise are not sustained by the evidence.

"Nor does the evidence sustain the charges of 'willfully' obstructing the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the United States.

"To sustain the charge actual obstruction and injury must be proven, not mere attempts to obstruct. The espionage act does not create the crime of attempting to obstruct, but only the crime of actual obstruction, and when causing injury to the service.

"The espionage act is not intended to suppress criticism or denunciation, truth or slander, oratory or gossip, argument or loose talk, but only false facts willfully put forward as true and, broadly, with the specific intent to interfere with Army or Navy operations. The more or less public impression that for any slanderous or disloyal remarks the utterer can be prosecuted by the United States is a mistake. The United States can prosecute only for acts that Congress has denounced as crimes. Congress has not denounced as crimes any mere disloyal utterances, nor any slander or libel of the President or any other officer of the United States.

"United States attorneys throughout the country have been unjustly criticized because they do not prosecute where they can not. In instances their proper failure to prosecute has been made the subject of complaint to the Department of Justice to oust them or to defeat reappointment. The patriotism that inspires such criticism and complaints is less a passion than passionate. In the main the Government's attorneys are of judgment, and will not be coerced by such criticism and complaints to futile prosecutions.

"In so far as disloyal slanders or libels cause or tend to cause breaches of the peace, they are offenses against the State of Montana, and can be prosecuted only in the courts of the State by the State's prosecutors. Slanders like those herein are unspeakable (incidentally the defendant denies them). They should be made crimes against the United States. But since the sedition law had its share in the overthrow of the Federalists and in the elevation of Jefferson to the Presidency and his party to power, Congress has not ventured to denounce as crimes slanders and libels of Government and its officers. The genius of democracy and spirit of our people and times seem yet unable to avoid greater evils than benefits from laws to that end.

"The motion to direct a verdict of acquittal of defendant is granted, and the clerk will enter such a verdict of record."

Mr. WALSH. The Government sought a conviction under the provision of the espionage act which makes it criminal to "make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies," and also under that provision which makes it criminal "to cause, or attempt to cause, insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States," or to "willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States." Decisions more or less in keeping with this one, although perhaps not so striking in character, have been rendered by the district courts in the State of Washington and the State of Colorado.

It is not my purpose at this time, and I do not think it pertinent, to enter into any inquiry as to the soundness of these decisions. Other courts have taken quite a different view of the proper construction to be given to the act under which the prosecution specially referred to was conducted, and many convictions have taken place for offenses much less grave and heinous in character than that established in the case to which the attention of the Senate has been specifically called. In many of those cases appeals are now pending to the higher courts, and eventually a decision will be rendered as to whether or not acts such as these constitute an obstruction either to the military operations or to the effort to enlist men in the service of the United States; but it may, and perhaps will, be a very considerable time until a final determination is made. Meanwhile many persons may be emboldened by these decisions to the commission of acts of a similar character. This situation confronting us, it was deemed advisable by the committee so to amend the law as that no possible means of escape would present themselves to those who might be disposed to assist the cause of our enemies in this war by disloyal and seditious utterances.

One of the grounds urged was that the present act did not make it a crime to attempt to obstruct enlistment in the service of the United States. The amendment, in terms, makes it a crime to attempt to obstruct as well as actually to obstruct.

Then, Mr. President, a great many of these things are said and done, the general tendency and result of which on uninformed minds no one can doubt; and yet it is often difficult to establish the specific intent that is required by the law as it now stands.

The decision to which I have invited the attention of the Senate and other decisions in prosecutions growing out of the war, which have been rendered by the same court, gave rise to such indignation in the State of Montana that at a special session of the legislature cognizance was taken of the subject and an act was passed intended to bring offenses of this character within the jurisdiction of the State courts, a copy of which act I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read portions which are indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whenever the United States shall be engaged in war any person or persons who shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war, or who shall display the flag of any foreign enemy, or who shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, shall be punished, etc.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it will be noticed that the act referred to in substance has been made a part of the amendments that are now proposed by the committee to the bill under consideration.

I am authorized by the committee to say that the reporting of these amendments by it does not indicate a conviction or even a belief on the part of any member that they or any of them are necessary or that the act as it stands is not ample in its scope to justify a conviction in any case in which a conviction has been had under it. The committee desire it distinctly understood that they have not attempted and do not attempt to give a construction to that portion of the act of June 15, 1917, under consideration. The amendments are proposed only to meet the conditions in those States in which by reason of the attitude of the judges convictions under the law as it stands have become impossible and to remove whatever doubt there may be concerning the criminal character of the acts denounced in the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. I should like to ask the Senator what construction, as a legal proposition, he places upon the word "calculated," in line 24, at the bottom of page 2 of the bill? Does that mean the same as language intended to bring the form of government of the United States into disrepute—"designed"—or what is the meaning in legal parlance of the word "calculated" there? I simply want the Senator's view of it.

Mr. WALSH. I should say that it signifies "adapted"—such language as would naturally, if accepted, tend to bring into contempt the object of it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, might I offer a suggestion that might meet this inquiry? In the State of Idaho, if the Senator from Montana will permit, and in the State of Montana, as elsewhere in the Northwest, it is interesting to remark—I know of nothing of the kind in the East—there are statutes which read as follows: "Any person who shall use words calculated to make another commit a breach of the peace"—and it might interest the eminent Senators in connection with the definition of the word to know that the word "calculated" has been construed by the courts in those States very generally. The Northwest is the only place that I know of where it has ever received a judicial construction.

Mr. BORAH. My idea of the word "calculated," as used in legal parlance, is "intended," "designed," "purposed" on the part of the party using the language. If a wider construction is placed upon it, I think it would be better to insert either the word "intended" or the word "designed," to bring the form of the Government of the United States and the Constitution of the United States into disrepute.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to that, because I am very sure that if language of that character, of a kind with such as is profane or scurrilous, were used in reference to the Constitution of the United States, the conclusion that it was intended to bring that document or the form of government into contempt would be irresistible.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know, Mr. President, whether or not that is true; but I find in one of the Federal cases something which I had not before discovered, that the courts have made a distinction between "intended" or "designed" and "calculated," and have given a more specific meaning to "intended" and "designed," necessarily implying some intent upon the part of the party using the language, than that which is given to the word "calculated." I myself would much prefer to have either the word "intended" or the word "designed" inserted instead of "calculated."

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. SHIELDS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to put a concrete illustration to the Senator with a view of getting his opinion relative to the proper construction of the word "calculated." I understand that a certain Member of this Congress feels it to be his duty, and has so said, to support any and all measures desired by the administration for the prosecution of the war, whether they are in his view constitutional or not. Would the Senator regard statements of that sort as "calculated" to bring the Constitution into disrepute?

Mr. WALSH. I would not think that that would be a crime under this proposed act.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator will notice that in the amendment there is no requirement of willfulness or deliberation; it is the utterance calculated to bring the Constitution or the Government into disrepute which constitutes the offense, which is my reason for calling his attention to the instance I have cited.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill was intended only to reach those who should give utterance to language with intent to bring the Constitution into contempt; and I am very sure that those who are responsible for the measure would have no objection at all to the substitution of the word "intended," or the word "designed," for "calculated."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator from Montana had concluded.

Mr. WALSH. I have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this bill was only brought to my notice yesterday, and I hope the Senator having it in charge will allow it to go over for a day. I should like to have an opportunity to consider it a little more carefully. With the House bill, as amended by the Senate committee, no one can, of course, find any fault; but the long amendment introduced by the Judiciary Committee, although everyone must sympathize with its purpose to cure the evil aimed at, seems to me, if I may venture to say so, rather sweepingly and loosely drawn; and I think as it stands it might be subject to very serious abuse for purposes not contemplated in the statute at all. Before debating it I should like to examine it further. I should like an opportunity to consider the language more carefully than I have been able to do, and I wish the Senator would allow it to go over for a day that I may have that opportunity.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, when I reported this bill, I had it, together with all the amendments, printed in the RECORD, as well as printed in the usual bill form, and I gave notice on the floor of the Senate that I wished Senators would examine it, as I wanted to take it up at the first opportunity, because the bond sale begins on the 6th of April, and the department is very anxious to have this bill sent to the House, so that the House may act upon it as amended by the time the bond sale begins.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the bill is not essential to the bond sale. We have placed two great loans, and we can place another, even if this bill is delayed for 24 hours. It is far too important a measure to be crowded through in a few minutes because we want to get the bond sale started on the 6th of April. It will be started; the bond bill has gone through both Houses; and the loan will have the same success, and I believe a greater success than the previous loan. The relation of this bill to the bond sale is only one small item in it to which nobody makes any objection; but the amendment proposed by the committee is a very extensive one; it is very sweeping; it is very broadly drawn and I am afraid might be very much abused.

The Senator says that he brought the bill to the attention of the Senate and gave notice of his intention to call it up at the first opportunity. Some of us have been shut up in conference on the bond bill, without which the bond campaign could not be begun on the 6th of April; some of us have had something else to do; and the bill did not come to my attention personally—it may have been my neglect, but I do not think it was—until yesterday. A number of Senators desire to discuss it, and I think the Senator will expedite it by allowing it to go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Senators can do as they please about delaying this bill. The people of this country are taking the law in their own hand on the ground that Congress is not doing its duty. In numerous cases it is said that men are being mobbed all over the country because Congress does not pass laws under which the guilty ones can be adequately punished. This bill has not only had the imprimatur of the Judiciary Committee, which reported it unanimously, but it is copied from the laws of States in the great West, which were not satisfied with what Congress has done in respect to the enactment of Federal law. Knowing that Congress has not acted, the States of the great West have passed laws more drastic than this. I will say to the Senator that something has to be done, and I feel the importance of the measure so much that I want to see it enacted as soon as possible.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think the Congress of the United States is controlled by State statutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; but I think——

Mr. LODGE. I think Congress is just as capable of passing proper statutes as are the States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, Congress is not controlled by State action; but it ought to be impressed upon our minds that when the great States pass laws upon this subject they have considered the conditions and found such statutes essential. When the Judiciary Committee of this body, composed of some of the ablest Members of the Senate, have examined it, passed upon it, and reported it, it looks to me as if the Senate should be willing to give prompt consideration to the measure, in view of the surrounding circumstances. What are we going to do? Just allow these things to go on?

The original espionage bill was in the Senate for months the subject of discussion and debate. If we had passed it as it was originally drawn, I think we would not have required some of the additional legislation which has been since proposed; but we stickled and scrupled over it and could not pass it as was desired, and now it is necessary to bring in bills to amend it so that we can have some law to catch the scoundrels and the spies all over this country.

Mr. LODGE. This bill will not touch a single spy or a single German agent.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it will.

Mr. LODGE. The spies or agents do not go around uttering, publishing, and writing. The dangerous men keep quiet.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call everybody a spy who aids the enemy; that is what I call a spy.

Mr. LODGE. That is a definition as broad as it is new.

Mr. PENROSE. That sounds like a campaign speech.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think if a man is aiding the enemy he is a spy.

Mr. PENROSE. That does not sound like a serious contribution to the discussion of a legal question.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to unite in the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that this bill go over. The fact that it has been unanimously reported by one of the great committees of the Senate is an item in its favor, and a very strong one, and the fact that the Senator from North Carolina requested his colleagues to examine this bill at once is also an item which is proper to be urged in behalf of its immediate consideration. I have been serving upon two very important committees, however, during the interval, and they have been in session, one or the other of them, almost continuously. I have had no opportunity whatever to examine this bill; and I deem this amendment of more importance, of more far-reaching concern, from the superficial examination I have been able to make of it, than anything that has been introduced into either House of Congress since I have been a Member of the Senate. Superficially, it would seem to me that if this bill were enacted in its present form it would retard instead of promoting the sale of bonds. I may be mistaken about it—I hope I am—but in view of the fact that this is a matter which concerns the liberties, possibly the lives, indirectly, of many of our fellow citizens as loyal as the Congress of the United States, we should consider this bill carefully and exhaustively before coming to a vote upon it.

I do not want to even indirectly retard the work of Congress. I have condemned the principle of unlimited debate in this body as frequently and as vigorously as any of the sitting Members. I am conscious of the fact that we waste hours of precious time in discussions that are remotely pertinent to the subjects under consideration. But that, Mr. President, does not militate against the vast importance of seriously considering a bill which strikes at the very citadel of individual rights. I am willing to suspend every individual right of the citizen if necessary to win this war; but let us understand what we are doing fairly well, at least, before taking final action.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator claim that anybody has a right to do any of the things which are forbidden in this bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator mean legally or morally?

Mr. MYERS. Either.

Mr. THOMAS. I say that there are many things forbidden in this bill that a man has a legal right to do. I have a right to criticize the action of the President of the United States in the discharge of my functions as a Senator or in the expression of my opinions as a citizen. I have a right to express my opinion upon the Constitution of the United States; certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I will modify my response to some extent. Of course, until this bill is passed, a person has a legal right to do so; but I will modify my response by saying now, in the absence of legislation, has he a moral right to do any of the things forbidden in this bill?

Mr. THOMAS. In the absence of legislation, Mr. President, no citizen of this country has a moral right consciously to do anything—willfully to do anything—which will retard the operations of the Government in this crisis; but there is a vast difference between the opinions of men regarding that subject or the extent to which they may go. I want time to consider this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. WATSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether he understands that this bill prohibits or penalizes the criticism or censure of the President of the United States or of the conduct of the Government?

Mr. THOMAS. It does, as I understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. If it does, I have totally misapprehended it, and shall be compelled to turn my support of the bill into opposition.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that a willful intent is not necessary to constitute crimes of these acts. Let me read a line or two, beginning at line 18 of page 2:

> Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language * * * or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance—

Now, willfulness is an absolute essential to the commission of crime in all English-speaking countries.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely, Mr. President; but the question that the Senator from Iowa asked was whether the criticism of a policy of the administration, or a criticism of the conduct of a department, or the inefficiency or incompetency of a department, could be regarded as an assailment of the form of government or of the Constitution or of the uniform of the soldiers, and so forth.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I think so, without the word "willfully" appearing in the body of the statute.

Mr. BORAH. I do not.

Mr. THOMAS. It might not be; but some enemy of the Senator might construe what he said, even upon the floor of the Senate here, as an improper criticism of the Government or of the Constitution, and, while he could maintain his innocence, he would have to stand trial.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado has not yet caught the exact point of my inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS. Possibly I have not.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is prohibited the uttering, printing, writing, or publishing of any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government—that has nothing to do with the conduct of the Government or the Constitution of the United States—that has nothing to do with the way in which the President or Congress, either, execute the Constitution of the United States—or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States. Now, I believe that in order to constitute a crime under this bill it would be necessary for a jury to find that the speaker or writer had scurrilously or contemptuously referred to the form of our government, to the Constitution which created our Government, or to the soldiers or sailors. I believe I am right about that; but obviously—and I am sure I speak the sentiment of the committee—it was not intended to make a censure or a criticism of any officer of the Government in the execution of the laws or in the prosecution of the war a crime; for I believe, and I believe all the Senators will concur with me, that the preservation of that right is essential to the successful prosecution of the war. But there are certain fundamental things about our Government, about its form, about our Constitution, and its value, that no man in this time should be permitted to contemptuously disparage or abusively disparage.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I agree with that. I agree with it fully; but the Senator did not read far enough. I begin now at line 18:

> Whoever * * * shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal * * * language—

Now, I come to line 24—

> or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag * * *, or the uniform * * * into contempt * * * shall be punished.

Without regard to intent, any man using any language calculated to produce that result is at once subject to indictment and conviction. Why, the Senator, in his capacity as a citizen, and in the discharge of what he deems to be his political duty, may next fall, in his own State, see fit to utter some criticisms regarding the Government; and at once some personal or political enemy of his, under this bill as it is now drawn, may hale him before the United States district attorney, or before the grand jury, and indict him for something which the prosecutor construes as calculated to produce some consequence which the Senator did not have in mind at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, I do not believe that we should hastily enact into law a bill under which such consequences may ensue. Hence, I want some time to consider this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not in favor of the use of the word "calculated." I opposed it when it was sought to introduce it into other statutes, and I oppose it now. I think the intent ought to be found in the statute; but I thought the Senator from Colorado was referring to things which are to be effected by the language uttered or published, and I still believe that the things are not the way in which the Government is being administered, but the form of our Government, as distinguished from some other form of government, or our Constitution as compared with or distinguished from some other constitution which we ought to have. I quite agree with the Senator from Colorado with regard to the use of the word "calculated." I expressed that view before the committee, and I again express it here.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. I want to be certain of it, Mr. President. I want the Senator to feel that when he makes political speeches or indulges in criticisms that he thinks he ought to make, after he does it he will go back home and not go to the penitentiary. Of course, that is a desire which is universal upon my part; not confined to the Senator from Iowa, but extending to all of the citizens of this country.

Mr. CUMMINS. I doubt whether either the Senator from Colorado or myself would ever use any language or publish any language that was calculated—even if we preserve that word—to bring into contempt the form of our government or our Constitution, no matter if I believed or the Senator from Colorado believed that the form ought to be changed or the Constitution amended.

Mr. THOMAS. But suppose some enemy of the Senator should determine that the language used was calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted State or Federal authority; then what? Of course, the Senator is incapable of uttering or publishing anything designed at this time to result otherwise than in constructive processes; but the difficulty is that all men have their enemies, and there are many men who have enemies who would be swift, under this provision as it is now drawn, in my judgment, to take advantage of it for the purpose of obtaining revenges for which perhaps they have nourished the desire for a very long time.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. PENROSE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wanted to interrupt the Senator long enough to point out something to which I think he has not called attention.

The House bill provides first about making or conveying false reports or false statements which would interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States. There could be nothing worse than that. That is far worse than anything in the Senate amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not had time to examine the bill yet. I do not intend to refer to anything but the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Let me call attention to the fact, however, that in dealing with that serious and most dangerous crime they put in the words "with intent to interfere," "or shall willfully make." In the same way, when it comes to obstructing the sale of bonds, the language is, "with intent to obstruct the sale." Any district attorney, on this word "calculated," could drag any man into court.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. That of itself is bad. He might fail before the jury, but any man would be open to that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. And with all due deference to the distinguished members of the Judiciary Committee, I confess that I am surprised that there is an absence of the word "willful" and the word "intentional," or their equivalents.

I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether, in his opinion, where this bill speaks about abusive language concerning our form of government, that would apply to, say, the Fuel Control Department of our Government—abusive language applied to the fuel control?

Mr. BORAH. Why, certainly it would not.

Mr. PENROSE. That is part of our Government.

Mr. BORAH. It is a part of it, but it is not the form of government, nor is it the Constitution, nor is it the soldiers or sailors, nor is it the uniform.

Mr. THOMAS. No; but, if the Senator will permit me, this amendment does not stop with the particular recital to which the Senator from Pennsylvania. [Reading:]

> Whoever * * * shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country * * * with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated—

May come within the provisions of the statute.

Now, let us suppose, for illustration, that in my capacity as a citizen, and not as a Senator, I call public attention to the fact that certain orders of the Fuel Commissioner are closing the mines of my State, or of the Senator's State? Might not those subject to that criticism go to the district attorney of the appropriate district, call attention to the language in which I had indulged, declare that it tends to curtail production, and invite the moving of the processes and machinery of the Government against me for that offense?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, suppose, on the other hand, that a man were engaged in a propaganda with the intent to curtail production in this country, so as to hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war?

Mr. THOMAS. That is a different proposition.

Mr. BORAH. That is what this language is.

Mr. THOMAS. It is broader than that.

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not broader, as the Senator will see if he will read it again. Let us see whether it is or not.

Mr. THOMAS. I, of course, defer to the greater familiarity of the Senator with this measure, but what I am asking for is time to consider it. If I find that the Senator is correct——

Mr. BORAH. I would be pleased to have the Senator have that. I think the Senator is entitled to that. I am not objecting to that, but this language is very plain upon that proposition. It says:

> With intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war.

Now, if there is a propaganda going on—and there is—in different parts of the country for the purpose of curtailing production so as to interfere with and impede or embarrass the United States in the prosecution of the war, I know that the Senator would be one of the first to want to punish it.

Mr. THOMAS. Absolutely.

Mr. BORAH. Well, then, in order to punish it, we have got to have a law that will reach it.

Mr. THOMAS. Absolutely.

Mr. BORAH. And we can not reject a law because some district attorney, in order to gratify a personal desire for revenge, may bring a man unjustly into court.

Mr. THOMAS. No; but we should curtail the language of the act if its effect is broader and more comprehensive than the purpose intended by the legislature.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me call the attention of the Senator again to the fact that if what is printed, uttered, or published shall be calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority, then the statute is violated. Now, a perfectly proper criticism of some orders that I know to have been made might easily be said to be calculated to inflame resistance to that particular constituted Federal authority.

Suppose, for example, that some fuel order or some food order should, in the opinion of those affected by it, ignore the statute by depriving them of all reasonable or any other profit, and they should invoke the processes of the courts, and in the recitals of their pleadings they should make statements that would be calculated to inflame resistance against the particular bureau involved.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly the Senator would not desire the enactment of a law that might result in the conviction of such a person. Now, I want to guard against—and I am sure the Senator wants to guard against—the use of such expressions and such comprehensive phraseology as may result in the inclusion of a large class of good citizens within the criminal provisions of this statute when no such purpose was intended by Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I say that when the espionage act is construed as a whole as it stands now it is subject to all the objections which have been raised to this particular amendment, and yet we have passed it permitting it to be construed not in open court and by a jury but by the representatives of one of the departments.

The safety lies in this amendment in the fact that it is a law to be construed by the court. The guilt or innocence of the man is to be passed upon by a jury, and under such circumstances there will not be one case in a thousand where an innocent man would be punished. If you do not make the law comprehensive and drastic, you will permit those to escape who ought to be punished.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not as familiar with the Bible as my friend the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], but I have a dim recollection when my mother used to read it to me that it contains some sentiment about better that ninety and nine guilty should escape than that one innocent should be punished. I do not suppose this is designed so as to make criticism of Holy Writ or an invocation of Holy Writ subject to indictment.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho about the language on the bottom of page 3.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield the floor.

Mr. KNOX. I merely wish to ask a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought the Senator from Pennsylvania wanted to make an inquiry of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho about the clause at the bottom of page 3.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. The clause to which I refer in the bill does not seem to quite square with that definiteness which should mark every criminal statute. The amendment beginning in line 16 reads:

> And whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war, or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein.

I do not understand the use of the word "favor," and how it is to be determined whether a man is favoring by his acts the cause of the German Empire. Suppose a man who is known to be entirely able to purchase bonds refuses to purchase bonds, is he thereby favoring the German cause. I think he is favoring it very materially, but do you want to make that a criminal act?

Mr. BORAH. I do not.

Mr. KNOX. Or do you want to let the jury pass upon the act unaccompanied by words and construe that into a favor? Can a jury sit on its neighbor and say your general line of conduct is such that we regard you as favoring the German cause and therefore liable to this provision? That provision is giving me the most trouble, and the reason why I ask the question is that if there is going to be further time given to consider the bill I should like to have the benefit of the opinion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator would seriously contend that a person refusing to purchase liberty bonds would be favoring the German Government under this act. This amendment here was offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], who is not present, and it was adopted by the committee. By the time the complaint was made and a party was put upon trial there would be no difficulty at arriving, in my judgment, as to what the word "favor" meant. It would not be, and should not be, inferred from the mere exercise of the right of an American citizen to purchase bonds or not to purchase bonds, but it would have to be determined by some act which would be construed by the court and jury as in sympathy with and aiding the German Government. For instance, take the illustration which happened the other day when the German Armies seemed to be winning against our forces. A few men met in one of the cities of the East and were discussing the matter and drinking over it and shouting for the German Government, and so forth. How would you reach them except by some phrase like this?

Mr. KNOX. I should say the phrase "espousing the cause of the German Government" would perhaps reach it. I think the Senator used a word a moment ago that would be better, and that is "aiding."

Mr. BORAH. So far as I am concerned, I would just as soon have the word "espousing" as the word "favoring"; but, with all due deference to the Senator, I do not think there would be a very wide difference between the two words when you come to construe them in a court. I want to ask the Senator how will you reach the people who are subtly and constantly carrying on a propaganda to disparage our Government and comparing it unfavorably with the German Government and insisting it is a superior government, and the fact that we are contending against that government is a mistake from the standpoint of the welfare of the masses of the people generally?

Mr. KNOX. I would reach it by passing that portion of the bill and prosecuting them under it. I am not discussing now that part of the bill. I am asking about the word "favor."

Mr. BORAH. The other part of the bill would reach it, the Senator thinks?

Mr. KNOX. No; the other part of the bill does not seem to reach it; it goes to a different proposition.

Mr. BORAH. I think that it should be reached; and it was the design, I understand, of the Senator from Washington to reach that class of people. Now, laying aside our predilection against this bill, which seems to have risen early, is there any possible chance of any innocent people being convicted under the bill when, as I said, they must have a public trial, and it must be shown that they have scurrilously or profanely attacked the form of government, the Constitution, or the soldiers, or the uniform, or the flag?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator, on that point, suppose the advocates of woman suffrage should during the war "utter, print, write, or publish" any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance, to bring the form of government or the Constitution of the United States into disrepute because it did not permit the right of suffrage to women? We have heard advocates of woman suffrage very vigorously denounce it as bringing the form of government into contempt for that reason. Does the Senator think this would cover that?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think that any propaganda carried on for a change of the Constitution based upon any reason for the admission of a larger electorate, and so forth, could possibly come under this clause. It would not be regarded as a scurrilous attack or a profane attack upon the form of government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that would come under this language.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the Senator and I differ as to that. I think it is necessary. There is only one word in this bill that I would change myself, and it is the word "calculated." At the time it was used I thought it had a much more definite meaning than I have since discovered in my judgment that it has. I would prefer to have the words "intended" or "designed."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will look at line 19 on page 2 he will see that the words "disloyal" and "profane" are limited to the first part of that sentence, and the words "any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States into contempt" are entirely separate. There is no limitation upon the words "scurrilous" and "disloyal."

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that suffragists asking for the right of suffrage, asking for a change in the Constitution, form a propaganda which is calculated to bring in contempt the form of government of the United States?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I know that orators in the cause of woman suffrage have argued it in such a way which would bring it into contempt and have advocated active resistance.

Mr. BORAH. They do not attack the form of government at all.

Mr. REED. They do attack the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. No; they do not attack the Constitution in the sense used in this bill at all. They are asking for a change in the Constitution, and they do not base that upon the fact that our form of government is a mistake or an error.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken. They say our form of government is entirely wrong because it denies to one-half the people the right to vote.

Mr. BORAH. It is not the form of government which they assail at all. They are thoroughly in favor of a republican form of government or a democratic republic. They simply ask that a larger electorate be included. It is not an assailant of our Government at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I notice that the last provision of the bill at the bottom of page 3 is that "whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein" shall be guilty, and so forth, and punishment is prescribed. I was just wondering what construction the Senator or the committee that framed the bill would give to the words to "oppose the cause of the United States." I wonder if there is not room for a considerable difference of opinion as to what that cause is, whether we are in the war to democratize the world and that is the real cause or whether we are in the war because the American flag was fired on and American citizens murdered on the high sea. I was wondering how much room for construction there would be along those lines and whether or not men who feel as I do that the cause for entering the war was not to democratize the world at all could possibly be guilty.

Mr. BORAH. Whatever the object and purpose may be in the war, does the Senator from Georgia oppose the cause of the United States against Germany?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly not.

Mr. BORAH. That is the precise answer to your position.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the answer to it is this: Some other man may have an idea different entirely from mine about the cause of the war, and because there is an honest real difference of opinion among men are they to be subjected to attack because I may think that the cause of the war is utterly different from what other men think?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator in my humble judgment confuses the cause of the United States in the war with the reasons which may have been assigned for going into the war.

Mr. REED. Or the object of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. The war aims, the war purposes, and so forth, are different things entirely from the cause of the United States while it stands in a belligerent attitude to the German Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, before propounding my question I thought that this was a very broad phrase.

Mr. BORAH. The question which I put to the Senator would answer itself if it were put to any man in the United States who would take that position. The Senator is not opposed to the cause of the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly not, and no other man is opposed to the cause who is a loyal citizen; and if there is anyone who is opposed to the cause of the United States in this war and a jury of the country shall determine that he is opposed to our form of government, so far as I am concerned I prefer to see the act punished in an orderly way by a court and jury of the country rather than to have a mob take possession of him, which they ultimately would do.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course we may have unwise legislation, legislation that may be extreme, but waiving that for just a moment the word "cause" is a word that bothers me here. I do not think it is entirely different from the word "object." The cause of this country in this war may be according to the mind of one man——

Mr. BORAH. The cause means the issue between two countries now to be determined by battle.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the Senator think that is a dangerous word?

Mr. BORAH. What word would the Senator use in order to get at those people?

Mr. HARDWICK. I would just say "who opposes the United States in this war" and strike out the word "cause." Do not let us have any doubt about it. I would make the language mean anybody who opposes this country in the war. That is what it means.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely what the committee had in mind, of course, and if the Senator from Georgia will suggest a phrase I have no doubt it will be accepted. But when he shall have suggested it he will arrive at a point where one is still opposing or supporting the cause of our country.

Mr. HARDWICK. It depends on what you mean or what somebody else may mean by the word "cause."

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator can frame a phrase which will cover it——

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator right now and that will end my part in this colloquy:

And whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire—

I do not care anything about that—or by word or act oppose the United States therein.

Would not that be better and plainer?

Mr. BORAH. I am not in charge of the bill. As far as I am concerned I do not see any difference in the language.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Idaho a question on another point? The Senator states that under this provision a man has a right to go before a judge and jury and have the jury pass upon it, as if that was completely satisfactory. Of course, I realize that the Senator going into court is one thing, but to the average man being dragged into court, even if he is to be acquitted and shown to be innocent, is a serious ordeal. It puts him to heavy expense. If you hold over every man in this country a threat of an action which can be brought by some district attorney for a personal or political or other reason, it seems to me you are using a very dangerous weapon, unless you guard it carefully.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator in the time which he shall have between now and to-morrow morning to reread the espionage act, and he will find that the district attorney has ample latitude to pull that same man into court under as ample a phrase as is now contained in this amendment, and that the same condition of affairs precisely exists under the law which we have passed which will exist under this amendment.

There might be in the entire country now and then a district attorney who would gratify his personal feeling by drawing a man into court merely to satisfy personal or political reasons, but if that be true, he has ample scope for the exercise of his devilish ingenuity right now under that very act.

Mr. LODGE. Then why add to it?

Mr. BORAH. For the simple reason that there is a class which is covered by this amendment that I believe under the construction which has been placed upon it by the courts are not now punishable under the act. But the power of the district attorney to bring men to court to satisfy a personal feeling is just as well covered by the ample phrase now in the act as would be by this measure.

Mr. LODGE. This does not extend the power of the district attorney at all?

Mr. BORAH. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. Then I can not see the purpose of it. I think it is rather intended to bring within the law a class of offenses not now sufficiently covered.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senate is presented with a case of this kind, that where a district attorney being corrupt desired under the cover of law to bring a case into court, the language here would give him a chance to operate, whereas he has now a chance under the law to do it. What I say is that the language which is already found in the espionage act would protect that kind of a district attorney and enable him to gratify his personal revenge quite as much as the language of this bill.

Mr. LODGE. That was not my precise point.

Mr. BORAH. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. My precise point was that the mere fact that a man has a jury trial was not wholly satisfactory to an innocent man; that an innocent man would much rather keep out of court and away from the grand jury; and that here you have a very sweeping, and, I think, loosely drawn proposition under which the district attorney who is moved by political or personal reasons would find the greatest scope.

Mr. BORAH. May I make this suggestion to the Senator? We have passed what is known as the espionage act with these ample phrases in it with reference to these different acts, and so forth, and thus we have given to the Postmaster General the right to interpret that act and to exclude from the mails any newspaper or any publication that comes, in his judgment, within the purview of the act.

This amendment has this great advantage over the present act with reference to those conditions, that there the party has no chance of a hearing at all; he is adjudged in an ex parte method; he is not permitted to make a showing unless it is at the discretion of the other party; and yet that act is upon the statute books and is now in operation. This proposed act does provide a public hearing before an unprejudiced jury, presumably, and in court, where a judge presides, and in that respect is much better calculated to protect the rights of the citizen than the law that is now upon the statue books.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, on that point I am in the fullest agreement with the Senator from Idaho. I think the extension of the powers of the Postmaster General, which were given by that act, is in the highest degree dangerous, and it is better that a man should have a chance to go into court than to have the matter decided by the Postmaster General.

Mr. BORAH. Before I take my seat I desire to offer an amendment in the way of a new section to this bill, which I ask may be read, lie on the table, and ordered to be printed. I desire to say that that amendment refers to the power of the Postmaster General with reference to nonmailable matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDING in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

That sections 1, 2, and 3 of title 12 of an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," passed and approved June 15, 1917, are hereby repealed.

Mr. WATSON obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Indiana begins I desire to ask a question.

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who first spoke, referred to a decision, but he did not read the decision. I think it is important that that decision should be printed, if any Senator has a copy of it. I do not want to consume time by having it read.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Indiana pardon me just a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. REED. I have the decision in full which the Senator from Montana offered, and at the time he offered it I requested that it then be read. On account of it being necessary for the Senator from Montana to leave the Chamber in a short time, the Senator expressed the desire only to have an excerpt read from the decision. I was about to make the request which the Senator from Massachusetts has made, that, in order that the Senate may understand that part of the decision which was read, the entire decision, which is not long, shall be printed in the RECORD. If it were not for fear of interfering with the Senator from Indiana, I should ask that it now be read, but I do not make the request. I merely ask that the decision be printed in full in the RECORD.

I ask Senators to read this decision. It will be found upon reading it that the decision is not nearly so extraordinary as it might appear from simply reading the indictment and the result without giving the reasoning of the judge.

[For decision see p. 4560.]

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, it is only because this particular measure goes over until to-morrow, and I shall not then be able to be here, that I wish to voice some tentative views, if I may so designate them, concerning it.

I take it, Mr. President, that there is no Member of this body who would not go the limit in enacting legislation which would punish most condignly disloyalty or treason; no Member of this body who would not do everything essential to protect this Government in time of war; no Member of this body who would not vote to punish by the most severe penalties every individual who in any measure or in any fashion retarded the progress of this war or did aught that might militate against us in the great adventure upon which we have entered. If this bill did but that, I would be delighted to stand with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and to reecho the views of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and be in favor of its passage and with them favor its every phrase and every sentence; but, Mr. President, yielding neither to the Senator from Idaho nor to the Senator from North Carolina in my desire to punish the German propagandist, in my intense wish in every fashion to protect our Government and to stand behind it in this time of war, in my desire as well to see that every individual who in any degree retards the progress or prosecution of this war shall be punished, and punished to the fullest limit and extent, nevertheless fundamentally I never could and never would vote for a measure such as is proposed here to-day.

I have not had the time in detail to present what I think are the objections to this bill. I read it but yesterday. Upon reading it I was so astonished that I presented copies of it to some of my colleagues, and in the period since yesterday, when first I saw the bill, I have been busily and continually engaged, so that I could not fully investigate nor present authorities in respect to my construction of it. I speak of it now, unprepared as I am in detail, because to-morrow I go away from this city in the endeavor to do what little I can for a brief period in behalf of the liberty loan; and I beg my colleagues during the discussion of the bill, if its opponents be referred to possibly as men who would wish to retard the war, to permit to weigh in my favor that I am endeavoring to aid the liberty loan while opposing a particular measure of this sort.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say now that I do not think any Senator who is in favor of this bill assumes that any Senator who wants to change it is less patriotic than those who advocate it. There is no such contention.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The words that I have spoken in this regard were directed to no individual Senator here, but they were spoken with the full knowledge of that which has transpired again and again, not only in this Chamber but all over this land, that any man who did not subscribe instanter to any doctrine, however subversive of this Republic and of its fundamental principles, that was presented to him, by that very token and that very fact his disloyalty was demonstrated, and he was shown to be an enemy of his country. Of course, such a doctrine is absurd, and such a doctrine, of course, ought to be met only with scorn and contumely; but it is the fashion, Mr. President, and has been the fashion for some time past now, as to every man and every Representative in this Congress who did his duty as he saw it in opposition to pet measures and conscientiously expressed his opinion.

I say to you, Mr. President—and I say that the language of the bill demonstrates the fact—that this is a bill not for the punishment of disloyalty or of treason, but it is a bill to suppress the freedom of the press in the United States of America, and to prevent any man, no matter who he is, from indulging in fair and decent expression, or voicing legitimate criticism concerning the present Government, the present administration, or any department in respect to the war. Mr. President, it not only is a bill designed to suppress the press of the Nation and to make it subservient to those who are in power to-day; it is not only a bill that seeks to throttle honest and legitimate discussion or criticism, but it even purports to prevent one from thinking as he wishes to think. I now read you two particular portions of this bill demonstrating in part what I say. I read you now from page 3, as follows:

or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

That means what, Mr. President? "Calculated" does not mean "intended" or "designed"; it means, in common construction, the "consequence of which may be." That is the ordinary meaning of the term used; and, therefore, this particular provision means that any utterance of any spoken word which may inflame resistance to any duly constituted State or Federal authority, shall be punished by 20 years' imprisonment in State prison.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. BORAH. I will ask the Senator if the word "calculated" were changed to "intended" or "designed," would that meet the Senator's objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It would be infinitely better.

Mr. BORAH. I would have no objection to that change being made.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. The authorities seem to differ somewhat from the Senator in the definition of the word "calculated," and I wish briefly, in a very few minutes, to read——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I beg the Senator to subsequently present the matter. As I stated in the beginning, I am speaking hurriedly——

Mr. SHIELDS. The reading will only take a moment, and then I desire to ask the Senator a question. I will not interrupt him for any length of time.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator will do me the kindness to allow me to proceed; I hesitate——

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly, if the Senator does not desire to be interrupted; but I was going to read him a definition in about a half dozen words.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am anxious to proceed, Mr. President, because I must depart very shortly; and, as I have said, I am speaking hurriedly, without adequate preparation, on this bill because of the necessity for my departure. Proceeding now with the language of the measure—

To incite or inflame resistance—

That does not mean armed resistance; of course it would not be so claimed; it means any sort of resistance. Indeed, it is not extravagant to construe "resistance" opposition. Now, taking the plain meaning of the words—

Whoever * * * shall utter, print, write, or publish any language which may cause resistance—

Because "inflame" possesses no greater degree of force than "cause," and an overzealous district attorney would readily justify such a construction—which may "cause" resistance—

And if you change "resistance" to "opposition," because practically that is all it is and that is the way it may be viewed—

which may "cause opposition" to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war—

Is guilty of the offense and may be sent to jail for a period of 20 years. Senators who advocate the measure may insist that the qualifying clause, "in connection with the prosecution of the war," may have some talismanic meaning, which, of course, would alter the usual and ordinary meaning of the words; but all of the activities of the departments to-day, all of the activities of the various agencies which are dealing with the Government to-day, are engaged substantially in the prosecution of the war. So we reach finally what would be the ultimate construction of this bill, that if any man shall say anything substantially in opposition to any department of this Government or anything which will cause opposition or resistance to any particular administrative part of this Government, then he is guilty of a crime punishable by 20 years in State prison.

There is another section of the bill as well, beginning in line 14 on page 3, to which I desire to call attention. Just follow this language:

And whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated—

What that means is, first, that you shall not criticize anything or anybody in this Government any longer or you shall go to jail, and, next, carrying it to an extravagant, but perhaps justified, conclusion, that you shall not think critically of anything or anybody in this Government hereafter or you shall go to jail.

Believing that to be the plain import of this language and that substantially that will be the ultimate construction of this language, I can not and I will not vote for such a measure, and I wanted to voice in the very brief period that has been at my command my opposition to it.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I very largely agree in the views that have been offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WATSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish simply to call to the attention of the Senator before he proceeds with the discussion of the bill, and in connection with the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the proper definition of the word "calculated" and the use that the committee made of it in placing it in this bill. I will not enter into any argument in regard to it.

Mr. WATSON. How long will it take the Senator?

Mr. SHIELDS. Oh, about two minutes, more or less.

Mr. WATSON. Very well, I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. When the question was raised I sent to the library for an authority upon the subject. According to the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, I find that the word "calculated" has been defined to mean "fitted; adapted; suited; adapted by design."

So the word "calculated" implies the natural and ordinary effect of the words used to effectuate the purpose prohibited, and it does not cover loose expressions, as indicated by the Senator from California in his objections to this bill.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the provisions of this measure in detail. Like the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I leave here this evening for the purpose of a 10 days' campaign in the interest of the liberty loan, and the few remarks which I desire to make I shall, with the permission of the Senate, offer at this time.

I am well aware of the fact that this is a war measure. It provides:

And whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war, or shall display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

This is a war proposition; and yet the question presents itself as to whether or not any man who, for a course of years, has been sowing the seeds of discord and scattering dragon's teeth throughout the country, leading to a condition in this Nation to-day of rebellion against constituted authority and opposition to the administration in power—as to whether or not, though the law can not be retroactive, it is the proper thing to do to place men who have been guilty of great wrongs against our Government in positions of authority and give them high places under the administration at this time. I want to find out whether or not Mr. George Creel would not be subject to the provisions of this law himself—he, the man whose hands can altogether write, or the man who has the power to alter or to change or even to manufacture, as we well know, the news that goes to the people respecting the purposes and the events and the transactions of the war.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator would not object to it on that ground, would he?

Mr. WATSON. I rather favor it on that account, as I shall show.

I find one of Mr. Creel's full-page editorials, published on October 9, 1910, discussing the subject "Ballots or bullets," written while he lived in Colorado, editing the Denver News, to read as follows:

Lincoln Steffens once compared the "free-born American citizen" to the Russian serf, arousing a storm of indignant protest thereby. And yet, coming right down to brass tacks, do we really enjoy any greater liberty, any larger measure of true governmental power, than the subjects of the Czar? We elect our officials, that's true, but having elected them our authority ends.

We have no more real control over an elected official than if he were Nicholas and we poor moujiks in the fields. Before an election he promises to be our servant, but after the election he is a master.

Nowhere nor at any time have the people any direct authority, any real power, over the men they elect. Having cast their ballots, they are as helpless as Russian serfs, and have got to take what their masters give them, whether they like it or not.

The Senate, the body that sits in despotism, the Supreme Court, from whose decisions there are no appeal, are in no wise responsible or responsive to the people. The President of the United States, when it comes to these bodies, is as helpless as the rest of us.

And what can we do about it except bellow wrathfully, scare a few rascals out of public life, and permit venal legislators to sell the vacant offices to other rascals?

I am wondering whether if George Creel were to write that article now, and this law were in force, he could not be sent to the penitentiary for violating it?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, undoubtedly he could, and if he should write such things at a time when our boys are dying for our Constitution he ought to be.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely. I agree to that. Then, if that be true, ought George Creel to be placed in a position of responsibility where he can censor all the news in regard to the war that will go out to the people, because through his mental processes are to be filtered the intellectual and moral pabulum of the people of the Republic in a day of peril and in an hour of storm?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. REED. I should hardly like to have the remark that was just made by one of the Senators, and concurred in by the other, go unchallenged. Disagreeing to every word that is contained in the article written by Mr. Creel, believing that it indicates an intellect and a character utterly contemptible, I nevertheless assert that in a free Republic men have the right, in the exercise of the freedom of speech, to write even as scurrilous and abusive and as untrue articles as that just read.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator would not contend that if this bill passes that editorial would not come within the purview of it?

Mr. REED. If it would, then the bill is too broad, because you can well leave the trial of gentlemen who write such articles as that which has just been read to the high court of public opinion, and trust an intelligent American people to properly estimate the character of the man.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator where the verdict has landed Mr. Creel.

Mr. REED. Until very recently it gave him about his proper place. I think perhaps before the President appointed Mr. Creel he had not had his attention called to that particular article.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I say that as I understood the article from hearing it read it was an attack upon our form of government, an attack upon the Constitution.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, I will say to the Senator that I am not through.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; that it was not a discussion, as the Senator from Missouri seems to think, of the competency of some officer under the Government or of a policy, but an assailment of our form of government.

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Now, then, whatever may be the rule in time of peace, I simply make this suggestion—that the people of this country whose boys are at the front, prepared to die for our form of government and for the Constitution, will take the matter in their own hands if such articles as that appear from anyone.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely; and if that be true ought a man who writes that kind of an article to have high position under the administration?

Mr. BORAH. Well, of course, I have not any control over that.

Mr. WATSON. But the Senator has his opinion about it.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but this law has nothing whatever to do with that proposition. It would get him just the same; it does not make any difference what office he holds.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I find, reading the Rocky Mountain News of the 14th of January, 1912, a full-page signed editorial by George Creel, as follows:

The socialists, single taxers, nonpartisans, and commissioned government men are to us as Caleb and Joshua, bearing the grapes gathered in Canaan, were to the waiting Israelites, only with us it remains to be seen whether the grapes are sweet or sour.

The law winks complacently or else groans impotently at the crimes of those in high places; it does not punish or prevent the offenses of those with political power, whose crimes are against the property of the people, or of others whose rapacity results in the accumulation of vast profits.

Instead of standing before the world as a triumphant democracy, in which one man is not favored before his brother, America is now regarded as a nation of commercial "sharks," willing to devour one another if other game is not at hand.

Money is now the standard, no matter how acquired, whether by dishonesty or cruelty or a clever combination of both. Morality is now of small account, and intellectual endeavor is now so little a paying proposition that only a fool will work at it.

We are in a war at this time, so we are told, to make the world safe for democracy. What kind of democracy? The democracy that we enjoyed at the beginning of this contest; not the kind of democracy that George Creel describes, because I denounce that as a foul slander upon the United States at the time it was written by George Creel, whatever purpose may have animated him when he penned it.

I further find, Mr. President, in the Rocky Mountain News a full-page editorial headed "Angels and ermine."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator to give the dates?

Mr. WATSON. The date of this is December 24, 1911:

A new and distinctly critical attitude toward the courts is a most striking sign of the times. Whether by cunning design or mere force of submission, the dawn of the twentieth century found the judiciary occupying a curious and remarkable position in American life. Judges were held in almost superstitious reverence, not to awe, and as much exempted from the usual official restraints as though they had been beings from another world.

Historical records showing that Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, and Lincoln had attacked the Supreme Court with vigor and frequency had been expunged and were as if they had never been. Men were chosen to be majors, governors and Presidents and were still considered as fallible human beings, but elections in the cases of judges were gravely assumed to repeat the miracle of the Transfiguration. People deemed them born again, stripped of all passions, prejudices, frailties, and friendships—Olympians, in fact, who sat in a vacuum and thought in purity most profound.

All effects of stagecraft were employed to heighten this feeling. Lawyers prefaced each sentence with "Your Honor." Everyone had to rise when judges entered the court room. They wore the garb of another age. No one queried their right to impose fine and imprisonment when angered or affronted. Unreasoning and unfaltering respect for the judiciary was just as much regarded as a heritage from the reverenced fathers as the Declaration of Independence.

In 10 years a mighty change has come about. In every State men are now looking judges full in the eye; throughout the length and breadth of the land there is a deep-seated distrust of courts, a growing conviction that the steady extension of judicial power is a menace to democratic institutions.

It is not a case of individual judges or certain decisions being singled out for assault; this new and emphatic questioning cuts at the very root of the entire system. As one goes from the Atlantic to the Pacific a sentiment in favor of the abolition of the whole Federal judiciary below the Supreme Court becomes increasingly apparent.

It is not local, nor is it a class protest. The movement includes all sorts and conditions of men, and its national importance is attested by the fact that many magazines are commencing series of articles on this subject. Much of the rankest criticism comes from those who have no apparent kinship with the masses.

Thus making an attack upon another of the coordinate branches of the Government.

I find in the Rocky Mountain News of November 5, 1911, under the head "Popery and politics," a most remarkable assault upon the Presidency of the United States, or the then President, and also the Supreme Court, coupled with the leaders of the Catholic Church:

During the last few weeks a large portion of the press has been making much of certain prelatic attacks upon popular government. Because Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland saw fit to denounce the initiative, referendum, and recall in terms that might also be considered violent, it has been assumed that this is the "voice of Rome" giving orders to the faithful. Such criticisms may not be dismissed as mere evidence that the old maledicents of knownothingism still survive, for while some of the papers are admittedly anti-Catholic, the severest attack comes from sources that are above any indication of religious bias.

In support of the contention that special privilege and the Catholic Church have entered into a working partnership, a very plausible theory has been evolved—one that might well deceive such people as are not familiar with church history. It is well hinged and hangs close to the facts.

This theory is based upon the indisputable antagonism of big business to the initiative, referendum, and recall. The powers that prey have fixed "representative government" so that it stands as a mockery of a real representation are naturally opposed to any change that will put the people in control. But since 10 States now have direct legislation, and every other Commonwealth is clamoring for it, big business has seen the futility of open fighting and has fallen back behind the Supreme Court barricade. A case manufactured in Oregon has been hurried up to this august tribunal, and the constitutionality of direct legislation is to be decided in the next few months.

From this point the theory broadens out and attempts to show that all effort is now being made to prepare the people for peaceful acceptance of an adverse decision. President Taft's appointment of Mr. White, the Democrat—jumped over Justice Cowan, senior member of the court and a Republican—is a Jesuit by training and close affiliation.

President Taft's Arizona method, with its sudden and strangely passionate denunciation of "mob rule" and "legalized terrorism," is adduced as Exhibit 2.

The uncalled-for speeches of Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland, crying out against the initiative, referendum, and recall as the instruments of "mobocracy," constitute Exhibit 3.

By this coalition—President Taft assuming the conservative and the Catholic Church issuing orders—it is intended that the people will be put in a proper state of submission by the time the Supreme Court is ready to declare that direct legislation is a violation of the Constitution.

Thus charging a diabolical conspiracy between the President of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States and the leaders of the Catholic Church to oppose the very democracy that we are supposed to be mobilizing our soldiers to defend over yonder on the blood-soaked soil of France.

Mr. MYERS and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator consider that article an attack on our form of government?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. MYERS. Or an attack on people who are filling official positions under our Government?

Mr. WATSON. Well, Mr. President, did he not attack directly the Presidency when he wrote that article? Did he not attack directly the Supreme Court—the integrity and the honor of those two coordinate branches of the Government—in that article?

Mr. MYERS. There is nothing in this bill against attacking the President. The President is not named; neither is the Supreme Court. I think that article is an attack on people who are filling official positions under this Government, which is very different from an attack on our form of government.

Mr. WATSON. The language is:

Whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of—

Any of these things.

Mr. MYERS. Any of the things mentioned in the bill.

Mr. WATSON. Why, certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Removing from consideration the last article which the Senator read, do not the previous ones suggest the possibility that Mr. Creel may have plagiarized from the speech of ex-President Roosevelt made shortly before that time in the city of Columbus?

Mr. WATSON. I have not read the speech.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, the Senator read it at the time, I am sure.

Mr. WATSON. I may have read it at the time. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. THOMAS. The sentiment is the same. The language, of course, is somewhat different.

Mr. WATSON. Ex-President Roosevelt can speak for himself. The man I am talking about is George Creel. I am wondering whether, if George Creel should write that sort of an article now, he would not be subject to the provisions of this bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I think he ought to be.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely.

Mr. THOMAS. But ex-President Roosevelt does not speak for himself. He always speaks for the people.

Mr. WATSON. I shall not quarrel with that statement.

Mr. President, I want to give you Mr. Creel's opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, as set forth in a full-page editorial published in the Rocky Mountain News on October 29, 1911, entitled "What the fathers did to us."

We are asked to believe that the Constitution of the United States is the supreme wisdom of statesmanship; that it is a democratic document; that the "revered fathers" were actuated by no other motives than love for, and trust in, the people; and that to attempt to change this holy work is to lay sacrilegious hands upon the very paladium of American liberties.

This is the talk of knaves and fools—the one class using patriotic superstitions for the purpose of continuing profitable evils—the other class awed by traditions that it accepts without questioning. That such talk has obtained large circulation and general credence is due to an amazing ignorance of the manner in which the Constitution was framed, the circumstances surrounding it, and the actual spirit that inspired it. Not so amazing either when it is considered that the whole proceedings were secret, and that succeeding text and law books deal only with the Constitution's outward form.

As a matter of fact, the Constitution was framed by rich men for the protection of their property; by aristocrats for the preservation of aristrocratic privileges. Those who sat behind locked doors guarding against the slightest popular knowledge of their deliberations, feared and despised the masses.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate the executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I do not agree with the inferences which the Senator is seeking to draw from this editorial; but I call to the attention of the Senator that the author of that doctrine is a distinguished educator, who for years was one of the leading educators in one of the ancient and great institutions of learning in this country.

Mr. WATSON. To whom does the Senator refer?

Mr. BORAH. I refer to Prof. Beard.

Mr. WATSON. I agree with that, and with anything else the Senator may see fit to say about him.

As a matter of fact, the Constitution was framed by rich men for the protection of their property—by aristocrats for the preservation of aristocratic privileges. Those who sat behind locked doors guiding against the slightest popular knowledge of their deliberations feared and despised the masses. As Prof. J. Allen Smith has written, "Democracy—government by the people or directly responsible to them—was not the object which the framers of the Constitution had in view, but the very thing which they wished to avoid. The efforts of the Constitutional Convention were directed to the task of devising a system of government which was just popular enough not to excite general opposition and which at the same time gave to the people as little as possible of the substance of political power."

The idea that they looked ahead and planned for the problem of this day and age—

This is Mr. Creel again—

The idea that they looked ahead and planned for the problem of this day and age is buncombe, along with all the grave mumble about democracy—

And yet in a war to make the world safe for democracy he is the chosen spokesman of the administration, with power to give the news to the people—

They were concerned with their own day, their own problems; and it is only because they manufactured an air-tight, bomb-proof document, impossible of amendment, that we are now trying to run a Nation along colonial lines.

"It has been common," said the late Justice Miller, of the United States Supreme Court, "to designate our form of government as a democracy, but in the true sense in which that term is properly used it is about as far from it as any other of which we are aware."

Let us consider for a moment the men and conditions of the revolutionary period, along with the belief that the Constitution is a sacred, for-all-time document, handed to a reverend posterity by superhuman beings, we have the idea that every man in the whole 13 Colonies grabbed a musket and took the field against England. As a matter of truth, over one-third of the population of the Colonies did not approve of the war and took no part in it—

Evidently he seems to be in sorrow because they succeeded in breaking away from England—

Then as now, the office-holding class did not change capitalism, commercialism, the professions. Your "conservatives" of the present day were either tories or downright loyalists. The war that they were powerless to prevent cast them down from the seats of the mighty and sent them scudding into hiding or actual exile. Men with democratic ideals came into power and gave the world that immortal Declaration of Independence.

* * * * * * *

About the only thing allowed the people was the right to elect a House of Representatives, but every care was taken to see that this directly-elected body should have no real power. The President was to be chosen by an Electoral College, the Senate by legislatures, and the Federal judiciary was to be appointed for life by the President.

Here was where they got in their finest work.

"Here was where they got in their finest work." Of whom is he speaking? Of George Washington, and Thomas Jefferson, and Alexander Hamilton, and of John Hancock, and the Adamses, of the men of whom Gladstone has passionately exclaimed, "They were great men, not for that time alone, but for any time, for all time." Of the Constitution that great man said, "It is the greatest document ever struck off at any one time in the history of the world by the brain and purpose of man." Mr. President, these men formulated the Constitution of the United States, and yet this sniveling sneerer says of them, "Here was where they got in their finest work," as if they were plotters in the dark, scheming for some nefarious end.

Here was where they got in their finest work. To the judiciary—not chosen by the people, not responsible to them in any manner, and holding office for life, they gave the right of absolute veto on all Federal and State legislation. Not expressly, mind you, for as Gouverneur Morris craftily expressed it, that would have "alarmed." But the judiciary was given the power to "interpret" the Constitution and to pass upon the constitutionality of all legislation.

Even as it was, the Constitution barely slipped through. But it did slip through, and from the very first the judiciary—real and intended masters of the Government—proceeded to justify the faith reposed in them by the conspirators against democracy.

This, then, is the history of the "sacred" document, the "palladium of American liberties" that we must not touch.

Yet, Mr. President, with that sort of a man holding absolute power over the news service as far as he can hold it, writing that kind of an article, we are about to pass a law that would make him subject to its provisions and land him behind prison doors. If that be true, ought this man to be permitted to hold that place and ought not the Senate of the United States to ask for his removal because of these seditious utterances? Is he worthy to hold that position of trust and responsibility and power in this Government while we are fighting to make the world safe for the kind of democracy that has the Presidency and the judiciary and the legislative branch of the Government each independent of the other and all upon a firm basis that we believe is constitutional and enduring?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not know George Creel. I never saw him in my life. But we have heard from Indiana. I do not know what the people of Indiana are going to think about their Senator, who stands up here and attacks a man for utterances made 10 years ago, or perhaps 12. Indiana criminals are being discharged because there is not law enough to take charge of them. We have letters from all over the country, and I have no doubt all Senators have received letters complaining that Senators do not do anything when these men are going scot-free. This that I read is from Indiana:

The court directed that the jury return a verdict of not guilty on this count of the indictment, stating:

"There is no evidence that the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States was obstructed by this circulation. The testimony presented is predicated upon the charge of attempting to obstruct and does not show that the obstruction did actually occur, and the defendant can not be found guilty on these counts." (United States v. Zimmerman, Indiana.)

In this case the evidence showed that the defendant made a public speech on the street in which he said people should not enlist in the war; that the country should withdraw from the war; that the war was not for the people, but is for the moneyed men of the country; that England had only 90 miles of trenches in France; that he questions the wisdom of President Wilson in sending a commission to Russia; and that if the people were loyal Americans they would withdraw from this war.

At the close of the Government case the United States Judge, Anderson, instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant upon the ground that the evidence offered was not sufficient to support a verdict of conviction. The court pointed out the absence of proof of actual obstruction or injury to the military service.

4. In United States v. Meitzen, southern district of Texas, a complete report has not yet been received on this case, but the preliminary report received indicates that the trial judge directed a verdict for the defendant upon much the same grounds as the above-mentioned three decisions.

Because we have no law upon the statute books to convict a man like that, people in Indiana and all the States are uprising. We hear of them from all over the United States.

I want to read into the RECORD another case where a man went scot-free because there was no law to punish him. The country is full of traitors, scoundrels, and spies, and when you try to pass a law here to convict them and stop it, here is great delay. We have got to do something. There is mob law now everywhere in this country, and I am afraid of mob law. If Congress does not do something, the people will take it in their hands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the matter sent to the desk read?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going to let the bill go over, and I want this read into the RECORD, so that Senators can read it. I want to show the Senate what sort of scoundrels are being turned loose in this country because we have no law to punish them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ESPIONAGE ACT, SECTION 3.

MEMORANDUM OF CASES ILLUSTRATIVE OF NEED OF AMENDMENT MAKING ATTEMPTS TO OBSTRUCT ENLISTMENT SERVICE A CRIME.

1. United States v. Orlando Hitt, Colorado, Lewis, district judge.

This man was charged with making violently treasonable statements, ridiculing the draft, and, among others, making the following statements:

"If the young men would follow my advice, which I am willing to give them, and stand on their constitutional rights, they could not be forced to go abroad to fight for this country. I would advise the young men to resist the draft for foreign service.

"You are fools to appear for the draft. If I were you, I would not go. The Government has no right to draft you and send you out of the United States. If you volunteer, they can send you, but the Constitution can not make you go under the draft. Any man who is a loyal American citizen will not buy a liberty bond. It is illegal for the United States to issue them.

"If I were you, I would not go down to be examined for service. They can not do anything if you would not go. The draft is unconstitutional.

"Our country is ruled by the British Crown. President Wilson is a Britisher. Hoover is nothing but a Britisher. I would rather see my children led out and be shot than to see them burdened with a bond issue.

"I am going to fight you fellows in your war work to a finish. There is no necessity for a liberty loan if this was the right kind of a Government. If you think my talk is seditious or my expressions are treasonable, I want to be punished. I want to be put in jail for it. If I am not, I am going to do something desperate. I opposed the draft and registration and I do now. I want to be put on record as such. I will continue to use my influence against this draft."

Mr. FALL obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator pardon me a suggestion. I ask the Senator who submitted the memorandum to have the opinion printed, because while I have not read all these opinions I know in one or two of them the decision goes on the ground that an attempt to resist the draft is not covered by the law, and for that reason the accused was not held; that the law covered resistance to the draft, but not an attempt to resist the draft. So the impression ought not to remain that the courts are refusing to properly enforce the law, neither ought the impression to remain that it is necessary to pass this bill in order to cover a particular case involved in that opinion.

Mr. OVERMAN. All the opinions will be printed, so that every Senator can read them.

There being no objection, the following matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

The court directed a verdict of not guilty, because there was no proof that enlistment service was actually obstructed by these utterances, the judge using the following language:

"Now, the even-numbered counts in this indictment all charge the defendant with the commission of a criminal offense as defined in this same section of the statute, and those offenses with which he is charged are thus defined in this statute: 'Whoever * * * shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States to the injury of the service or of the United States' shall be guilty of a criminal offense. Now, I call your attention to the fact that the definition of the preceding crime in this statute says that 'whoever * * * cause or attempt to cause [the defendant in this indictment is charged in each instance with attempting to cause] insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal to duty,' whereas in the crime as defined in the latter part of the section which I have just read Congress did not see fit to make it a criminal offense, by this statute, to attempt to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States. I don't know why. It might be that in our judgment they ought to have made an attempt to obstruct a criminal offense, but they did not. So, so far as we are concerned, it isn't a criminal offense to attempt to obstruct. Congress made it a criminal offense not only to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, but it said to cause or attempt to cause. That is, the military and naval forces that are organized. If you cause it or attempt to cause it, as to those forces, you are guilty of a criminal offense, and you may be sent to the penitentiary for 20 years. When it comes to the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States, Congress did not see fit to declare that it is a criminal offense to attempt to obstruct that service and that enlistment and recruiting, but it says 'whoever * * * shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States to the injury of the service or of the United States' shall be guilty of a criminal offense.

"Now, we can not ignore the fact that to attempt to obstruct is not made a criminal offense. It is sharply distinguished when put side by side with the preceding crime, as defined in the same section, which states that to cause or attempt to cause insubordination was criminal, whereas as to recruiting and enlistment service it was criminal to willfully obstruct, the element of attempting to obstruct being left out."

2. United States v. Olivereaux, western district of Washington.

In this case the defendant was charged with circulating certain seditious pamphlets for the purpose of interfering with the enlistment service, etc.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I desire to address myself for a few moments, and a very few, to the subject which has been under consideration and discussion. I am very much interested in some of the remarks which have been made, and particularly those of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] but I should like to get back to the point at issue in this legislation, and that is to the objections which have been made to the wording of the proposed act, and particularly to one or two of the words in the amendment which is now pending for action.

The first serious complaint made by those who have opposed the enactment of the bill into legislation, particularly one of the matters the Senator referred to under the second heading of his remarks, referred to by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], is to the word "calculated," in line 24, page 2 of the bill, and as to the meaning of that word and whether it is the proper word to use to meet what is the intention of the bill.

It has been suggested by some Senators, those favoring the amendment, that they would agree to the substitution of the word "intended" in lieu of the word "calculated." I would be very sorry, indeed, to see such a substitution adopted. I think the committee, in wording the amendment, provided the only method of meeting the abuse which is intended to be met, and provided punishment for expressions which could not be so provided, in my judgment, if the language used by the committee were changed.

Undoubtedly in the use of the terms "or any language calculated to bring the form of the Government of the United States or the Constitution," and so forth, into disrepute, in that sense the word "calculated" means the ordinary effect of it would be, and exactly what we are attempting to do now is to prevent the use of reckless language or careless language, whether intentionally used or willfully used, if the ordinary effect of it would be to produce the same result. That is undoubtedly, as I understand it, the intention of the statute and that is the necessity which is now facing us.

Insert the word "intended" and what is the effect? In the first place, while those of us who have been practicing criminal law have been construing acts and the effect of acts and not of words, this is an attempt to make words or declarations criminal and subject to the same rules of construction exactly as would apply to an act heretofore criminal or recognized as such.

If you use the word "intended" in lieu of the word "calculated," you in the act itself constitute a legal defense by law which the defendant need only make by any testimony of his own or otherwise which he might invoke as his absolute cloak and sufficient protection, no matter what the effect of his words might be. The effect of his words might be to cover with contumely and to bring into contempt the Constitution of the Government of the United States or the uniform of the soldiers and the flag of the United States. That might be the ordinary effect or consequences of his word, but if you use the word "intended" rather than the word "calculated" it gives him at once an absolute legal defense, although the consequence of his words are just as grave as if he had uttered them willfully and intentionally.

If you use the word "calculated" and it becomes the duty of the court to instruct as to guilt and intent or as to willfulness, it then becomes the burden of the defendant himself to show that the effect of the words was not to cover the Government or the flag or the uniform with contempt, and that he did not so intend, while if you use the word "intended," he has no such burden upon him, but the burden is upon the prosecution to prove the intent.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUMMINS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FALL. With pleasure.

Mr. STONE. It has occurred to me, while listening to the Senator, whether, as a legal proposition, it is not a sound principle of law to say, based on what courts universally hold, that a man intends the natural consequences of his acts. Is it not sufficient to say that when one commits an offense, an assault, for example, or, stating it still more directly, if one should fire upon an antagonist, is it not sufficient to say that he intended the result flowing from his acts? So far as intention goes, would he not be held legally responsible for the natural consequences of his act?

Mr. FALL. Not necessarily, Mr. President. The element of carelessness——

Mr. STONE. I wish the Senator would permit me to say that I am not asking this question at this moment in a controversial spirit as to whether the word "calculated" or the word "intended" should be used in this bill. I have just come into the Senate for the first time this morning and was listening interestedly to the Senator's observations, and it has occurred to me that in legal effect there is not much difference whether you used the one word or the other. If you use the word "intended" instead of the word "calculated" and a man should commit a criminal act against this law, I am disposed to think he would be held responsible for the natural result of what he said or what he did.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, a man can not commit murder under the definition of the common law, except willfully and maliciously by force of arms and feloniously, but under modern practice, at any rate, if a man kills another, although not intentionally, if carelessly or negligently or in such manner as to display a mind not sufficiently charged with or his responsibility to law or the safety of citizens at the time of the commission of the act, he is guilty at least of manslaughter and under some statutes of murder, although he had no intent at all.

So the court in charging will not necessarily charge as to an intent in that case, but will charge as to the method or manner in which the crime originated or the act was performed.

Again, Mr. President, I undertake to call attention——

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FALL. For a question.

Mr. SHIELDS. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico in what he briefly referred to awhile ago, as I understood him, that this whole question is really one of the burden of proof——

Mr. FALL. I think so.

Mr. SHIELDS. Instead of a difference of meaning. A man is presumed to contemplate the reasonable consequences of his act, and when we use the word "calculated" it throws the burden upon the defendant, if he commits the act, to show that he did not intend it and had no willful or corrupt object in so doing. But if we use the word "intended," then the Government has got to go further and take upon itself the burden of proof, a very difficult thing.

Mr. FALL. The Senator correctly understood my contention. But beyond that, Mr. President, as was suggested to me by a Senator a moment ago in connection with what I said in opening, this is an attempt to make an offense of the utterance of words while we lawyers have been ordinarily construing acts and not words. Would it not be the case that in the case of the construction of an intent with reference to an act and the construction of an intent with reference to words, the strict legal definition of the intent necessary to constitute an offense under an act would not be so strictly applicable to the attempt of an offense with the use of words. A man may undertake to explain his acts or explain his words, but where a man with any deliberation at all uses an expression tending to bring contempt upon the Constitution or the flag of the United States or the uniform of soldiers there is a fixed impression in my mind at once that he intended to effect his utterance and that he did it willfully. I think that is all there is to this contention.

In my judgment we have reached a point now, and we reached it long ago, where any utterance tending to bring contempt upon the Government of the United States or its form of government or the flag or the Constitution or the uniform of a soldier, whether uttered carelessly, willfully, or with the intent to have the ordinary effect which might be even upon the most uninformed intellect bring such contempt about, such utterance should be prohibited, and a very severe penalty should be provided for the punishment of it, because in the crisis with which we are confronted carelessness or ignorance may bring about as disastrous effect as any willful intent might bring about.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. STONE. In the Senate some weeks ago when the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] had up for consideration a bill he had offered relating to the uniforms of soldiers, I said at that time that I thought a line, a clear line, ought to be drawn in some way so as to discriminate between a uniform worn by a soldier in actual service in the line where real danger confronted him from the gentlemen I took occasion then to characterize as swivel-chair, safety-first officers. So far as I know that was the first characterization of that kind. I was criticized at the time for using that expression—so much so that ever since I have been timid about repeating it. I venture now, however, to repeat it, merely to recall attention to what I said then only for the uses of the present moment. Although I may shrink from repeating a thing like that, offensive to the multitude affected by it, I have not changed my personal opinion with respect to it. Mr. President, if this bill passes, whether you use the word "intended" as "calculated," it is in my opinion, as I now see it, largely a distinction without a difference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. STONE. It is very much that way. But what I want to ask about is this: If one holding my view with respect to the uniform enveloping the body of a man with a gun in his hand is to be regarded as on the same plane with one of these favored gentlemen who sit in swivel chairs with spurs on their heels. Uncle JOE CANNON was recently asked, so it is reported, why these volunteer swivel-chair warriors wore spurs, and answered, "In order that their heels might not slip off the desks so easily."

Mr. President, I am curious to know, if I were to say a thing like that, or "Uncle Joe" should say a thing like that, on the street after this bill shall have become a law, would I or he commit an offense against the law of the land?

Mr. FALL. Why, of course not, Mr. President; and only the wildest imagination, it seems to me, could dictate such a question, with due respect to the Senator. He might criticize the wearer of the uniform in the swivel chair or the bombproof, if he so desired, and I think such a criticism would not be a criticism——

Mr. STONE. But if this bill should pass——

Mr. FALL. It would not be words tending to bring the uniform or the soldier into disrepute.

Mr. STONE. Ah, but, if the Senator will pardon me, the bill not only relates to the uniform but to the soldier himself.

Mr. FALL. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. It does that by express terms.

Mr. FALL. Well, if the Senator says anything tending to bring a man in the military service of the United States, private or officer, to-day into disrepute or into contempt he should be sent to the penitentiary for 20 years.

Mr. STONE. Then the Senator's answer is clear.

Mr. FALL. That is my answer.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is getting excited about it; and there is no occasion for that, as I see.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STONE. The Senator walks over——

Mr. FALL. The Senator from New Mexico means exactly what he says and exactly as he is saying it.

Mr. STONE. But there is no need of getting excited about it.

Mr. FALL. Not at all.

Mr. STONE. Then, why do you appear to be so?

Mr. FALL. Because I am answering your question.

Mr. STONE. Then answer it in a gentlemanly way.

Mr. FALL. I am not in the habit of conducting myself in an ungentlemanly way, and I do not need any instruction from the Senator from Missouri upon proper conduct.

Mr. STONE. I think you need instruction now, particularly.

Mr. FALL. That is another wild flight of the Senator's imagination.

Mr. STONE. No; that is a matter of general observation in the Senate.

Mr. FALL. I decline to be further interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean to say that "Uncle Joe" or I would be liable to this proposed law if we said such a thing as I have indicated?

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Missouri can draw his own inference, and, of course, he can voice his own sentiments. I can criticize his sentiments as I choose, and I will do so. Mr. President, I must decline further interruption, because I did not intend to occupy much time.

Mr. President, the second argument made against this bill or the construction of the terms of the bill was largely voiced by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I am sorry the Senator is not present, because I wanted to refer particularly to his argument, embodying apparently, as it did, the views of those who attempted to criticize the wording of the bill. I think that Senators have found a rag man, a straw man, and are proceeding to elevate it and to demolish it, without reference to the facts or the proposed law or the intent of the measure which they are discussing.

The point made by the Senator from California was that he would die, or be walked over, I believe was the language he used, before he would permit the passage by his consent of this proposed act containing these words:

Or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

What does that language mean? As I have said, the word "calculated" means exactly here what it means on line 24 of the preceding page, the ordinary effect of which would be to incite or inflame resistance to a duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war. The duly constituted State or Federal authority acting as administrative or executive officers in the prosecution of this war are acting under the acts of the Congress of the United States, either the direct, explicit terms of which are contained in the acts themselves or by the terms of which the President of the United States is vested with certain authority, under which terms his acts become legal acts.

Sir, not one word is contained here that would prevent criticism of the method of acting by such local constituted authority; not one word which prevents just or even unjust criticism of the law itself; not one word which prevents criticism and discussion of such a law with the object in view of amending, repealing, or changing the law. But the law proposed is plain, that anyone using language the ordinary effect of which would be to incite resistance to the enforcement of a law, a law which is being enforced in the prosecution of this war, should be guilty. I say again that such an offense should be punished; I say that even in times of peace no man should be allowed to incite resistance to a law; but he might seek the repeal of it or he might seek the amendment of it. That is what the liberty of the press and of free speech means. The liberty of speech and the liberty of the press guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States does not mean the license of the bolsheviki or of the Mexican bandit character to resist the operation of a law. You can propose to repeal it or to amend it, but any man who preaches resistance to it should be punished by a minimum punishment of imprisonment in the penitentiary in these days and times. The majority of those now preaching resistance to such a law should be set against the wall and shot; and with a few examples made, we should need to pass very little more legislation of this character.

As I have said, the construction of the language of this bill or of the proposed amendment is so perfectly plain to me as a lawyer that I can not exactly understand, and possibly I have not fully appreciated, the arguments which have been used against the enactment of the bill into law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I contemplated discussing the bill this afternoon, but an important conference which I am on meets at 3 o'clock. I therefore think that I shall simply give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the close of the morning hour, with the consent of the Senate, I shall address the Senate upon the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the business before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The business before the Senate is the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3771.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not know what the purpose of the Senator in charge of the unfinished business may be with reference to pushing the bill this afternoon. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] had expected to speak upon the bill, but he has announced that he does not desire to address the Senate until to-morrow morning. I understand there is an important conference going on this afternoon which will require his attendance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to be present.

Mr. REED. Yes. The Military Affairs Committee have an important meeting this afternoon, which I think will take away most of the Members of that committee. I desire to inquire whether there would be any reason why we should not adjourn until to-morrow, in order to catch up with our committee work, or take up some other business which will not require the attention of the entire Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. REED. I yield for any statement which the Senator from Delaware may desire to make.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to state to the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] stepped out to luncheon, and asked me if I would remain on the floor and undertake to take charge of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN entered the Chamber.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will discontinue any further statement, the Senator from North Carolina having arrived.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina having come into the Chamber, I will restate the proposition which I was trying to put before the Senate. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who intended to go on with his argument on this bill, has announced that he does not want to begin his argument until to-morrow; that there is an important conference which he desires to attend. The Military Affairs Committee is engaged in an investigation of an important nature, and has adjourned to meet at 3 o'clock. The attendance in the Senate is very small, and I wish to ask whether the Senator from North Carolina intends to insist on going on with the unfinished business this afternoon, or whether it will be objectionable to him if we adjourn until to-morrow?

Mr. OVERMAN. It will be very objectionable to me to adjourn until to-morrow. I would not desire to force the Senator to speak to-day, but I think some other speeches may be made.

Mr. REED. The trouble is that important committee meetings are being held, and those of us who are greatly concerned about this bill and want to be here can not be here and at a committee meeting at the same time. I am not trying at all to delay a vote upon the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that.

Mr. REED. As soon as it is discussed I shall be perfectly willing that it be voted upon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the Senator is endeavoring to delay the bill. I would not take any advantage of him or of any of my colleagues, but I know of one Senator who wishes to go on right now. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and perhaps we can get some Senator present who desires to speak.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not move to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McLean	Smoot
Baird	Hardwick	McNary	Sterling
Bankhead	Henderson	Martin	Sutherland
Borah	Hitchcock	Myers	Swanson
Calder	Hollis	New	Thomas
Chamberlain	James	Norris	Thompson
Culberson	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Tillman
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Dillingham	Kellogg	Phelan	Underwood
Fall	Kendrick	Pittman	Vardaman
Fletcher	King	Reed	Warren
France	Kirby	Saulsbury	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Shafroth	Williams
Gallinger	Lewis	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	McCumber	Shields
Hale	McKellar	Smith, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to make what I think will not be more than a five-minute statement of fact touching the so-called Overman bill. I desire to lay before the Members of the Senate, in the briefest possible manner, certain issues which arose in the committee, which I think ought to be in the minds of Senators as they consider this bill. If an apology be necessary for referring to what has taken place in the committee, let that apology be found in the fact that the Senator in charge of the bill has repeatedly referred to the action of the committee in the remarks he has made.

First, after this bill reached the committee it was referred to a subcommittee of five, consisting of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. Inquiry was made by the subcommittee as to whether or not any information had been furnished as to the particular power which it was desired should be conferred upon the Executive. All members of the subcommittee, and subsequently all members of the entire committee, stated in the most express and positive terms that they were willing to join in the enactment of any statute which would give the President the authority to cut what is commonly called "red tape," in order that direction of action might obtain, and, further, that they were willing to confer any other power necessary in order to enable the Executive or any department of the Government under his direction more speedily to mobilize or utilize the forces of the Government.

The position to-day of every member of the Judiciary Committee who refused to join in the favorable report of this bill is that he is ready, willing, and anxious to give any power that the President may need. All they have asked is that the desired power shall be pointed out and the occasion for the granting of that power stated to them, in order that they may exercise some degree of judgment with reference to just how the power should be granted and just what should be done.

There is not, therefore, and there can not be any such issue as was yesterday presented by the distinguished Senator in charge of this bill, which, as he stated it, was that, upon the one hand, there was on the part of the majority of the committee a desire to give the President the powers he needed, and, upon the other hand, on the part of the minority a desire to withhold the powers the President needs or may need.

The true issue is this: Whether a general blanket power shall be given without any intimation or hint of a single case where such power is necessary, or whether the executive departments of the Government ought to submit to the Congress the particular powers they desire, to the end that the Congress may intelligently pass upon their requests. That is the issue and the only issue. The Senator in charge of this bill knows that is the issue. But when the Senator gets into full oratorical flight, the poetry of motion uniting with the poetry of sound sometimes carries him so far into the nebulous belt that he quite loses sight of all such earthly things as facts. Upon such occasions he indulges in the kind of fanciful observations with which he regaled us on yesterday.

Mr. President, as I have stated, the request was made for the information to which I have referred. It was not furnished. The subcommittee then exerted its imagination to try to conjure up what powers might be needed. Finally the Senator from North Carolina and perhaps other Senators suggested instances in which they thought the power ought to be granted, but almost immediately some other Senator discovered that the power had already been granted; that it already existed under the law. This occurred not less than perhaps a half dozen times, with the result that when this bill was finally brought out of the committee there was not a member of the committee who could point to a specific power that the President needed that had not already been given to him by the law of the land; and that is the condition to-day. It is the condition at the end of the Senator's great speech of yesterday, which ran the gamut from the Alpha to the Omega of oratory, and swept the entire realm of imagination with a cyclone of patriotic fervor. We were still left in the dark, and we were blandly told to stay in the dark, and to blindly grant this power without even asking for the light of knowledge.

Now, coming to the facts:

After this matter had been discussed by the subcommittee for some days I offered this resolution. I want the Senate kindly to attend to its reading. Let me say by way of preliminary that it was stated to us that the Postmaster General had brought this bill over and handed it to the Senator from North Carolina; hence you will observe that his office is referred to first in the resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General, who delivered the draft of this bill to the chairman of the subcommittee, be requested to appear before the subcommittee to inform the committee what particular change or changes are necessary in the various departments with which he is acquainted which, in his opinion, will be beneficial in the conduct of the affairs of the Government; also that there be invited before the committee any other members of the Cabinet who may be interested in the passage of the legislation embraced in this bill to give it like information touching their respective departments, to the end that the information thus furnished may be used in framing a bill making such changes in the law and conferring such powers as to Congress shall seem in the interest of the Republic.

That was voted down in the subcommittee by a vote of 3 to 2; and so the subcommittee stood upon the final reporting of the bill by the subcommittee to the committee.

When the bill was before the committee at large, and after it had been discussed for several days, I offered the following resolution. I challenge the attention of the Senate to it. It was offered on March 7:

Resolved, That the committee invite the members of the Cabinet to in person or by writing inform the committee what statutes so limit or obstruct their powers as to make the repeal or amendment thereof desirable, and also to inform the committee what, if any, new powers should in their opinion be granted in order that the war may be effectively prosecuted.

That resolution was voted down in the committee by the same Members who have reported the bill favorably, and that resolution was supported in the committee by every man who voted against reporting the bill favorably. So that the first proposition that confronts the Senate is that the committee charged with the duty of ascertaining whether this bill ought to be reported or not absolutely refused to ask a single member of the President's Cabinet—and that, I say by way of parenthesis, is the only way we could really ask the President for information under the custom—to give us any information or to point out any law that in any way needed a change. Such is the present atitude of the proponents of this bill. They stand here and, if they were not Senators I would say, stubbornly insist that this bill shall be accepted blindly, and powers of the broadest character, granted without the slightest information, being given to Congress.

After the bill had been under discussion for many days, and in a final effort to have its powers defined and in some way limited and specified, I offered a proposal to amend the bill by inserting at the end of it the following words:

Nothing herein shall be held to include the Interstate Commerce Commission or its powers or functions.

That amendment was voted down by the following: Yeas—REED, SMITH of Georgia, KING, DILLINGHAM, BRANDEGEE, CUMMINS, POINDEXTER, STERLING. Nays—OVERMAN, FLETCHER, ASHURST, SHIELDS, WALSH, WOLCOTT, NELSON, BORAH, COLT, and CULBERSON.

I then offered an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following:

Nothing herein shall be held to include the Federal Reserve board or its powers or functions.

That amendment was voted down by the same vote as the previous amendment.

I then offered this amendment:

Nothing herein shall be held to include the Federal Trade Commission or its powers or functions.

That was defeated, the yeas being REED, CUMMINS, POINDEXTER, and STERLING, and the nays being OVERMAN, FLETCHER, ASHURST, SHIELDS, WALSH, WOLCOTT, NELSON, BORAH, COLT, and CULBERSON.

I then offered this amendment:

Nothing herein shall be held to include the Civil Service Commission or its powers or functions.

And that was defeated by the same vote as the first amendment to which I have called attention.

So, Mr. President, it became perfectly manifest, and is now perfectly manifest, that the purpose of the proponents of this bill is to confer powers which will enable the wiping out of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Civil Service Commission, because if that is not the purpose the amendments proposed would have been accepted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Gladly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to ask the Senator if he thinks that statement is justified, in view of the fact that the majority of the committee adopted an amendment providing that the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war?

Mr. REED. I think it absolutely justified. If the amendment to which the Senator has called attention did except the Interstate Commerce Commission, then there would have been no reason not to have accepted my amendment, which made that matter clear. It will not do for gentlemen to claim in one breath that the Interstate Commerce Commission has nothing to do with the war, and hence is not within the purview of this bill, and in the same breath to refuse to make it plain that it is excepted from the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to suggest to the Senator—of course, I know it will not meet with his approval, but I certainly express it as my own idea—that it is perfectly consistent for a Senator to object to the specific exception of the Interstate Commerce Commission, on the theory that in view of the whole act the commission is not within the terms of the bill, and therefore it is unnecessary to except it from the terms of the bill.

Mr. REED. I know the Senator is a modest man, and an intelligent man; and I put this to him as a man of that character, when he finds almost one-half of his associates insisting that in their judgment the Interstate Commerce Commission is included within the bill and begging that it shall be excluded, I put it to him whether he does not respect the opinions of his associates to admit that a doubt exists? And if a doubt exists, is he not willing to remove it when a few words that can be inserted in a moment will be all sufficient?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I will answer the question the Senator puts to me.

Personally I would have no objection to excepting the Interstate Commerce Commission from the provisions of this bill, notwithstanding the fact that I believe it is excepted already. I realize, however, as I realized in the committee, that if we excepted the Interstate Commerce Commission the Senator would then suggest the exception of something else, and if we adopted that, the Senator would again suggest something else, and I did not know where we were going to end up.

I should like further to call to the Senator's attention the fact that while, in modesty, perhaps, the majority of the committee ought to have paid enough respect to the opinion of eight members to submit the views of those eight members; yet, on the other hand, I think it might also be said that the 8 members ought to have had enough respect for the opinion of the 10 at least to credit their opinion with being entitled to very serious consideration.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Let us admit that the opinion of the Senators upon the other side was entitled to respect, and that the Senator from Delaware expresses a perfectly honest judgment that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not included, whereas upon the other hand eight Senators were of the opinion that the Interstate Commerce Commission was included. There was, then, that difference of opinion as to whether the Interstate Commerce Commission was included; but as I understand the Senator now, he did not want the Interstate Commerce Commission included. He does not now want it included, and I suppose he speaks for his associates, and will say for them that they did not want it included.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. President; if the Senator will permit me, I speak for myself, and for no associates. I said that personally I had no objection to writing in that exception. Personally, I have not; but I think, if I may be permitted to repeat, that it would have been excepting from the terms of the bill something which was not already within the terms of the bill, and therefore it seemed to me rather foolish.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Let me conclude this, and then I will yield.

The Senator, then, was at one with myself upon the question that the Interstate Commerce Commissiou ought not to be included, but along with me were seven other men who thought it was included. The Senator ought, therefore, to have voted then, and ought now to vote, to make that plain which he desires to have plain and which he insists is plain, but which other men are very sure is not plain. Now, the reason the Senator offers is that he refused to vote to take out the Interstate Commerce Commission because he thought I would offer an amendment to take out some other board or tribunal. That is a strange reason to offer. The question as to whether the Interstate Commerce Commission—a great court, or semicourt, that has been created and has existed for nearly 30 years—should be put within the purview of this bill was an important question to be settled by itself. It ought not to have been settled upon such a peccadillo as that the unfortunate author of the amendment might offer another amendment applying to some other and different board.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply wish to suggest that it seems to me it is not fair to argue that a vote against his amendment meant that the committee was opposed to excluding from the operation of the act the Interstate Commerce Commission in one instance or the Civil Service Commission in another instance, or other agencies mentioned in the other amendments that were variously offered in the discussion of the bill. The opposition to those amendments by the Members who voted against them would follow from the view, first, either that they were unnecessary; that there was no purpose at all to interfere with the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Civil Service Commission or the other departments or bureaus mentioned in the other amendments; and therefore there was no occasion to specify that those bureaus or departments or commissions or bodies were excluded; or, in the next place, it may have been prompted by the view that it was not wise to exclude specifically certain bureaus, commissions, or departments which, although not contemplated now, might be disturbed if necessity arose under the authority granted in the bill. Conditions might arise in the future where the exercise of some authority or control such as a redistribution of functions as provided in this bill might be found advisable.

So that a vote against the amendments is not to be construed, in all fairness, as consenting that those things should be included in the bill which the amendments offered specifically provided should be excluded. The grounds of voting against those amendments were such as I have indicated, and such as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] has pointed out. It was thought not advisable, in my judgment, speaking for myself, to specifically exclude certain bureaus or commissions or departments or agencies by express provision in the bill, because in the future a time might arise when such control or redistribution of functions and powers, as provided in the bill, might be found to be advisable in connection with the prosecution of the war, at the same time not having in mind that there was at present occasion for the exercise of any such authority with respect to the agencies or commissions covered by the several amendments offered by the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it may be that there is some human being who can divine what the Senator means by his statement; but if there is, he has a different mentality than I possess. I say this in all kindness, for there is no man in this body who can make a clearer statement than the Senator from Florida; and yet, as I follow the verbal circumlocutions to which we have just listened, they apparently mean this: That he was opposed to excepting the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the ground that while it is not now included in the bill, there may come a time when some one will want to include it in the bill, in which event it can be so included by stretching the language of the act.

Now, either the Interstate Commerce Commission is or it is not embraced within the terms of the bill. We ought to arrive some time at a period of frankness. I want to ask the Senator from Florida a blunt question: Is he in favor of passing this bill in such form that the powers and functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be subject to the terms of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection or hesitation about answering that question.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. FLETCHER. At present I have no idea that there is contemplated under the provisions of this bill any control over the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any of the members of that commission; but if it becomes important, in the judgment of the President of the United States, that the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, or any other commission, body, board, or officer in this country should be directed for the purpose and to the end of winning this war, I say let the President take hold of that officer or that body or commission or agency or that department and do the needful thing. That is my position.

Mr. REED. Well, that is not answering my question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know what may arise. The situation is changing every hour—not only every day but every hour.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator to answer a direct question, and it was this: Does the Senator believe that under this bill, as it is now framed, the Interstate Commerce Commission is included? Can we not have a "yea" or "no" to that, just for the enlightment of the Senate and my own satisfaction?

Mr. FLETCHER. My own opinion is that the bill is perhaps broad enough to include a redistribution of functions or duties in the Interstate Commerce Commission. It does not give to the President the power to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission, or to do away with it, or to interfere with its proper and legitimate work under the law.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mean to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission is included in this bill, and that the power is not then granted, it being included, for the President to absolutely change every one of its functions, take them all away, and transfer them to another board or to another individual?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so. I think it is perfectly absurd to assume that the President is contemplating or would be capable of striking down a great arm of the Government by saying that perhaps it is included, and he may do that sort of thing. Even if the power is given, I would not have any such apprehension as that.

Mr. REED. The Senator says, "Even if the power is given." The power is given, or the power is not given; and there ought at such a time as this to be no sort of equivocation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. I will yield to the Senator from North Carolina in a moment. The Senator states now that the power is given, but that it will not, in his judgment, be exercised; and yet he states that the power is limited and that the functions of this great commission would not be changed. Now, I call attention to the language. I challenge the attention of the Senate to the language, and I challenge the attention of the country to the language. It is this:

That * * * the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act.

Again, it is provided—

That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law; to transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another; to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it either by detail or assignment, together with the whole or any part of the records and public property belonging thereto.

Mr. President, the Senator states that he is willing to give these powers. He then states that they are not in the bill. But they are in the bill, and the Senator's position is clearly outlined in his statement that he is willing to grant them. So that when we boil down his statements that ought to have been condensed in a question and a direct "yes" or "no," they amount to this, that the Senator did vote against my amendment excluding the Interstate Commerce Commission because he wanted the Interstate Commerce Commission included within the terms of this bill.

Now, one word further.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I am getting a little bit wearied by the fact that every time a man raises a question as to the proper kind of law to pass, he is to be silenced by a very loud-toned protestation, "I am willing to do anything to win this war," as though the declaration gained added virtue because of the loud-mouthed notes in which it is uttered, especially if the arms at the same time be violently waved, with "eye in fine frenzy is rolling."

Mr. President, there are but few people in the United States who are not willing to do whatsoever is necessary to win this war. Bombastes Furioso is not braver than the silent-lipped boy in khaki who kissed his mother good-by, shouldered his rifle, and went to foreign fields to die for the flag.

The man who abandons his duty as a Senator and yields the judgment that he ought to employ for the benefit of his country is not more patriotic than that other man who endeavors to use his judgment for the purpose of helping the United States to carry this war to a glorious and triumphant end.

The question is always to be settled when we come to grant powers that the people gave us the authority to grant, to pass laws the people gave us the authority to pass, what law will best aid in carrying on the war and at the same time preserve the rights and liberties of the American people.

I heard a Senator once in great fervor say, "He would burn down New York City if the President of the United States told him to do so." He added, as an afterthought, "and it was necessary to whip Germany." Of course, if it became necessary to whip Germany to save the honor and the life of this Republic, we would burn New York City; we would burn all our cities; we would sacrifice the life of every man capable of bearing arms, and the women of our country, I believe, would organize death legions and willingly perish to preserve our beloved land. But this was not just what the Senator meant to express. He really meant to state the degree of his subjection to the President.

The question always is, Is it necessary? Sensible and patriotic men and Senators will answer that question as the facts may demand. They will not be swept off their feet by clamor, neither will their judgment be overwhelmed by the songs of praise that fell from lips accustomed to flattery nor their senses be dulled by the incense burned by those who hope that "thrift will follow fawning."

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Assuming that this measure does comprehend the Interstate Commerce Commission and assuming that it would give the President some supervision and jurisdiction over it—and, as for myself, I think the measure does, I am supporting it upon the theory that it does, I hope it carries with it that opportunity—I ask the Senator what harm does he suggest would follow from it and in what way would the Government be embarrassed in the exercise of it?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I might answer that at length. The truth is I rose to talk for five minutes merely to state what transpired in the committee. I had not the slightest idea of going beyond that. I wanted the Senate to understand that in the committee there had been an absolute refusal to call in men who could tell us what it was that the department desired; that that request had been refused; and that then the request to exclude from the operation of the bill certain of the great independent boards and tribunals had been likewise refused.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Let me answer the Senator from Illinois. I have been, because of the questions, led aside from that purpose.

I now answer the Senator from Illinois. The Interstate Commerce Commission is a great tribunal created nearly 30 years ago. Its powers and functions are quasi judicial, and I think I may also say quasi legislative. It is a board which occupies that peculiar twilight zone between the legislative and the judicial departments of the Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Please let me answer the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question which is pertinent to what he is just saying.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does not the Senator think it is also quasi executive?

Mr. REED. Perhaps not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the Senator think it is quasi administrative?

Mr. REED. I think it might be termed an administrative body, or quasi administrative body.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill deals only with executive and administrative commissions. Then would not the Interstate Commerce Commission, according to the Senator's statement, be quasi judicial and quasi legislative and partially administrative——

Mr. REED. The Senator is again arguing that the commission is in the bill. A moment hence he argued it was out of the bill. "Now you see it and now you do not see it." It is the finest legislative shell game ever staged before the American people. If the proponents of this bill were juggling shells and a pea as they do words, they could be indicted in any State in the Union and sent to jail.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to observe that from the Senator's remarks he is playing that very shell game. He first had the Interstate Commerce Commission in this act. In his admission he seems to have shelled it out.

Mr. REED. No; I have not shelled it out at all. I said that the board was quasi-judicial. I said that the board was quasi-legislative, if I might employ that term. The Senator asked me if I thought it was quasi-executive. I said I doubted that. He then asked me if I thought it was administrative. I said it was. On reflection it is my opinion that it is a board which possesses in a degree all these functions.

I have not the decisions in mind at this moment, but I think it has been so described by the court; but however that may be, whether it is legislative or whether it is administrative, its members are officers, and hence are within the provisions of the bill which embrace officers.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will wait one moment, until I get through answering the Senator from Illinois, I would be glad. I was answering the Senator from Illinois when the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] interrupted me, but let me continue answering the Senator from Delaware for just a moment. Notice the language of the bill. It covers every commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission is a commission.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Where does it occur, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. REED. In line 3:

To make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Executive.

Mr. REED. Yes—

as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act.

Again:

That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions—

And "administrative" was put into the bill by an amendment to cover the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not think anybody will deny that.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if all the discussion in the Judiciary Committee was not on the assumption that the Interstate Commerce Commission and every other permanent independent commission or individual should be included?

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly that was the discussion. There were one or two Senators who made the statement that they doubted whether it would be included. Then I tested that out by my motion to amend by striking out the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the motion was defeated.

Mr. OVERMAN. Right there, let me ask, if the Senator's amendment had been adopted excluding the Interstate Commerce Commission from the bill at that time, would the Senator have voted for it?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is like "the flowers that bloom in the spring." It has nothing to do with the matter under discussion.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is like the shell game the Senator was talking about. He introduced one amendment and would not vote for the bill if it was adopted. That is the idea.

Mr. REED. Now, let me assume that that is true; that I introduced an amendment and would not have voted for the bill if the amendment had been adopted; it is my duty and it is the duty of every Senator when they find a bad law proposed that may be passed by the votes of mistaken men to make it as little vicious as possible by amendment. The Senator's argument is that if a man who offers an amendment will not vote for the bill even if the amendment is adopted, the amendment should be defeated, even though meritorious, is a strange sort of philosophy.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would there not be the same reason to vote it down?

Mr. REED. The Senator did not doubt my sincerity and does not doubt it now?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not doubt the Senator's sincerity in the least, but I refer to his course in introducing this amendment to the bill when even if the committee had adopted that amendment he would fight the whole bill.

Mr. REED. That would be no reason. If the amendment was good, it ought to be adopted as a good amendment regardless of who offered it and regardless of whether it was offered in good faith or bad faith. That undoubtedly is true. The only excuse there may be for a man voting against a good thing on the ground that he doubts the good faith of the man who offers it is because he doubts his own intellectual ability to decide the question on its merits and must, therefore, reject it because he fears the man who brings forward the proposition. The man who does not know whether he can trust himself or not would well beware of Greeks bearing gifts, but the man who knows his business will not hesitate to take a good thing even from the hand of a Greek.

Mr. OVERMAN. If we adopt the amendment, would the Senator vote for the bill?

Mr. REED. The Senator from North Carolina is making an argument that if I did not love him I would characterize in pretty strong terms. The Senator knows that in the committee I begged for reasonable modifications of the bill. I made a statement in the committee that went beyond where I thought I ought to go and said I would support a measure of that kind. I begged in the committee that we might get together upon a measure. The Senator knows that that was my attitude throughout.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not deny that.

Mr. REED. Very well, then, the Senator can not stand here and by innuendoes impugn my motives. Nobody has any right to do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not do that. The Senator knows the legislative methods and that legislation is a compromise, and yet he introduced an amendment when he would not vote for the bill after it was adopted.

Mr. REED. Certainly, on that one amendment I would not; but the bill could easily have been amended so that I would have voted for it. If the Senator from North Carolina had been able, after three weeks of work, to have told us of one single power that the President needed which he did not possess, I would have voted to have granted that power to the President. The Senator could not tell us a single power. He thought he had discovered three or four, and almost immediately the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] pulled a law book out and showed that the power already existed. So we are here to-day asked to grant these broad and absolutely unheard of and undreamed of powers, although no man can tell us—and I challenge any of these gentlemen to tell us—a single power that the President desires which he can not exercise. I am pausing for a reply. Name it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, for myself I am quite conscious of a good many; but I say to the Senator I purpose addressing myself to the bill, and I shall enumerate a few. I do not wish to intrude with an argument now, but I will not sit silent on the assumption that there are not many to be named.

Mr. REED. We will wait until you name them, and when you name them, if they are proper powers, we shall probably show you a statute already conferring them, as happened in the committee time and again.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, I will await with patience.

Mr. REED. We will await with patience the illuminating address of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. There is gratification at the information, but, Mr. President, pardon me a single statement. He will await my viewpoint, but I will say to him, if he were present yesterday he heard me say to the able junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] one of the particular things in my mind which I do feel should be coordinated and consolidated, and which could not be done because there are two separate statutes, and until those statutes are repealed it is not in the power of the President to change those powers and duties and distribute them. I referred to the fact that the Ordnance Department, to start with, and the Quartermaster Department have duties defined by statute, and there was an attempt to meet the position made by the eminent Senator from Missouri and the eminent junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] contended in the Military Committee, and I think wisely, respecting the contracts, in the way they are distributed under our Council of Defense.

The only way the President can take those out of the hands of the Quartermaster General and the Ordnance Department is for Congress to repeal the statute that now vests those powers in those two bodies.

Mr. REED. The answer to that unfortunately is that the President has already done it, and has done it from the beginning of the war up to the present time, and it has been done in the way I shall relate. The Council of National Defense organized a great many subordinate bodies and the word was sent down to the military officers to make their contracts in accordance with the directions of these subbodies of the Council of National Defense. The contracts have been made in that way, and the only complaint I have to make is that I think in organizing a great many of those subcommittees that have had charge of the purchases of supplies there have been too many men put upon them who were themselves interested in the contracts. I do not say that in criticism of the President, but I mention it as an unfortunate fact, and I say that that is one of the things which might be intensified if we adopt this reckless legislation.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator will permit me, since I have pointed him to one instance where only by statute can the other two statutes be repealed, the Senator now calls attention that the President by a practice sought to put into effect that which would have effected the object. But I invite the Senator's attention that when the President did such, or whoever did such, it has been assailed for illegality; it has been assailed for want of authority; it has been assailed for usurpation. And now when an attempt is made to have a legislative act passed that shall legalize that conduct, the eminent Senator assails it as being unnecessary usurpation.

Mr. REED. I have not assailed it as usurpation. I said it has already been done.

Mr. LEWIS. It has not been done by law, but by mere order, which the Senator attacks as invalid.

Mr. REED. I do not agree to that at all. It usually happens in a time of warm discussion on this floor, and that is the only time it has been used; no man is able to pursue a theme very long. So, if my remarks are very broken, it will be understood that I am trying to follow these various suggestions to their legitimate end.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. In a moment. Replying to the Senator from Illinois, I make this statement. The President is Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. The President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy can practically assign such members of the Army or such officers as he sees fit to such positions as he sees proper to place them in. The possession of that power in itself enables the President to put into position controlling the ordnance, and I am now following the suggestion of my friend from Illinois, a man who will absolutely do that which the President desires to have done. It is as useless and senseless to say that the President is handicapped in that respect as it is to say that the colonel of a regiment on independent duty is handicapped by some regulation which gives a first sergeant certain powers when he can change that first sergeant and put his own man in at any instant. The answer to practically all the various suggestions that I doubt not will be made is that the President possesses the power either as President in his civil capacity or as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to put into practically every position except these great independent tribunals and boards a man who will do exactly what the President wants done.

Mr. President, I want to answer the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois in a colloquy on yesterday, to the effect that the Government now has taken possession of the railroads, and therefore the Interstate Commerce Commission becomes, in a sense, functus officio, and we do not any longer need to retain it. That is not the exact language of the Senator, but it is what I understood to be his suggestion.

Mr. President, I do not agree on that proposition. It is true that the Federal Government has temporarily taken possession of the railroads, and it is true that, being in possession, its relation to those roads has to a considerable extent changed. But it is also true that the railroads remain the property of the companies that have always owned them. The United States Government to-day merely occupies the position of tenant by force. It holds possession of the property which belongs to others, and therefore the proprietors of that property have some rights which are even now entitled to fair and just consideration.

The second proposition that I make is this: Even if the United States Government had bought and owned all the railroads and was now an absolute proprietor, it does not at all follow that in the question of the fixation of rates or the regulations of the great highways the Interstate Commerce Commission should not be continued for the purpose of adjusting rate differences and performing many functions now devolved upon it by law. The circumstance that we may at present occupy these roads does not alter the fact that the American public may find it desirable to have their interests protected by the independent action of an independent tribunal that can summon witnesses and hear testimony and argument, and then, in the light of its broad experience and aided by the views of its experts, decide questions which concern the general public. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not true that the railroad bill makes the President in the first instance the fixer of rates, if I may use that term?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And the only power which is left to the Interstate Commerce Commission under the bill is to review the President's action?

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. There is also a suggestion in the law which in my judgment practically advises the Interstate Commerce Commission not to exercise that power, because it suggests the proposition that they shall take into consideration in the question of reviewing the President's rate as the rate established by the President certain things which heretofore they have not taken into consideration.

The question which I submit to the Senator is this: Up until such time as the railroad act shall expire by its own terms, until the end of the war, does the Senator believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission will ever fix a single rate?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am pausing because I am trying to think just how I ought to express the thought that is in my mind.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not ordinarily pause long for answer.

Mr. REED. No; I shall not have to pause long to express the thought that is in my mind. I may have to pause a long time to answer the question to the satisfaction of the Senator, but if I remember aright the Senator himself was opposed to cutting down the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Was he not?

Mr. BORAH. I do not remember how I voted on that, but I voted against the entire bill.

Mr. REED. Very well; then the Senator voted against this modification. But, answering the Senator's interrogatory as well as I may, and answering it with entire frankness, my opinion is that the President will not act, and when I say the President I do not mean Woodrow Wilson; I mean whoever may be charged with running the railroad business, for the President of the United States can not in the multitude of his duties study rate questions very closely. Whoever shall in the name of the President decide questions of rates I think will find his conduct very wholesomely restrained by the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power of review, and I have still enough confidence in the Interstate Commerce Commission to believe that if a decision should be rendered for the reduction of rates or the increase of rates that would be highly unjust the Interstate Commerce Commission would interfere.

I do not believe they would interfere in a slight or inconsequential matter. If they fail to do that they will have failed to perform the sworn duties of their office. While I have had occasion in the past to be one of those who have not been an incense burner in the presence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, having more than once criticized them, I nevertheless believe the commission exercises a wholesome influence upon our public life and that its destruction ought not to be sought, as I believe it is sought by this bill. I believe this reserved power which the Senator has spoken of will be absolutely annulled the moment you pass this act, for every member of the Interstate Commerce Commission will then understand that if he undertakes to review any decision that may be made by the Director of Railroads or by any subordinate of the Director of Railroads the functions and powers of the board may be at once transferred from it to the individual whose decision it may seek to review.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before I make the remark that I am going to make, I desire to say that I assumed when this bill was before the committee that it did include the Interstate Commerce Commission. That was discussed some time ago. I rose then to say that so far as my attitude upon the bill was concerned, it was assumed upon the theory that the terms of the bill included the Interstate Commerce Commission; but I had in mind this state of affairs. That the railroad bill had been passed here by an overwhelming majority; I think with only eight votes against it. In that bill the President is given power to fix rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission, a commission appointed by the President, is given the power to review the fixing of those rates; and in that bill we suggest that, in reviewing those rates, they must take into consideration that they were originally fixed by the President in view of war conditions, and so forth. Now, I submit, as a matter of candor and fairness, what can we expect from the Interstate Commerce Commission during the pendency of this war in reviewing rates fixed by the Commander in Chief with a suggestion in the law that when they come to review such rates they must take into consideration the fact that they were fixed by the Commander in Chief in view of war conditions? In view of the Five Per Cent Rate Case we may assume that there will not be a single rate disturbed which is fixed by the President during the war.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the amount of that argument is this: The Senator from Idaho thinks the Interstate Commerce Commission has already been practically abolished, and hence he is willing to abolish it some more; that it has been abolished by indirection, and he is now willing to give power to abolish it directly. I do not think it has been totally abolished. I think that the Senator's statement is a very strong one—that its powers have, perhaps, been circumscribed—but there are many other powers that the Interstate Commerce Commission possesses aside from the mere fixation of rates. We are both dealing with a problem which lies in the future; we are both, in a sense, prophesying; and all I can say is that in my opinion the Interstate Commerce Commission's present powers are of a wholesome and restraining character. Such, undoubtedly, was the opinion of Congress, because, after long debate, it insisted upon retaining in the Interstate Commerce Commission the powers which it did retain therein.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. As the Senator from Missouri will remember, I was very much opposed to the curtailment or restriction of the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission as found in the railway bill; but it must be remembered—and I premise this in order to ask a question—that the fixing of rates must be examined from two standpoints. The railroad companies had the right to fix rates, and the President simply takes their place in that authority. The Interstate Commerce Commission had the right to suspend those rates until an examination, if it saw fit. That authority was taken away; and I am sorry it was. But the value of that work of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to rates has never rested simply in determining whether the rates as a whole furnished sufficient revenue for the railroads as a whole. That is the point which is sought to be covered, I assume, in the language quoted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; and I really think that that consideration will deprive the Interstate Commerce Commission to a very great degree of any corrective influence.

But the most important thing which the Interstate Commerce Commission has done respecting rates has not pertained to rates simply as a revenue-producing instrumentality, but to the adjustment of rates as between communities or as between kinds of traffic.

The exercise of that authority can only be wise when done through men of great influence and observation. To submit that authority to a single man in charge of the Government operation of the railroads is most likely to result in a complete disorder in the rates of the country and in very great disaster to the various communities which may be affected.

I have believed, Mr. President, that, notwithstanding the effect of a certificate of the President with regard to the amount of revenue which may be required to be raised upon the railroads, in the very nature of things the Interstate Commerce Commission would exercise freely and helpfully the jurisdiction which it retained, so far as adjusting rates between communities and between kinds of traffic are concerned, in accordance with their established procedure. I would look upon it with the greatest apprehension if an effort were made to deprive the Interstate Commerce Commission of that function, because the business of the country is not so much interested in the absolute rate as it is in the absence of discrimination between rates. I ask the Senator from Missouri if that is not an aspect of the matter which is entitled to very great consideration?

Mr. REED. Unquestionably the Senator from Iowa has stated with his usual clearness, and somewhat in detail, one of the many important powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which certainly it was not the intention of Congress to take away, and which I do not think will be taken away under the bill which has been passed. There are other powers—the valuation of the railroad property is going on. I shall not pause to go into the details; I content myself with the general statement that the Interstate Commerce Commission has grown into a great body, possessing an expert knowledge regarding all matters of transportation, which is of infinite value to this country. When it is asked that that commission shall not be included within the terms of the proposed law and the proponents of the bill insist that it shall be, it looks very much as if the power to wipe out the commission is insisted upon because it is intended to be exercised.

I am as far as any other man from believing that the President of the United States in seeking to act under this proposed statute will do anything wittingly to injure the American people; but I am fully aware of the fact that he must act through human instrumentalities. I heard read this morning the opinions of one of the men who to-day occupies a high position in this country. They were read as illustrative of the fact that it would not be safe to pass the amendment to the espionage law lest its entanglements might reach men of the kind to whom I am referring.

We have discussed the Interstate Commerce Commission enough, so that Senators' minds are attracted to it. I never have much fear as to what will happen in this body if Senators' minds are attracted to a proposition, always provided Cabinet members will stay at their end of the Avenue. I would prefer replying to the opinions of Cabinet members if they could be expressed on the floor, where I could hear them, to replying to such opinions as delivered in whispered conversations in cloak rooms.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, are we to assume from the eminent Senator's observation that there may be in the shadows of this portal or of this temple such an individual, who is assuming to have such impudence with us?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, judging from the close connection which the country understands the Senator from Illinois maintains with exalted places, I wonder that he can not feel and recognize the influence at this moment. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will admit that there are some Cabinet members who, from what I understand, have a very long reach, but I have not as yet felt the touch of their hands on me.

Mr. REED. Not the touch of their hands, but the inspiration of their spirit.

Mr. LEWIS. I have not always been able to acknowledge that as having an existence as to all of them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let us turn to the Federal Trade Commission. The Federal Trade Commission was not a favorite of mine when it was created, but in that Federal Trade Commission are reposed very great powers, one of which is the power to summon any citizen of the United States who is engaged in business, and to require him to tell about his business—a power that is not vested in any executive in any free country, but one which has been reserved exclusively for legislative or quasi legislative or judicial or quasi judicial bodies inquiring in the interest of the public. The Federal Trade Commission has power to issue orders, as well as subpœnas, to make what might be properly termed interlocutory decrees and judgments. It is, in fact, a body possessing statutory powers so broad that they ought not to be conferred upon any single man however great or however good he may be. They should be reserved always to a body which is judicial, or at least which is quasi judicial.

Mr. President, is the Federal Trade Commission included within the terms of this bill? I answer yes. When a motion was made to exclude it, the motion was defeated by the votes of the identical Senators who have reported this bill favorably.

Let us see what can be done with the Federal Trade Commission if this bill passes. Its functions can be transferred from the commission as a whole to any one of its members. All of the powers and functions of the trade commission can be conferred on the presiding officer of the commission.

There is not a doubt of that; candor will not permit any man to deny it. That, however, is not all. There is not a man on this floor who can deny that every one of the powers of the Federal Trade Commission can be conferred on that distinguished gentleman whose remarkable editorials were read and who was this afternoon so highly eulogized by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I refer, of course, to Mr. George Creel. I say this because the powers and functions of any office or any commission or any board can be transferred to any officer of the Government under this bill.

Let those who stood here and told us that the Federal Trade Commission was to be a supreme court of commerce, and that it was to be composed of men of the highest intellect, of judicial temperament, of vast learning, and that, therefore, it could be safely made the custodian of great powers—let those who insisted upon the creation of that tribunal pause and ask themselves the question whether that board ought not to be excluded from the terms of this bill? Why should it be left in the bill? Why should the right to exercise its powers be transferred to any man? We in the Senate had something to do with the creation of that commission; we conceived it in the Congress; and then we provided for the approval of its membership. But under the terms of this bill every power that is reposed in the commission can be transferred over night to a man who has never seen the inside of a law book, and who is unacquainted with matters of commerce or business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose to remind the Senator from Missouri that a few days ago the Senate passed a bill repealing the anti-trust laws in regard to foreign trade. That measure is now in conference and will shortly become a law. That proposed act will tremendously, almost infinitely, increase the jurisdiction, power, and importance of the Federal Trade Commission, and, indeed, put the safety of the business of this country in the hands of that commission so far as our foreign trade is concerned.

Mr. REED. The suggestion of the Senator is very pertinent. I repeat that under the terms of this bill every power of the Federal Trade Commission can, the day after the bill becomes a law, be transferred from all of its members to one of its members, or can be transferred to any man holding an office under this Government. Its powers can be given to the Director of Railroads, just as the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission can be conferred upon the Director of Railroads if this bill becomes a law. There can be no dispute about that proposition.

Now I pass from the Federal Trade Commission. Those who helped to create it, those who have regarded it as the happy child of their brains and their hearts, I charge them guard it well; we are about to pass a law which authorizes its destruction; I call upon the Senate to remember that the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, every member of which must be approved by this body, and the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, every member of which must be approved by this body, may be transferred to some intellectual bolshevik who has been engaged in writing editorials for the delectation of anarchists and men of like ilk. But I pass on.

I made another motion:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed to include the Federal Reserve Board, its powers, or its functions.

Senators, I sat as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency when we created the Federal Reserve Board. It became apparent during the long deliberations upon that bill that the power of ultimate control over the entire finances of this Nation would be in that banking system, and that the control of that banking system would either be left in the member banks or that it would be left in the Federal Reserve Board. If left in the member banks, the great moneyed forces of the country could control the volume of our currency and could contract or expand credits. For that reason we vested in the board great powers, believing they would be exercised for the benefit of the people. We practically made the board the supreme dictator of the finances of the entire country, public and private, for its control is such that its hand is almost omnipotent. Under this bill that is before you for consideration the powers of that board may be concentered in one member of the board; they can all be transferred to the Comptroller of the Currency, who is ex officio a member of the board, and the powers of the other members would absolutely cease; or the powers of the board can be conferred upon any other member, or the powers can be conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury, or they can be conferred upon the president of the new banking corporation, for he himself will be a Government officer, not by virtue of being the president of the bank but because he will be a Government officer before he becomes the president of the bank.

Again, the powers of this board may be conferred upon any banker of the United States by the simple process of appointing that banker to some office within the gift of the President, when instantly the transfer can be made to him; or they can be transferred again to any other citizen of the United States by the simple process of appointing that citizen to a public office, and thereupon transferring the functions and powers and duties of the Federal Reserve Board to that individual. Is there any necessity for a thing of that kind? The answer will be that it is absurd to suggest the possibility, and that is equivalent to a declaration that there is no necessity; yet those who have insisted upon the passage of this bill have refused to exclude the Federal Reserve Board.

Again, the motion was duly made, and promptly defeated, to exclude from the operations of this law even the poor old Civil Service Commission.

So that the question that I now present to the Senate that must be considered by the Senate and that the Senate must decide when it votes upon this bill, is whether or not all of the powers and functions of these great boards ought to be transferred at will to any individual or to any tribunal, and this without limitation of any kind whatsoever?

Mr. President, since I have occupied so much of your time, let me proceed a step further. I challenge the attention of Senators to what I am about to say. As this bill is drawn every Cabinet officer can be wiped out to-morrow, if the bill were to pass to-day; all the powers and all the functions of each of the Cabinet officers can be taken away and concentered in one Cabinet officer; or, again, they can be concentered in any one individual. That individual may to-day be a private citizen of the United States and to-morrow may be appointed to an office, and thereupon all the powers of all the Cabinet positions transferred to him. No Senator who will sit down and read this bill carefully can arrive at a different conclusion. We can not escape it; it is here nominated in the bond in good set phrase. I read:

To make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer—

And, again:

To utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law, to transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another, to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it.

Why, you can take our lamented friend Creel out of the position he now holds, as unofficial censor, and you can transfer his person into a position in any one of these great departments. Likewise you can transfer the functions of one of the departments to him, whether it be the Department of State or the Department of War or the Department of the Navy. Shall these broad and sweeping powers be granted?

Let me observe, in nearly every instance where these bodies and tribunals have been created, Congress has provided that the occupant of the office shall possess some peculiar qualification which, in the opinion of Congress at the time it framed the legislation, would fit the occupant for the performance of the duties of the office.

But if this law is passed, the functions and powers which have been conferred upon men fitted for their performance may be transferred to individuals who do not possess a single one of the qualifications named in the law. We may have provided in a statute that a man, to occupy a certain office and perform certain duties, shall be learned in the law; but under this bill, if it be passed, those duties which Congress intended should only be performed by one learned in the law can be passed over to a man who is ignorant of the fact that the United States has adopted a Constitution, if we can indeed imagine such a creature to exist.

Again, Congress has created offices in regard to which it has required that men shall possess certain scientific training; but if this bill be passed, duties that Congress consigned to a man whose mind has been trained along certain lines of scientific thought, who had gathered the learning of the ages within the temple of his brain, and who was therefore qualified to speak wisely and to administer prudently, can be transferred to and exercised by an individual devoid of any of the specified qualifications. It is as though the legislature of a State may have carefully provided that the judges of its supreme court shall be men learned and experienced in the law, and, having made that provision carefully and graven it upon their statute books, it should then be proposed that the governor of the State might at any moment, by a mere order, transfer the powers of the supreme court to any single justice of the peace sitting in and for any township of the Commonwealth!

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Take the Department of State, for instance; and I instance that department because the Senate, as such, has a direct relation to our foreign affairs, and therefore, as such, has a very immediate and peculiar interest in the qualifications and the experience and the aptitude of the Secretary of State. Do I understand the Senator to say that if we confirm a man as Secretary of State because we believe that he will discharge those functions to which we sustain the immediate relation under the Constitution that we do, his duties and his powers could be transferred under this bill to the Third Assistant Secretary of State, who practically has charge of ceremonial matters alone?

Mr. REED. I read the language of the act to the Senator from Pennsylvania. There is probably no better lawyer in the United States, and, in addition to that, no man in public life who has had a greater experience. I will read the language again:

The President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary—

Now, that is an executive agency—including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer.

Surely the Secretary of State holds an office, and is an officer. I continue reading:

In such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary.

And what is the qualification? Oh, the committee guarded us most wonderfully! After about three weeks' debate they concluded they would restrict the President's power; and here is the restriction:

Which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected, and constitute a public record.

[Laughter.]

Again, in answer to the Senator's question, I read section 2:

That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies—

Now, notice again—

offices, or officers now existing by law, to transfer any duties or powers from one existing department—

Such as the Department of State—commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another, to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it either by detail or assignment, together with the whole or any part of the records and public property belonging thereto.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I rather agree that the instance I cited would come within the language of the act. I call the Senator's attention, therefore, to this proposition:

The Senate, under the Constitution of the United States, is charged with the responsibility of confirming these officers. The presidential power is merely to nominate. The President does not possess within himself the power to appoint a Secretary of State, a Secretary of the Interior, or any other Cabinet officer, or, indeed, any other officer. The complete performance of the act of creation of the officer requires the cooperation of the Senate. Now, then, might not the Senate's act in confirming any officer be rendered a practical nullity, in so far as it is any assurance to the public that the Senate has exercised any wise discretion over the incumbent, if 24 hours after he has been appointed his functions could be passed over to some one who had not been confirmed to fill that office?

Mr. REED. In a way I have tried to express that thought, but the Senator from Pennsylvania has expressed it in a manner so clear that an affirmative answer is the only one that can be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the President desired to have the duties now devolving upon the Secretary of State performed by the Third Assistant Secretary of State, or if he wanted the Third Assistant Secretary of State empowered with the duties and responsibilities of the Secretary of State, has he not a much better way of accomplishing that than in the roundabout process which the Senator suggests might be possible under this bill?

Mr. REED. May I answer in the Yankee fashion by asking, what way?

Mr. FLETCHER. Why, by asking for the resignation of the Secretary of State and appointing the Third Assistant Secretary of State to that position. That is one way.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. First, in this particular instance, he could not appoint the Third Assistant Secretary of State to that position, because the confirmation of the Senate would be lacking; but in all those offices where the confirmation of the Senate is not necessary, and in all offices where the incumbent does not desire to be discharged, the Senator has already pointed out the means by which the President can have his will carried out. That is to say, if the President wants a certain thing done in the War Department, being Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, he will tell the Secretary of War to have that particular thing done, and there will be no difficulty in having it done. So, in the Navy Department, the President can easily accomplish the doing of anything that is proper to be done; but always, so long as the Senate has the right to confirm a Secretary of State, the Senate will try to have supervision over the character of the man who performs the duties of that office.

The Senator's illustration argued too much. It argued the necessity of no legislation whatever; for if the President has the power now to confer all of the great powers of the Department of State upon the Third Assistant Secretary of State, if he has that kind of power, why does he need this sort of legislation? He does not have it in that instance, but he does have it in many instances. I think, perhaps, I am in error. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania stated that all Cabinet officers had to be confirmed.

Mr. KNOX. Well, I meant that class of officers who, under the Constitution, had to be confirmed.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. And my whole point was, would it be right, would it be proper, would it be dealing fairly with our duties and our responsibilities under the Constitution, to pass any law that would practically render nugatory the judgment we have passed on an officer who had been nominated for a particular place?

Mr. REED. It seems to me that it is unwise to do that. It seems to me wholly unnecessary to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, aside from the proposition which the Senator from Pennsylvania suggests with reference to the Senate retaining its right of confirmation, and so forth, leaving that out, what is there in this bill that the President is authorized to do that he may not do now with reference to the office of the Secretary of State?

Now, assume for the purpose of argument that the Senator's position is correct—and I do not controvert it just now—what, outside of an act of confirmation, is there that he could do under this bill that he can not do without it, that is the readjusting and coordinating of the different departments, such as the Department of State, the Department of the Navy, and the Department of War?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I should say there was nothing, I would have answered this bill, of course, because the only possible necessity for this bill, the only reason that could be advanced for it, is that the President does not possess sufficient power; and the Senator's answer to that, every time the question is raised, is that the President already has the power; and if so, why the bill?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will say frankly to the Senator that the Senator from Pennsylvania stated yesterday what, in my judgment, is the true construction of this bill, and always has been with me; and for that reason I have never looked upon it as the destruction of the palladium of American liberty. I think, outside of certain appointments which I will name, the President has now the power which is proposed to be conferred upon him to redistribute and coordinate these executive agencies.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I will ask the Senator to wait until I get through, please. The President himself, as the news was conveyed to the committee, stated that he was of the opinion that he had that power, but that he did not want to have it left in doubt, and he did not care to exercise it without the action of Congress.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator does not think he has any such power where those offices are established and the duties are defined by statute laws, does he?

Mr. BORAH. To coordinate and combine?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. Even if an office is created by law, and the duities of the office are prescribed by statute?

Mr. BORAH. I think when the function is transferred it must be performed under the statutes as they exist. For instance, if we coordinate two bureaus, the functions of those bureaus as coordinated would still be described and prescribed by statute, and by statute which we are not assuming to change at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, suppose that both bureaus had been created by law: Could the President repeal the law establishing either one of them?

Mr. BORAH. No; and he can not under this proposed law, either.

Mr. HARDWICK. Could he change the duties of the people who hold those places, so far as those duties are prescribed by statute?

Mr. BORAH. I think undoubtedly the President, by reason of his authority as Commander in Chief, could call upon or designate any of these Executive agencies or any particular bureau to perform a particular function.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me to interrupt a little further, that is true except where you run up against a statute, and it is not true whenever you do run up against a statute.

Mr. BORAH. If the agency designated by the President to perform that duty should perform it, it would have to perform it in accordance with the terms of the statute.

Mr. HARDWICK. But if another agency was designated by law to perform it, that other agency would have to continue to perform it unless the law was changed or repealed. That is the trouble. There would not be any excuse for this bill if that were not true—not the slightest. We would be wasting time to consider it.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. I will assume, then, that the Senator is correct. Then, the bill does confer upon the President the power to coordinate certain bureaus and departments.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. But when they are coordinated and combined they will still have to perform their functions in accordance with the provisions of the statute.

Mr. HARDWICK. That depends on the language of this bill, of course.

Mr. BORAH. This bill does not repeal any law, nor change any law, nor change any statute at all. It simply empowers the President to redistribute the functions of executive agencies, and when they are redistributed they must be performed and carried out in accordance with the statutes which are upon the statute books.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri be kind enough to let me put the Senator from Idaho right on one proposition?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. The observations that I made yesterday had to do exclusively with the first provision of the bill—that is, the redistribution of functions among executive agencies. They had nothing to do with the second section, which provides for the consolidation and transference of the functions of one department to another department. My proposition yesterday was that the President, not as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy but as the Chief Executive of the United States, could distribute the executive functions as he saw fit and compel such coordination as he saw fit.

Now, as to the suggestion which the Senator from Idaho has just made—that for that reason, and because the President had the power, he saw no objection to the bill on that score—I think that is one of the main objections to this kind of a measure. I think it is a mistake for the President of the United States to call upon Congress for authority to do a thing that he clearly has the right to do. I think it leads to confusion. I think the President should execute his office as it has been defined and interpreted by law and by practice. I think the Congress of the United States should adhere to its functions as they have been determined by practice and conditions.

I can recall one illustration, Mr. President, which shows the confusion, and sometimes the bitterness, that arises out of a different course. You all recall that the President requested authority of law to arm merchant ships to protect themselves against U-boat depredations. That resulted in a long discussion here in Congress, and in a so-called filibuster, and a good deal of recrimination passed from one side to another, and finally some very prominent Members of this body were put in a very unpleasant position by certain things that were said about them in regard to the position they took upon that measure. The fact is that the President did not need the authority of Congress to arm merchant ships, and his subsequent action shows that he did not need it, because Congress did not pass the law and he did arm the ships. Now, how much better it would have been for the President of the United States to have executed his powers to protect the commerce of the United States upon the high seas by ordering those merchant ships to be armed than to come and ask Congress for an unnecessary statute and produce a debate here in Congress that led to a great deal of unpleasantness. So I think the very suggestion that the President has those powers now is the strongest argument against the necessity of passing the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I say that while the Senator from Pennsylvania now states that the President undoubtedly had the power to do that which the bill then under consideration authorized him to do with reference to arming merchant ships, yet there were very able lawyers who rendered opinions to the contrary, and they were printed in the public press both before and after, and it was a matter of doubt among able lawyers whether or not he had that power.

Mr. KNOX. I understand, Mr. President, that it never was a matter of doubt in the mind of the President; and if my recollection serves me, I think it was so stated in an interview that was given out and authorized by the White House, that it was a mere matter of overprecaution that he asked for the enactment of the statute.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I remember, the President said in his message—I will not be sure about this, but he said somewhere—that he was of the opinion that he had this power without the action of Congress, but that the matter was in doubt. Now, where there is a question of doubt as to whether an Executive has the power or not, I can not see any objection to his asking the approval or the disapproval of the coordinate branch of the Government, which unquestionably may withhold or give him that power. If it was clearly and unmistakably within his power, clearly and unmistakably an executive act which the Congress did not need to cover by law, I agree perfectly with the Senator that the Congress ought to perform its functions, and the President of the United States ought to have assumed the responsibility of exercising those which unmistakably belonged to him.

Mr. KNOX. I have no doubt that there were people who thought that the President did not have the power, although I do not recall that I noticed any opinions by distinguished lawyers to that effect. But it always had seemed to me that it was perfectly plain that if the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States had any clear responsibility it was to protect American ships or American citizens on the high seas.

Mr. BORAH. Let me call attention to another illustration. A former President assumed the right as an Executive to withdraw public lands, and he withdrew the public lands. It was a matter of doubt, but the Congress afterwards approved of his act; but it led to all kinds of litigation in the Western States, by reason of the fact that the President proceeded to exercise authority which was of doubtful existence, and which, as one court at least afterwards held, he had no authority at all to exercise. Where the line of demarcation is not clear, it seems to me it is not out of place to ask the two branches of Government which undoubtedly do control, if combined, to act upon it. If it is clear, then I entirely agree with the Senator that it is the duty of the President to exercise his power.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho. I rather agree with him as to the propriety, in some instances, of granting power where it already exists; and undoubtedly the President has the power to do many things that would be within the scope of this act. I have no objection to making that power perfectly clear by a proper statute. It is the powers which he has not now, or some of them, to which I object; and I give the Senator this illustration:

If I understand this bill, under it, if it is constitutional, the President could transfer all the powers and functions of the Department of State to the postmaster of Washington by simply entering an Executive order saying, in substance, "I hereby transfer the powers and functions of the Department of State to the postmaster of the city of Washington." It would not necessarily disturb the personnel of the Department of State.

The people who had been appointed or selected for the discharge of those duties would simply have nothing to do, and the postmaster of Washington would simply assume those powers and functions. I agree that the postmaster would be compelled to discharge them in conformity with the law which controls the Department of State; but does the Senator from Idaho think that we ought to give the President power of that kind? I am assuming that the propriety of giving it shall be tested by its use and not by the improbability of the President using it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course if I should answer the Senator's question it would involve all my reasons for supporting this bill. In the first place, however, I do not believe the Senator has put a fair interpretation upon the language of the bill; but the bill as construed undoubtedly does give the President great power over these different executive agencies. What I stated to the Senator from Missouri since I rose, however, was that whatever transfers as to personnel or coordination take place, nevertheless the Congress has prescribed the manner in which the functions shall be performed; and assuming that the Senator from Iowa is correct in saying that he could transfer these functions to the postmaster of Washington, nevertheless the postmaster would then have to perform all the functions of the Secretary of State in accordance with the Constitution and laws prescribed and outlined by Congress.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will examine the law he will find that Congress did not prescribe and outline any particular way that the Secretary of State should perform the duties of his office.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. I am quite aware of that fact, and that Congress can not do it now.

Mr. KNOX. The Senate, however, is disposed to exercise its judgment as to the individual, that he is competent to discharge the duties, as in the instance named by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. We might just as well understand now that so far as Cabinet officers are concerned, their confirmation by the Senate has always been a matter of pure form. Practically nobody would hold up an appointee who is to be the head of one of the executive departments whose name the President sent in. I do not know whether it has been done or not. I know it has not been done in many instances where it ought to have been done, and that it has practically become a dead letter so far as that question is concerned.

Mr. LEWIS. With the permission of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Missouri, let me attract the attention of the eminent Senator from Pennsylvania to an exact situation in his own administration as Secretary of State, a matter of pride to all Senators then as well as subsequently. There was established in this Government an officer known as Counselor of the State Department. This position was created as a matter of courtesy to the office. It is a fact familiar to all that he did perform in many instances since then the position of Secretary of State. I must concede, in my own party's administration, the First Assistant Secretary of State was absolutely ignored as having no existence whatever, and the position of a gentleman who was a mere clerk in the department performed the duties of Secretary of State in the absence of the Secretary of State.

Mr. KNOX. It would be unfair to the Senator from Illinois to have him rest in error upon that proposition. The Counselor of the Department of State was appointed under these circumstances: Congress passed an act entitled "An act to promote foreign trade, and for other purposes," and by that act gave to the Department of State the sum of $100,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State for the creation of such offices as he might determine were necessary and at such salaries as he might decide were just. Under the provisions of that act an officer was appointed, called the Counselor for the Department of State. He remained a mere statutory officer appointed by the Secretary of State until within the last few weeks of the administration of President Taft, when the office was made a presidential office.

The functions of the First Assistant Secretary of State were not disturbed at all during the Taft administration; no powers were delegated to the Counselor of the Department of State other than the name indicated; but I understand that under this administration the office of counselor has been elevated to a position next to the Secretary and outranking in dignity and power the office of First Assistant Secretary of State. Those are the facts.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me say to the Senator, I do not see any difference in our view and premises save in this, that the Counselor of the State Department performed duties of the Secretary of State previous to being recognized by statute, or that as a mere lawyer provided for by a mere general act he performed the duties of the Secretary of State. Subsequently when recognized as a Presidential appointment merely as a lawyer he practically was permitted by the Secretary of State to perform the duties of Acting Secretary of State, and if I may invite the attention of the eminent Senator to the public news of the day there have been going through to the public press in the last few months instances where in the absence of the Secretary of State the Counselor of the State Department was Acting Secretary of State. That merely proves, I am sure, the viewpoint of the Senator from Idaho, that the duties can be performed by anyone whom he may see fit to designate.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I still insist I ought not to allow the Senator from Illinois to remain in error so far as he refers to the Taft administration. The Counselor of the Department of State never under any circumstances or at any time even acted in the capacity of Secretary of State. If he is now acting in that capacity I fancy it is under some additional legislation. When the office was made permanent the probabilities are that there was an extension giving the Secretary of State the right to delegate such duties to the official as he may think proper, and of course that includes the right to delegate his own duties in his absence.

Mr. LEWIS. May I say to the able Senator it is apparent if the Secretary can take an ordinary lawyer from the department and delegate his duties to him to be performed, surely the President would have a right to merely transfer such functions.

Mr. KNOX. I think so.

Mr. REED. The colloquy or colloquies that we have been listening to are very interesting. They, however, partake of the nature of details and special instances, and I do not think by dwelling upon them we will get much light on the general proposition. But let me make this observation. If it be true that the President possesses power so broad that he can transfer the powers of the Secretary of State to a mere attorney in the Department of State, then his powers are certainly sufficiently broad to satisfy any reasonable demand.

If his powers are as broad as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] thinks, then his powers are already so broad that they do not need extension. If, upon the other hand, there are limitations upon the power of the President the question is whether those limitations should be swept aside by a general bill, or whether the instances where the extension is needed should be pointed out and dealt with in each case as presented.

Mr. President, the point I am trying to make is that there are limitations upon the power of the President that ought not to be swept aside by a general bill, but that we ought to have suggested to us the particular obstacles confronting the administration which it ought to be relieved from, and that we should intelligently and judiciously deal with this problem.

I have called attention to the powers of four great tribunals which, I insist, should not be included within this bill. I have named the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Civil Service Commission. It is now admitted, I think, in this debate that under the terms of this bill the powers of every one of these boards could be transferred; that the persons could be transferred and the functions of these commissions could be taken from the commission as a whole and given to any one man. I think it is further admitted that a man may be a private citizen to-day and may to-morrow be named to an office, and thereupon all these great powers conferred upon him.

I insist that there has no necessity been shown for the destruction of these great independent commissions.

I insist that no man has yet pointed out a single power necessary to the proper conduct of this war which the President may not now exercise. So the question is this: Shall we grant a broad blanket power without any man having shown any reason for its grant, or shall we say to the Executive, with all deference and all respect, make known to us in whatsoever way you please in what respect you need additional power and we will gladly grant all needful power. Surely no sane man can doubt the disposition of this Congress to back the President in everything necessary to the winning of the great conflict. I need not dwell upon the ready desire of Congress to do that. A moment ago during the course of my remarks the final fact occurred in the enactment of a law authorizing the issuance of twenty thousand millions of dollars of American securities. That bill was passed yesterday afternoon in this body with less than 40 minutes' debate; indeed, with no debate, the chairman of the committee simply stating the purpose and objects of the bill. There was not a dissenting vote in the Senate. It reached the House of Representatives and it has been passed by that body during this day with how much discussion I do not know.

There have been only a few hours that have elapsed, and I apprehend it passed almost without debate, and it is here now signed and ready for the President. Does anyone need, in the presence of this stupendous grant of credit unparalleled in its amount by any grant ever made in all the history of the world, to question the alacrity with which Congress responds to all war demands? So Congress sits here to-day with open mind. Each man in the Senate is ready, if it shall be pointed out that a single power is needed in order to remove a single indicated obstacle, to grant that power freely and generously.

But the proponents of this bill say to those who inquire the reason for the law: "We will give you no reason, except there may come a time when some additional power will be needed, and although we do not know and we can not imagine what it may be, we yet demand that you shall give a general grant of power that sweeps aside all the safeguards that you have attached to all the statutes that may have been passed in the last hundred years of time."

Mr. President, let me in a final word challenge attention to the remarkable character of this legislation. The great Department of State was created over a hundred years ago—the Department of War and, if I forget not, the Department of the Navy and the Department of Justice at substantially the same time. Since then there have been added certain departments and Cabinet positions of perhaps an inferior character. Since the creation of the great departments the United States has passed through the War of 1812, and the President then did not find it necessary to ask for the extraordinary powers proposed to be conferred by this bill. Again, we passed through the War with Mexico and there was no trouble in executing the laws of the country; no remarkable grants of powers such as are proposed in this bill were requested. Again, our country passed through the awful throes of the Civil War. Every resource of the Government was called into requisition and every imaginable incentive to request power was present, because there was rebellion in our own country, and the advocates and friends of that rebellion were to be found in every hamlet of every State of the Union; still these extraordinary powers were not requested.

The President did not complain that he did not have sufficient power to execute the laws or to defend the land. Still, again, in the Spanish War no request such as we are now presented with was put forward. It is a singular thing, therefore, that now we should be asked to grant a blanket power which Senators insist will never be exercised except in regard to trifling matters, and when we ask them to tell us what the trifling matters are they fail to give us any light.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a very recent utterance of the President. It is his statement given on January 22 in which he had something to say with reference to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the chairman of the Military Committee, and with reference to the action of Congress in a certain investigation. Let me read a little of the language, because it bears upon the bill now before us:

As a matter of fact—

Says the President—

the War Department has performed a task of unparalleled magnitude and difficulty with extraordinary promptness and efficiency.

There have been delays and disappointments and partial miscarriages of plans, all of which have been drawn into the foreground and exaggerated by the investigations which have been in progress since the Congress assembled—investigations which drew indispensable officials of the department constantly away from their work and officers from their commands and contributed a great deal to such delay and confusion as has inevitably arisen. But by comparison with what has been accomplished, these things, much as they are to be regretted, were insignificant, and no mistake has been made which has been repeated.

Thus the President assures the country and assures us that a means has been found for the rectification of every mistake that has been made; so that, according to this statement, the power of rectification, the curative powers necessary already exist, and have already been employed. This is true to such an extent that no mistake that has been made in the past has been repeated; and we may safely assume will not be repeated.

Furthermore, the President states:

Nothing helpful or likely to speed or facilitate the war tasks of the Government has come out of such criticism and investigation—I have not been consulted about them and have learned of them only at second hand—but their proposal came after effective measures of reorganization had been thoughtfully and maturely perfected.

Thus, again, the President has certified to us that effective measures of reorganization had been thoughtfully prepared before even the investigation had begun in Congress. He adds this—and inasmuch as these measures have been the result of experience, they are much more likely than others to be effective—

And this is the point I want to state in fairness to the President—

if the Congress will but remove a few statutory obstacles of rigid departmental organization which stand in their way.

That is what the President stated was necessary, and if those few rigid departmental obstacles are pointed out to the Senate there is not a man here who will refuse to wipe out every one of the obstacles once he is fairly convinced that in reason it will contribute to carrying on this war.

With that sort of declaration from the Chief Executive himself, made as recently as the 22d day of last January, what justification is there for the pretense that those who stand ready to grant those powers but beg for some kind of a bill of particulars, for some sort of specifications, are ungenerous to the Executive or are unwilling to do their part in carrying on this great conflict?

That these particular powers were small, almost inconsequential, is shown in the concluding paragraph of the President's letter, which reads:

To add, as Senator CHAMBERLAIN did, that there is inefficiency in every department and bureau of the Government is to show such ignorance of actual conditions as to make it impossible to attach any importance to his statement.

Mr. President, I do not like to read that language again into the RECORD, but the Senator from Oregon put it in himself and boldly confronted it, and the country has had a chance to pass its judgment on it In so far as it passes any stricture upon the Senator from Oregon, I want respectfully to dissent; but in so far as it states that the inefficiency in the departments is not vital, I concur. I did that in a public speech.

Mr. President, those inefficiencies that existed, however, and of which the Senator from Oregon complained, were not inefficiencies that were inherent in the laws; they were inefficiencies which grew out of the personnel. In every instance the inefficiency was of that sort.

Mr. President, I simply have this to say in apology to the Senate. I rose to talk about five minutes, merely intending to state this case as to what had occurred in the committee, and then to take my seat, intending later to have something to say about the bill. I was interrupted and led into a general debate, and I have said, so far as I am concerned, what I desire to say about the bill in general. I conclude with this remark—that this issue can not be made between those who want to restrict the President and cripple him in the conduct of this war, upon the one side—for there are none such in this body—and upon loyalists and patriots who want to strengthen his hands upon the other, for all in the Senate belong to that class. The issue is between a general grant of power, without any showing as to any necessity whatever for such grant of power, and the other alternative of having presented to the Senate a statement of those powers which are deemed necessary, with an indication as to the laws that now stand in the way of their exercise and action by the Senate upon such specifications when made with a view to granting every power that is necessary.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 4, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, to whom our minds and hearts are known, cleanse us, we beseech Thee, from selfishness, which is the root of all evil, illustrated by the war which has been thrust upon the world by covetousness, greed, hate, and revenge; that we may be wise, broad, generous, noble in all our intercourse with our fellow men; that the trend of our life may be ever toward the ideals, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. WEBB rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. WEBB. To ask unanimous consent to withdraw the conference report on House bill 2316, to promote export trade, and for other purposes, for the purpose of correcting a clerical error. We left out something.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw the conference report on the bill H. R. 2316 for the purpose of correcting a clerical error. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, presented for printing under the rule the conference report (No. 458) and statement on the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes," in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

CONDEMNATION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I present a privileged report (No. 462).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 278.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3994; that there shall be not exceeding one-half hour's general debate, to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing said resolution, at the end of which time the resolution shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and at the conclusion of such reading the committee shall rise and report the resolution to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the resolution and amendments to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] if we can agree upon time on the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have requests for 22 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will try to take care of you. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when the roll is called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 323, nays 3, not voting 105, as follows:

YEAS—323.

Alexander	Eagle	Kitchin	Sanders, La.
Almon	Edmonds	Knutson	Saunders, Va.
Anderson	Elliott	Kraus	Schall
Anthony	Ellsworth	Kreider	Scott, Iowa
Ashbrook	Elston	La Follette	Scott, Mich.
Aswell	Emerson	Lazaro	Sears
Austin	Esch	Lea, Cal.	Sells
Ayres	Evans	Lee, Ga.	Shackleford
Bacharach	Fairchild, G. W.	Lesher	Sherley
Baer	Fairfield	Lever	Sherwood
Barkley	Ferris	Linthicum	Shouse
Barnhart	Fields	Littlepage	Siegel
Beakes	Fisher	Lobeck	Sims
Bell	Flood	London	Sinnott
Beshlin	Focht	Longworth	Sisson
Black	Fordney	Lundeen	Slayden
Bland	Foss	Lunn	Sloan
Blanton	Foster	McArthur	Small
Booher	Francis	McCormick	Smith, Idaho
Brand	Frear	McFadden	Smith, Mich.
Britten	French	McKenzie	Snell
Brodbeck	Fuller, Mass.	McKeown	Snook
Browne	Gard	McLaughlin, Mich.	Snyder
Browning	Garner	McLaughlin, Pa.	Stafford
Buchanan	Garrett, Tenn.	Madden	Steagall
Burnett	Garrett, Tex.	Magee	Stedman
Burroughs	Gillett	Maher	Steenerson
Butler	Glynn	Mansfield	Stephens, Miss.
Byrnes, S. C.	Godwin, N. C.	Martin	Stephens, Nebr.
Byrns, Tenn.	Goodall	Mason	Sterling, Ill.
Caldwell	Goodwin, Ark.	Mays	Sterling, Pa.
Campbell, Kans.	Graham, Ill.	Merritt	Stiness
Candler, Miss.	Gray, Ala.	Miller, Minn.	Strong
Cannon	Greene, Mass.	Miller, Wash.	Sumners
Cantrill	Greene, Vt.	Mondell	Sweet
Caraway	Gregg	Montague	Swift
Carlin	Griest	Moore, Pa.	Switzer
Carter, Mass.	Hadley	Moores, Ind.	Tague
Carter, Okla.	Hamilton, Mich.	Morgan	Taylor, Ark.
Cary	Hamlin	Mott	Temple
Chandler, N. Y.	Hardy	Mudd	Templeton
Chandler, Okla.	Harrison, Va.	Neely	Thompson
Clark, Fla.	Hastings	Nelson	Tillman
Clark, Pa.	Haugen	Nicholls, S. C.	Timberlake
Claypool	Hawley	Nichols, Mich.	Towner
Cleary	Hayden	Nolan	Treadway
Collier	Hayes	Oldfield	Van Dyke
Connelly, Kans.	Heaton	Oliver, Ala.	Venable
Cooper, Ohio	Helm	Olney	Vinson
Cooper, W. Va.	Hensley	Osborne	Volstead
Cooper, Wis.	Hersey	O'Shaunessy	Waldow
Copley	Hicks	Overmyer	Walker
Cox	Hilliard	Overstreet	Walton
Crago	Holland	Padgett	Ward
Cramton	Houston	Paige	Wason
Crisp	Howard	Park	Watkins
Currie, Mich.	Huddleston	Parker, N. J.	Watson, Pa.
Dale, N. Y.	Hull, Iowa	Peters	Watson, Va.
Dale, Vt.	Hull, Tenn.	Phelan	Webb
Dallinger	Humphreys	Platt	Welling
Darrow	Husted	Polk	Welty
Davidson	Hutchinson	Pou	Whaley
Davis	Igoe	Price	Wheeler
Delaney	Jacoway	Purnell	White, Me.
Dempsey	James	Quin	White, Ohio
Denison	Johnson, Ky.	Raker	Williams
Dent	Johnson, Wash.	Ramsey	Wilson, Ill.
Denton	Jones, Tex.	Ramseyer	Wilson, La.
Dickinson	Juul	Randall	Wilson, Tex.
Dies	Kahn	Rankin	Wingo
Dill	Kearns	Rayburn	Wise
Dillon	Keating	Reavis	Wood, Ind.
Dixon	Kehoe	Robbins	Woods, Iowa
Dominick	Kelley, Mich.	Robinson	Woodyard
Donovan	Kelly, Pa.	Rodenberg	Wright
Doolittle	Kennedy, Iowa	Romjue	Young, N. Dak.
Doremus	Kennedy, R. I.	Rouse	Young, Tex.
Doughton	Kettner	Rowe	Zihlman
Dowell	Kiess, Pa.	Rowland
Drane	Kincheloe	Rucker
Dupré	King	Russell
Dyer	Kinkaid	Sanders, Ind.

NAYS—3.

Gould	Mapes	Walsh

NOT VOTING—105.

Bankhead	Dooling	Good	Johnson, S. Dak.
Blackmon	Drukker	Gordon	Jones, Va.
Borland	Dunn	Graham, Pa.	Key, Ohio
Bowers	Eagan	Gray, N. J.	LaGuardia
Brumbaugh	Estopinal	Green, Iowa	Langley
Campbell, Pa.	Fairchild, B. L.	Griffin	Larsen
Carew	Farr	Hamill	Lehlbach
Church	Fess	Hamilton, N. Y.	Lenroot
Classon	Flynn	Harrison, Miss.	Little
Coady	Freeman	Haskell	Lonergan
Connally, Tex.	Fuller, Ill.	Heflin	Lufkin
Costello	Gallagher	Heintz	McAndrews
Crosser	Gallivan	Helvering	McClintic
Curry, Cal.	Gandy	Hollingsworth	McCulloch
Decker	Garland	Hood	McKinley
Dewalt	Glass	Ireland	McLemore
Mann	Ragsdale	Sanford	Talbott
Meeker	Rainey	Scott, Pa.	Taylor, Colo.
Moon	Reed	Scully	Thomas
Morin	Riordan	Shallenberger	Tilson
Norton	Roberts	Slemp	Tinkham
Oliver, N. Y.	Rogers	Smith, C. B.	Vare
Parker, N. Y.	Rose	Smith, T. F.	Vestal
Porter	Rubey	Steele	Voigt
Powers	Sabath	Stevenson	Weaver
Pratt	Sanders, N. Y.	Sullivan	Winslow

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. LONERGAN with Mr. GARLAND.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. PARKER of New York.

Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. CURRY of California.

Mr. BLACKMON with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. BORLAND with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. GRIFFIN with Mr. SANFORD.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. CAREW with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. MCCLINTIC with Mr. IRELAND.

Mr. GORDON with Mr. MEEKER.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. GANDY with Mr. LEHLBACH.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania with Mr. FARR.

Mr. CHURCH with Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. COADY with Mr. FESS.

Mr. FLYNN with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. CROSSER with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. DEWALT with Mr. HASKELL.

Mr. EAGAN with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. FULLER of Illinois.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEFLIN with Mr. LUFKIN.

Mr. HELVERING with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. HOOD with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. PRATT.

Mr. KEY of Ohio with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. LARSEN with Mr. REED.

Mr. MCLEMORE with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

Mr. MOON with Mr. TILSON.

Mr. OLIVER of New York with Mr. ROBERTS.

Mr. RAGSDALE with Mr. TINKHAM.

Mr. RAINEY with Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. RUBEY with Mr. VARE.

Mr. SABATH with Mr. VESTAL.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. HEINTZ.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. VOIGT.

Mr. WEAVER with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. ROSE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. LAGUARDIA.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. CLASSON.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a pair with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. TALBOTT, but if he were present, he would vote "yea" on this vote, and so I allow my affirmative vote to stand.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to bring before the House for consideration Senate bill 3994, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of land for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes.

The necessity for the passage of this bill grows out of the fact, as the Committee on Rules understand, that there are certain minors who own property that is necessary for the construction of this plant. The title to that land can not be acquired in any other way except by condemnation proceedings. The Committee on Rules were also given to understand that there are other lands the price of which is being put up so high by the owners of the property that the Government can not agree to purchase at that price. Therefore, in order to expedite the work, the War Department holding that it has not now the authority under existing law to make the condemnation, the passage of this bill (S. 3994) seems to be essential. Its consideration was objected to once or twice on the floor of the House, and so an appeal was made to the Committee on Rules, who have reported this rule in response to that appeal. That is the purpose of it.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, with the five minutes yielded to me by the gentleman from Tennessee I have my own 20 minutes, or 25 minutes in all, and I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the House for a few moments in explaining the character of some of the work that the War Department is trying to do at the present time in connection with the establishment of the nitrate industry in this country. I obtained this information from the War Department a few days ago. It was taken from charts and photographs made as late as March 11. I understand from the War Department that there have been some labor troubles since these photographs were taken, so there is probably no material change in the situation since the 11th or 12th of March.

The War Department has decided to build three nitrate plants. Plant No. 1 is to be located at Sheffield, Ala., in the northeastern part of the State, near the Tennessee River, a short distance below Muscle Shoals. This is a village of about 3,500 inhabitants. The capacity of plant No. 1 will be about 11,000 tons of nitrate annually, and the cost of this plant will be from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000. The money for this first plant, No. 1, is to be taken out of the appropriation made by this House some time ago for the building of a nitrate plant.

Mr. QUIN. Where is that plant to be located?

Mr. SNELL. At Sheffield, Ala.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but I am sure he is in error. The money for that nitrate plant is taken out of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill under the provision for armament and fortifications.

Mr. SNELL. I was informed in the War Department that plant No. 1 was to be built out of the original appropriation that was made by this House for that purpose and that plants 2 and 3 were to be built out of the appropriations for the Ordnance Department. That is the information I was given at the War Department and as I understand it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is an error. At most only a very small part of the money will come from that source.

Mr. SNELL. This plant No. 1 is to make nitrate by the synthetic process, a process that is being developed by the General Chemical Co., and they had arranged to build an experimental plant. It is expected by the department that one unit of plant No. 1 will be completed some time during the present summer, for they have taken over the equipment ordered by the General Chemical Co., and that will facilitate completion of the first unit of the plant, or one-fourth of the whole plant, and they expect now to test out the first unit of the plant in July or August; but on account of the fact that all of these gases are confined under a pressure of 1,500 pounds to the square inch it is a very difficult thing to get one of these plants working satisfactorily, even after it is first tested out. And it may be a matter of several months after this first testing before they will be able to operate the plant so as to manufacture nitrates in commercial quantities. But the War Department hopes, if they are able to test the first unit of the first plant some time during the months of July and August and they do not meet any serious difficulties, that by the first of the year 1919 they will be able to put some nitrate on the market in a commercial way. They are building in connection with plant No. 1 a steam power plant of about 10,000 horsepower capacity to furnish power for the operation of this plant.

Plant No. 2 is to be located on the lower dam of the Muscle Shoals project. This plant has a capacity of 110,000 tons annually and is expected to cost between thirty-five million and forty-five million dollars. This plant will manufacture nitrates by the cyanamide process, a process that is being used in Niagara Falls at the present time, and the more complicated and expensive process of the two. It will take from seventy-five to a hundred thousand horsepower to run this plant at its full capacity. This plant is just being started at the present time, and the chart shows that certain parts are completed to an extent of about 5 to 10 per cent.

They are building in connection with this an eighty-thousand horsepower steam-power plant. They are also building a high-power transmission line 85 miles long from the Black Boyer station of the Alabama Power Co. on the Coosa River. The Government has a contract with this power company to pay 4½ mills per kilowatt hour, which is practically $30 per horsepower, and the Government furnishes the transmission line and the transformers in connection therewith.

The Government is also making arrangements to establish a thousand kilowatt generator at the Alabama Power Plant, and when they have put the new generator in the power plant there will be a new arrangement made as to the price of power.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman state to the House what is the average price, take the country by and large, for horsepower from water-power development in large quantities, similar to one in question?

Mr. SNELL. In large quantities I should say that this was a good big price, considering the fact that the Government furnishes the transmission line and the transformers. I know it is being sold in my section of the country in large quantities at a less price than that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. About one-half, is it not?

Mr. SNELL. It has been so shown in hearings connected with Niagara Falls proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will pardon me and let me make my statement first I will yield if I have time. It is necessary to build a steam-power plant, because the Muscle Shoals proposition will not be completed for from five to seven years. The cost has not been entirely estimated.

I also took up the question with the department in regard to the expense of establishing a steam-power plant when we were figuring on the building of plants to be furnished hydroelectric power. They said that the loss would not be total because they would need steam-power plants even after the water power was developed, that from two to four months in the year they would have low water, and it would be absolutely necessary to have steam auxiliary power plants there.

Therefore, as I look at the situation, instead of the much-boasted hydroelectric plants that have received so much discussion on this floor we will have a hydroelectric power plant with steam auxiliary power plants furnishing power during the period of low water each year.

Plant No. 3 will have a capacity of 110,000 tons and will cost thirty-five to forty-five million dollars, and will be practically a duplicate of plant No. 2. It will take a hundred thousand horsepower to operate the plant. I was told at the War Department that the location of this plant had not been definitely decided upon. But as I came up this morning it came to me by way of rumor that it had been located at King's Road, in Tennessee, but I do not know whether that is official or not.

But in the event that this location has not been definitely decided upon I would like to take this opportunity to call the attention of the House, the Secretary of War, and the honorable President to a suitable location for this plant, on the St. Lawrence River in St. Lawrence County, New York State. Here is one of the best undeveloped water powers in the United States. It is known as the Long Sault power. It presents no great engineering difficulties and needs only the power and money of the United States Government to make it one of the great water-power developments of the world. And if the contention of this House is true, that the Government owns, or at least controls, the water power on boundary streams of the United States, then there is the St. Lawrence River in St. Lawrence County, in my district, a place where they can develop 750,000 horsepower, and the best part of it, and the part that appeals to every man, is that you can have the horsepower developed here every hour and every day for 365 days in the year. You will not need any steam auxiliary plant to run it during the low-water period of each year, as we are now providing for the plants we are building in Alabama.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to call your attention to the fact that from a common-sense, business standpoint it is not good judgment to place all three of these nitrate plants in the same local community and as near together as now contemplated.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman a question in connection with the location?

Mr. SNELL. I will yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. How far is it from this place, where rumor has it that this third plant is located, to Muscle Shoals?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know; but it is in this same vicinity.

Mr. TREADWAY. Practically in the same group?

Mr. SNELL. That is as I understand it. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word more about these locations. I think it would be much better from a purely economic and business standpoint to have the various plants for manufacture of nitrates distributed about the country, the same as the United States arsenals are at the present time. Then, by chance, there should be any serious calamity from the elements or otherwise, any labor difficulties or anything else happen to interfere with the operation of these plants, it would not be so apt to happen to all the plants at the same time if they were located in widely separated communities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Could the gentleman from Kansas yield me a few minutes more time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Can the gentleman from Tennessee give me some more time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas two minutes of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will yield three minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. By distributing these plants throughout the country we would meet the needs of the whole country much better in war time and in peace time that is to come after than to have them placed in one small locality in the South. Besides by placing one of these large plants in the North it would be much nearer to the large powder manufacturing centers, would be a better point for distribution, and a great saving in freight charges over what it would be from the distant point in Alabama; also might help to relieve railroad congestion in times of great emergency, and furthermore there is not a single argument that can be presented by anyone why they should all be located in the same small section of the United States. While we expect to use this nitrate for war purposes at present, when the war is over and in time of peace it is expected we shall use this nitrate for agricultural purposes, then certainly it would be a great saving to farmers in the way of freight to have one of the plants located in the northern part of the country. Above all, and the best reason why the location I am advocating should be chosen, is the fact that the St. Lawrence River will furnish all of the power you want every day in the year, and you will not have to have any steam auxiliary plant in connection with it, and you can get this power much cheaper than the power now contemplated.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. According to the gentleman's statement, the War Department has taken on an expenditure here of about eighty to ninety million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. About $100,000,000 or more.

Mr. McFADDEN. And Congress has appropriated only $20,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; but what Congress has appropriated makes little difference nowadays. Two of the largest plants, as I understand it, are to come out of the ordnance fund.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the condition that confronts us now, and it does not make any difference what has happened before this; we have located these plants, and the Government to-day does not own one foot of land where we are building them. We have options on part of the land needed, and the balance we are simply occupying by forcible possession, and all we can do now is to make the best bargain we can with the owner of the balance of lands needed in the driver's seat. It would seem to me that it would have been just common sense and plain business sagacity on the part of the War Department if before they had decided upon this location they had, at least, had options on all of the land they needed. I think the Government was in position to drive a pretty good bargain. Nearly any community in the country would be very much pleased to have the Government of the United States come in and expend $100,000,000, and I think if this matter had been properly attended to these titles could have been secured in advance, and it would not be necessary to come to Congress at this time to ask for a special law insisting upon and compelling these people in this favored section of the country to take the money of the United States.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. What is the estimated date of completion of plant No. 2, if any estimate has been made?

Mr. SNELL. They inform me they have very reliable contractors, and they hope that it might be completed so as to put it into operation the first part of the year 1919, but from what I know of building operations I very much doubt that.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman refers now to plant No. 2?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; plant No. 2.

This bill calls for additional powers for condemning property. Judge Carmichael has already been appointed to look after these titles, and either has or is about to begin condemnation proceedings. The question of titles seems to be holding up proceedings as much as anything. Also, the War Department fears that some one may get out an injunction, and in that way hold up the work. Thus the whole situation as regard titles and land is in a tangled and unsatisfactory condition, and we must do something here to straighten out and clear up the situation.

And my opinion is, it does not make any difference whether you favored the nitrate proposition or not, whether you favor this location or not, you must be for this rule and the legislation it makes in order to consider, because it is absolutely necessary to protect the large investment already made by the Government in this locality. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I favor this rule and I favor the passage of the bill which it involves, but I desire here and now to express my regret that conditions should have arisen which make its passage either desirable or necessary, and particularly to express my regret at the choice by this Government of the locality where these conditions have arisen. What is the locality and what are the conditions involved in this proposition? The locality is Muscle Shoals, a name which gentlemen have heard iterated and reiterated in this House for the last 10 years or so. I myself have come to hate the words "Muscle Shoals" almost as much as I hate the word "camouflage," though I am bound to confess there is in certain phases of this proposition a distinct relationship between the two terms. The conditions are that the more or less patriotic landowners in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals are trying to hold up the Government. Not satisfied with the fact that something over $125,000,000 is proposed to be expended in that locality, they are engaged now in profiteering, and if there is any meaner kind of profiteering than holding up this Government in the purchase of land around military posts I have yet to find it.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not now. I can not yield for the present. These Muscle Shoalsites seem to be assuming the leadership in that industry. I have not time to go into the details of this matter, but I expect at the earliest moment, when I can get the floor for a reasonable time, to acquaint the House with all the details and the various ramifications of the proposition, and I think I can at least promise that some of the things that I shall say will be news to Members of this House.

There are now in actual course of construction at Muscle Shoals three plants—the steam plant referred to by my friend from New York [Mr. SNELL], the synthetic ammonia plant, and a cyanamide plant, the total cost of which will be about $50,000,000. In adidtion, it is contemplated, as the gentleman further said, to build another cyanamide plant of the same type and under the same auspices, of which I shall speak later, to cost something over $40,000,000. Whether this plant is to go to Muscle Shoals or not I do not know, but I think it is reasonable to suppose that it will because the other plant went there in spite of the original recommendation of the department. I certainly hope that it will not. I hope that the gentleman's dream in respect to its going to the St. Lawrence may come true.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not now, if the gentleman will pardon me. The cyanamide plant now being built at Muscle Shoals, while it is being financed by Government money, is being built under the direction of and will be operated by private individuals under a contract by which they are to receive for the supervision of its construction $1,000,000, and for operating it they are to receive while the war is on about one million and a quarter dollars a year. The same terms, I understand, to the other cyanamide plant which has been provided for. Not a bad little contract, gentlemen of the House, when you consider that these men do not have to put up a cent of money and take absolutely no risk whatever, and that they will be in a position to buy the plant from the Government at a scrap price—originally they wanted it free—as soon as the war is over.

There is also in process of construction at Muscle Shoals under the recent order of the President dam and power house No. 2 on the original Muscle Shoals proposition and for that $13,200,000, all that is left of the original $20,000,000 appropriation for nitrate purposes, is being taken. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is wrong in saying that the synthetic ammonia plant is being built from this appropriation, because there is only $20,000,000, and nearly $7,000,000 have been already spent for the various other nitrate plants recommended by the experts, and there is only $13,200,000 left.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. SNELL. The information I received was from the War Department and I supposed that it was correct.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was evidently incorrect, because this Muscle Shoals Dam is being built out of that appropriation, and that fund is exhausted. But it is admitted that this $13,200,000 is not nearly enough to complete the contracts on this one dam and power house, No. 2, and that the cost will run well toward $20,000,000. Now, the chief significance of this, gentlemen, is that it is the entering wedge for the whole Muscle Shoals proposition, involving two more dams at a total cost probably nearer $50,000,000 than the original $20,000,000, a proposition which on its merits has been turned down repeatedly by Congress.

If the projectors of this scheme shall succeed in getting all this appropriation for the dams and for both cyanamide plants, there will be spent in Muscle Shoals and its vicinity more than $125,000,000. Small wonder that my friend from Alabama, in whose district this vast amount is to be spent, cherishes the pen which report says was handed him by the President after signing this order. To make nitrate by the cyanamide process a fairly high power, generally hydroelectric, is necessary. Now, when this plant has been put at Muscle Shoals, where there is now no power, it becomes pertinent to inquire where that power is to come from. It becomes pertinent also to inquire how soon power to be furnished by dam and power house No. 2 can be expected. I am informed from the War Department that the earliest possible date which this dam can be completed is three years from now, when, in all human probability, this war will be over. Where are they getting the power, then? It is proposed to get it from a steam plant, about half of it—a steam plant which might as well be erected in any other part of the country as at Muscle Shoals—and the rest of the power, as explained by the gentleman from New York, is to come from the Black Warrior River, 90 miles away, and carted, so to speak, across the country to Muscle Shoals. If you were to ask me why, as a war measure proposed in time of war to produce war materials, we put up a plant at a place where not an ounce of water power can be evolved for over three years, I throw up my hands and frankly admit I can not answer the question, and no human being can.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the Black Warrior plant a private plant?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Surely it is a private plant, and the Government is to pay an outrageous price, I understand, for piping to carry this water 90 miles across country.

Mr. FREAR. And what will be the value of this plant after we put $125,000,000 in it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. These men who have this contract wanted to have a provision in it that they would get the plant free after the war is over. So far as the needs of the Government are concerned, after the war is over these plants will be nothing but junk. The provision now in the contract is that these individuals shall have first call and that the Government can not sell to anyone else until after considering their bid for a reasonable time, which might be two or three years more. Gentlemen have inquired whence comes the money for these enormous expenditures. I am informed by the War Department that it comes from a provision in the urgent deficiency act of 1917 for armament of fortifications. I will read the provision:

> For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for cannon, field and siege cannon, including necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenal, $367,000,000.

It takes a rather violent stretch of imagination to construe that provision as giving the power to build an ammonia-nitrate plant, but assuming that they have the right to so use that appropriation, the fact is that it was never remotely hinted or suggested to the Committee on Appropriations that this provision was ever to be used for such purpose. It is just another illustration of the absolute contempt with which the acts and functions of the Congress are being construed in some departments of this Government. Now, I am not going to oppose this measure. I favor it. I realize, and we all must realize, that the need for nitrate in this country is most pressing. We were able a few months ago to import our necessary nitrates from Chile, practically all of them, about 175,000 tons a month, but that importation has fallen off about one-half, due to our lamentable lack of shipping facilities.

We must in some way or other immediately fortify our nitrate supply, and this is the only way we can see how to do it, though the cyanide process is an expensive and a very disagreeable sort of one.

Mr. MADDEN. We are postponing the day three years?

Mr. LONGWORTH. So far as Muscle Shoals is concerned, it can not contribute an ounce of power for this necessary production. And I am for this bill, because, while, it is not necessary, by the way, as the War Department tells me, they are going ahead anyhow, it will be a little more convenient if they receive this authorization. I shall all the more cheerfully support this bill, because it may serve in some degree to check the rapacity of these profiteers at Muscle Shoals. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] desire to yield the two minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has two minutes remaining. Does the gentleman desire to use the two minutes?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Kansas, I suppose, does not desire to use the two minutes, and I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] is recognized for nine minutes.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I did not expect to say anything upon this subject and would not if I did not consider it necessary to correct some misinformation which has been given to the House by my genial friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. He says he is in favor of the bill amending the condemnation law; that he is in favor of the rule. The chairman of the committee has attempted four or five times to call this bill up and was forced to go to the Committee on Rules, and we have all been unable to understand up to this hour why that was necessary, but we all realize now it was for the purpose of giving our friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] another opportunity to talk about Muscle Shoals. I thought that he and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] were satisfied to take up the time of the House when the river and harbor bill was under consideration to talk about Muscle Shoals. He says he hates the name "Muscle Shoals." I am unable to understand the cause of this unless it is his ignorance of the advantages and possibilities of this great water-power site. It is certainly not because it is in the South.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. We have, as I think the gentleman will remember, defeated it on the floor in connection with the river and harbor bill and the military bill whenever we had an opportunity.

Mr. ALMON. Muscle Shoals has never been before the House in any military bill.

We have desired for many years to open up that stretch of the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals for navigation. Unable to secure a sufficient amount of Government appropriation the engineers for rivers and harbors in 1914 recommended a plan of development in cooperation with a water-power company, as set forth in House document No. 20, Sixty-third Congress, second session. That is the plan the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] refers to. I have not the time nor is it necessary to discuss that at this time.

Now, what about this? My friend from Ohio says that citizens at Muscle Shoals are undertaking to hold up the Government; that the Government ought to have gone and gotten option on these lands. I want to say, for his information and for the information of the House, that before these nitrate plants were located at Sheffield and at Muscle Shoals nearly all of the lands were secured by donations and at fair and reasonable values. I was at home in November, and I helped to conduct a campaign, and we were told that these plants would not be located there if the lands could not be secured at fair and reasonable prices. All the lands which will be overflowed by the erection of Dam No. 2, except one tract of about 150 acres, were either donated or optioned at prices reasonable and satisfactory to the representatives of the Government. The dam sites, worth many thousands of dollars, were donated to the Government. Nearly all of the lands needed for nitrate plant No. 1 not donated were optioned and conveyed to the Government at a fair and satisfactory price. One tract of more than 100 acres of very valuable and high-priced land was donated to the Government. Some of the land necessary for the Government to acquire in connection with the building of plant No. 2 has been either donated or offered at prices satisfactory to the Government, but I am advised by the Government officials that they have not been able to purchase other lands needed and necessary for this plant.

One of the purposes of this bill is to authorize the Government to condemn it in accordance with the condemnation laws of the State in which the land is situated and pay the owners in accordance with the awards in the court condemnation proceedings. If any of the owners are minors, this would be necessary.

Mr. SWITZER. Can the gentleman inform the House approximately the value of the land that will have to be condemned?

Mr. ALMON. Most of the lands in that locality have been optioned to the Government at $50 to $75 an acre and with this development will, of course, be worth a great deal more. I deny most positively and emphatically the charge of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that the people who own land at Muscle Shoals and vicinity, whom I have the honor to represent, are holding up the Government. They are as good, loyal, and patriotic people as there are anywhere—in Ohio or elsewhere.

The fact that a few of the landowners want more for their land than the representatives of the Government think it is worth does not justify the charge that even they want to hold up the Government.

Mr. SWITZER. How many acres will have to be condemned?

Mr. ALMON. I do not know; probably three or four hundred, or more. I heard that some of the land had been acquired within the last few days, so I am unable to tell how many acres are desired by the Government that have not been offered at prices satisfactory to the Government.

The most that has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is in criticism of the President in the location of these nitrate plants. It is my recollection that the legislature of his own State—Ohio—indorsed the Muscle Shoals location. The Congress of the United States two years ago authorized the appropriation of $20,000,000 for the construction of one or more nitrate plants.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I understood a great deal more land than that was to be condemned in connection with plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals. It runs into thousands of acres.

Mr. ALMON. That is a mistake.

Mr. SNELL. It runs into thousands of acres.

Mr. ALMON. That is not correct. You have been misinformed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What does this land commonly sell for down there?

Mr. ALMON. Forty to seventy-five dollars per acre. Some of it was worth that much for agricultural purposes before the plant was located there.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it used for agricultural purposes now?

Mr. ALMON. Some of the land is in cultivation.

Mr. TREADWAY. Good agricultural land?

Mr. ALMON. Yes; some of it is good agricultural land. After almost two years of investigation the President located these nitrate plants, one at Sheffield, Ala., on the Tennessee River, and one a few miles up the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, where there is the greatest inland water-power site in the United States. There is capacity for more water-power development there than has been developed at Niagara Falls, on both the Canadian and American sides.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will that be available during this war?

Mr. ALMON. That will depend on how long the war will last, but these plants will be completed and put in operation during this year—with steam power. This is all that could have been done at any other place.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the war lasts 10 years it will?

Mr. ALMON. Oh, no. The water-power dam will be finished in about three years.

Mr. SNELL. Is that great amount of water power available every day in the year?

Mr. ALMON. Not that much at low-water stages, but it can be connected up with other water-power sites near by, so that a greater horsepower can be produced there every day in the year than has been developed at Niagara Falls.

Mr. SNELL. There is one in my district——

Mr. ALMON. I must decline to yield further, for want of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ALMON. The President was justified in locating these nitrate plants as he did. In the first place, Muscle Shoals is the greatest inland water-power site in this country. It is within the safety zone established by the War College. It has in close proximity all the raw material needed for the manufacture of nitrates. It has an inexhaustible quantity of phosphate rock, limestone, and coke all in close proximity. It has the very best transportation system facilities, both water and rail. From the agricultural standpoint is well and centrally located.

The act of Congress authorizing the President to locate and build these nitrate plants expressly provides that it shall be done to produce nitrates and other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. No; I can not, as I only have about one more minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ALMON. With the units now being installed at these two plants, it is expected that about 132,000 tons, or 264,000,000 pounds, of ammonia nitrate will be produced.

Mr. KREIDER. In what length of time?

Mr. ALMON. Annually. The gentleman from Ohio has had a great deal to say about the Government being forced to make a temporary arrangement for power over transmission lines from another plant while the dam is being built, but has failed to tell of any other place where a better arrangement could have been made. Col. Hugh L. Cooper, the man who built the Keokuk Dam, has been called from France to superintend the construction of that dam, and it will be built as soon as possible. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. VESTAL, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. PURNELL), was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has something about a conference report that he wants to submit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman was willing to defer that until this matter was concluded.

CONDEMNATION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3994, with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3994) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of land for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes, with Mr. RAYBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3994, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3994) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of land for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, this is an emergency measure that is pending before this House. It is for the primary purpose of making nitrate, to provide powder for the prosecution of the war.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a moment?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. DENT. I believe the rule does not provide who shall control the time. I ask unanimous consent, as the time for general debate is limited to 30 minutes, that half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that half of the time be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Secondarily, it is for the purpose of providing nitrates for commercial fertilizers, for agricultural purposes, after the war supplies have been furnished and after the end of this war.

The Committee on Military Affairs had a hard struggle to get the bill for the nitrate plants in shape for presentation to Congress and to get it passed. It finally became a law, and a long time elapsed before the sites were selected; and now, after the sites have been selected and after the work is in progress at Muscle Shoals and in that vicinity, the selection having been made by the administration, by the War Department, and by the commissioners, in order to stop that work now some gentlemen who opposed this measure from the beginning have the temerity to rise upon this floor and object to this measure, which is for the purpose of condemning such portions of the land, as minors are interested in some of the lands, and others who hold their property at too high a value.

Can any man reasonably object to this measure except for the express purpose of defeating this Government in its plans to manufacture powder in this contest now? No man can reasonably object to this proposition unless it be for the sole purpose of preventing the United States Government from having these powder plants in course of construction for the purpose of making powder to protect this Nation against a foreign foe. Does it seem reasonable that at this stage of the war the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] should rise up here and say that there is on the St. Lawrence River in his New York district a better site than the Muscle Shoals proposition and the Sheffield proposition and Plant No. 3, and therefore the Muscle Shoals nitrate plant should not be put in operation?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. No; I have not the time.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman is making a misstatement.

Mr. QUIN. Is there any reason for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] to object to this because it is going to cost some money? We all know that all these propositions are costing money. I do not know whether anybody is profiteering and stealing money down there or not. I hope not. My God! I have heard enough about Hog Island and about the airplane program and the shipbuilding program and everything else. You have not brought any concrete proof before the House. The Congress has no say in the making of contracts. I would not be surprised if there were a few men stealing money down at Muscle Shoals. They are doing it all through New England, according to newspaper reports. Does the gentleman from Ohio object to it because there is a rascally interloper down there in Alabama? See the Executive and the War Department about that. Congress can not fire anybody. I do not know that a few landowners in the Tennessee Valley are profiteering, but I think perhaps some of them think their land is worth more than $50 or $75 an acre.

This bill is for a jury of honest men to pass on it and say what that land is worth. That is the way the eminent domain procedure goes forward in this country. The United States is asking this Congress to put that right into effect against profiteers, against the man who wants an extravagant price for his land; and in addition to that proposition there are some minors that we can not reach except through the courts in order to get title to that land. Does the gentleman from Ohio think it would be wise for the Government to proceed to construct these plants without getting the title that is vested in these minors? Certainly no sane Representative would contend that the Government ought to spend all this money without having a good title to the land. Then when you analyze it you must see that his opposition is for the express purpose, as it has been ab initio, from the beginning of this legislation, to prevent the Government entering upon the general plan of making nitrate to provide this Government with powder, and for the further purpose of providing the farmers of this country with fertilizer with which to raise agricultural products to feed the people of the United States, the allies across the sea, our soldiers who are wearing the khaki, and our boys on the battleships who are defending the integrity and the honor of this Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUIN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. KREIDER. In view of the fact that the gentleman has said this plant will be used to manufacture these nitrates for agricultural purposes, is the gentleman informed as to the cost of manufacture and the commercial value?

Mr. QUIN. I have this to say, that the farmers of this country are paying the highest price that has ever been known in history for fertilizer, and the American Government sends down to plants in Chile and secures nitrates, and brings the nitrates to the United States, and is now selling this fertilizer to our farmers at actual cost, and now, as a further benefit to the farmers, the American Congress, through the instrumentality of law, is endeavoring to erect plants for the purpose of making nitrates to sell to the farmers at cost, and the cost of production is bound to be much less than private parties in this country would sell it to the farmer for. Whatever the cost may be, I do know that it will be less than the private monopolies have been charging, and which they will continue to charge the people of this country after this war is over. I want the farmers of this country to have every benefit possible out of this war.

Mr. KREIDER. I am trying to get information, that is all. I thought the gentleman might have it.

Mr. QUIN. This is my time. The gentleman can speak in his own time. I want the farmers of this country to get fertilizer at cost from the Government, and this bill will give it to them after the war is over when the production of nitrates is no longer necessary for war purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield to anybody. The gentleman from New York had his say. He exploited himself before this country. Is it possible that he wants the American people to do without powder plants while the Huns have been driving our lines back in Europe? Is the gentleman from New York willing that this country shall have no powder plant, with the prospect of being cut off from the Chilean plants down in South America? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I wish I had more time.

Mr. KAHN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill authorizes the Government to condemn land needed for military purposes and at nitrate plants which are being built by the Government. The hoggish profiteering of certain Tennessee and Alabama landowners, who refuse to sell to the Government at a reasonable price land which is necessary to the building of the two nitrate plants near Muscle Shoals, Tenn., is the occasion for the passage of this act, and I will support the bill because it will enable the Government to build the plants cheaper. The money to build them has already been appropriated.

It appears from the argument just made by gentlemen discussing this bill that the location of nitrate plant No. 3 has been decided upon by the committee making the recommendation, and that this plant is to be located on the Tennessee River near by the location of the other two plants. For more than three weeks I have been hammering the nitrate division of the Ordnance Department and recommended Vincennes, Ind., as the site for this plant. A delegation from Vincennes has been here for a long while, and they have pointed out to these men that Vincennes has all the necessary facilities and requirements needed, and, in my judgment, there is no place in the United States that can make as good showing as this city has made. This plant, No. 3, is demanded by the War Department, by reason of the immediate necessity for nitrate for war purposes. It, of course, would be built with a view of running it after the war to manufacture nitrate for fertilizing purposes. The Muscle Shoals proposition was originally a peace-time water-power nitrate project. In order to get sufficient water power enormous dams are required. This takes years of time, and plant No. 3 was demanded by the War Department for immediate operation.

Within 50 miles of Vincennes there is unlimited limestone. The Wabash River affords an abundance of water. An inexhaustible supply of coal underlies the ground upon which the plant would be located as well as under the whole territory surrounding it. Gravel, sand, brick, and steel are at hand. The Edwardsport power plant, only a few miles away, is now in a position to furnish enough electric power for the construction of the plant, and by the time it is completed the Indiana Power & Water Co., who own the Edwardsport plant, promised to furnish over 30,000 kilowatts at a much lower figure than the Government has agreed to pay to Tennessee concerns. Coking coal at a low freight rate may be had from a near-by coal field. The railroad facilities can not be beaten.

On account of the present disposition on the part of the Government to class certain industries, such as glass factories and stone quarries, as "nonessential," this portion of Indiana has thousands of unemployed men to-day. The stone quarrying district is industrially paralyzed. Many of these idle men refuse to cross the continent to get work. They would go to Vincennes. Besides, this nitrate plant would use limestone from our limestone district. When we complain about these idle men, they say, "We will ship them to places where they can get work." Most of our idle men have so far failed to indicate a willingness to be conscripted in this manner, because their homes and families are there in Indiana. They have lived there a lifetime; many of their homes are in the building and loan; all their earthly interests are there and it is a big proposition to pull out and leave.

The whole Indiana delegation, both Democrats and Republicans, have tried to get Army contracts and different kinds of war activities for this part of Indiana, but we have failed to land anything for them. We made such a wonderful showing for Vincennes that it did not seem probable that our offer would be rejected. Talk about condemning land. Why, the Vincennes fellows would give you the land. Now, it leaks out that this committee we have been laboring with are about to recommend, or have recommended, that plant No. 3 go down in Tennessee where the other two have gone; where the profiteers are holding up the Government. Is it possible that the good Lord, in His wisdom, only provided one spot in this great Republic suitable to the manufacture of nitrate? I will tell you what is the matter, gentlemen, Vincennes is not far enough south to get the plant; it is far enough north to furnish the money and the men to help whip the Kaiser, and you bet we are going to help regardless of what happens, but we are too far north to get in on the pie cutting. We have been buying liberty bonds at a great rate out there; but if all of our money goes out and none of it comes back I do not know what is going to happen to us financially after a while. Army contracts, cantonments, armor-plate plants, and war activities go south and east, while the great Middle West is left out in the cold. And if any of us fellows happen to give voice to our disappointment and disapproval of everything worth while going south, some fellow immediately says, "You are sectional." I suppose it is not sectional to plunder the Treasury and profiteer the Government for the benefit of one section of the country, but it is only sectional when you protest against it. Why do not some of you Democrats, over on that side of the House, who are interested in the great Northwest and the Mississippi Valley come out of your shells and speak your convictions?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would it require any auxiliary steam plant if this nitrate plant was located in Vincennes?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly it would. This plant No. 3 is a hurry-up affair and they can not wait for the development of water power. Besides, you will find out, gentlemen, that a highly developed steam plant does not require but a small amount of money for its construction, as compared with a water plant, and in the long run, the interest rates and everything considered, the steam plant will be the cheapest. I venture that there is no place in Alabama or Tennessee where a water-power plant can be built that can provide for 100,000 kilowatts that will not require an auxiliary steam plant for dry weather.

Mr. ALMON. Is it not a fact that the Indiana Legislature and the farmers' organizations of that State indorsed Muscle Shoals as the location for a nitrate plant?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; in peace time; but before No. 3 was dreamed of. They are not indorsing the location of three nitrate plants in the same location.

Mr. ALMON. No; but No. 3 has not been located.

Mr. BLAND. According to the latest reports the nitrate board yesterday submitted their report recommending their location down in Tennessee, and I know that the farmers and the legislature of my State did not approve of this, but would favor Vincennes, Ind.

Mr. ALMON. I am making no objection.

Mr. BLAND. With several thousand idle men in this section of the country, and with all the facilities at hand, it does seem as if we should have some consideration. But we did not have the pass word, so we can not get in. Keokuk, Iowa; Cincinnati, Ohio; Toledo, Ohio; and several other locations in the Mississippi Valley were presented, but they do not need to expect to get anything of this kind.

I desire to insert in the RECORD a synopsis of the data we furnished:

SYNOPSIS OF DATA FILED WITH THE NITRATE DIVISION OF THE ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

Re: No. 3 Nitrate Plant.

Site.—Two miles north of Vincennes, Ind., level plateau on the Wabash River, 1,500 acres of land practically level.

Transportation.—Two railroads adjacent to site—Vandalia Railroad, Chicago & Eastern Illinois—requiring 1 per cent siding. Two other trunk lines—Big Four and Baltimore & Ohio—connect with Vincennes.

Coal.—Unlimited supply No. 3, 5, and 6 bituminous coal directly underneath site. Oliphant-Johnson mine, capacity 6,000 tons per day, 4 miles distant.

Limestone.—Largest limestone deposits of following analysis at Bedford, Ind., and vicinity, 60 miles from proposed site:

Calcium carbonate	98.27
Magnesium carbonate	.84
Aluminum oxide	.15
Silica	.64
	99.90

Coke.—Suitable coke of the following analysis obtainable at Vincennes and Indianapolis:

Fixed carbon	90.36
Ash	6.78
Sulphur	.52

Gravel.—Unlimited supply of gravel, containing proper combination of aggregates for concrete construction purposes, immediately adjacent to site.

Water.—Sufficient flow at all periods of the year of chemically pure water for all purposes required.

Building materials.—Lehigh Cement Co. plant at Mitchell, capable of supplying ample supply Portland cement for all purposes. Lumber, brick, fire clay, etc., obtainable at Vincennes.

Structural steel.—One of the largest structural-steel plants in the Middle West at Vincennes, capable of fabricating 5,000 tons per month, with a large and complete supply of structural steel, standard form and size, constantly on hand.

Electrical energy.—Three thousand K. W. immediately available and 85,000 K. W. to be supplied by January 1, 1919. The price on 5-year basis of cost plus 1 mill per K. W. hour.

Labor.—Five to eight thousand laboring men immediately available, owing to the shutdown of nonessential manufacturing plants.

Fertilizer market.—The large area of farm lands stretching in all directions from Vincennes are demanding an ever-increasing supply of nitrates for fertilizer, with its four trunk lines of railway extending to the four points of the compass, makes Vincennes an ideal site for the manufacture of commercial nitrate.

Living conditions.—Vincennes possesses fine graded vocational and high schools, library, water and sewer systems, paved streets, fraternal and civic organizations and clubs, churches of all denominations, public buildings, and beautiful parks.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this is another one of those tests of our patriotism by being asked to vote for a so-called war proposition in which it is difficult to see the direct war connection but very easy to see some other things. I am willing to vote with the gentleman from Ohio for this bill, and I expect to vote for it on his representations and the representation of the department that it is desirable from a war standpoint. I do not think that the gentleman from Ohio made a very convincing argument as to the benefit from the war viewpoint of the Muscle Shoals proposition when he said that there probably would be no result in production within a three-year period.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman did not say that, I withdraw it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There is no question but that they will produce within six months ammonia nitrate, but they will have to produce it by steam power or by water power carried across the country 90 miles.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman further stated that steam power, as we all know, could be developed in one place as well as in another. But Muscle Shoals has been selected. I have every sympathy with the worthy Representative from that district in the comments he made upon the hospitality and patriotism of the people in that neighborhood. They are delightful hosts and we were delightfully entertained there, but this proposition goes back of the individuality of the neighborhood, it goes to the very foundation of the effort to load a great big proposition upon this Government, for goodness only knows what purpose. I can not explain it, and I do not think any man on the floor can explain it.

At three different times has this thing been before us; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has had it, the Committee on Agriculture has had it, the Committee on Military Affairs has had it, and every time when the House itself or the committees of the House have had the opportunity to vote on the question on its merits it has been defeated. Now, then, what is it to-day? Here is the situation, as I view it: After we have defeated the proposition on its merits three different times in different ways, then it is foisted on the Government through some unknown method contrary to its merits, contrary to the opinion of the War Department as expressed at one time, and then out of some so-called emergency fund, without one word being said upon the subject as before us, the general proposition itself is accepted.

I want to ask this House what is the power higher up that can load such a proposition as this on the American people and on the Government? Nobody has said who that power was or what it was, but there is some mysterious power at work capable of placing an expense of $125,000,000 on the American people contrary to the wishes of their Representatives in Congress assembled.

Who exercises this power? What authority has it? Where does it come from? Why is it not out in the open? It never has been in the open; never. I have known Muscle Shoals River for five years, during my term of service in Congress, and, while there is an opportunity to develop a great water power there, there has never to my knowledge been a time when the parties interested to foist this thing on the Government were not looking for the best end of the trade. That is the Yankee situation of it to-day—nothing else, gentlemen. I think it is proper for some one to rise on the floor and explain to the membership of this House what the power is that can put such an unmeritorious proposition as this across, in view of the action of the committees of this House and in view of the action of the House. What is the ulterior purpose? What is that mysterious power? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Mr. TREADWAY had leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman—

Not in the thick of the fight;
Not in the press of the odds
Do the heroes come to their height,
Or we know the demigods.

And whether their names go down
With age-kept victories,
Or whether they battle and drown
Unreckoned, is hid from our eyes.

They are too near to be great,
But our children shall understand
When and how our fate
Was changed, and by whose hand.

Our children shall measure their worth,
We are content to be blind,
For we know that we walk on a newborn earth
With the saviors of mankind.

—Rudyard Kipling.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have hesitated somewhat in imposing myself upon the time of Congress and have done so only because of the possibility that my observations may be of some value to you, my colleagues, and at the same time carry a message to those who may read these pages, for the part which those at home must play in this great conflict is only a degree less important than the part which will be played by those at the front. Upon every man and woman in America there rests the obligation of service. This war can not be won by lip loyalty or stinted sacrifice. Success can only be achieved by the united effort and unswerving determination no less of the thousands in the trenches, than of the millions back of the lines.

This war is calling forth the patriotism, the genius, and the supreme power of a mighty people. We are proving to the world that democracy, which has opened the flood gates to opportunity, can rise to the highest plane of national unity. It is a demonstration of democracy in its fullest, truest expression, calling upon manhood without distinction and upon wealth without exception. In this crisis, Mr. Chairman, partisanship has disappeared and we rejoice that patriotism knows no party distinction; loyalty no sectional divisions; and that Americans of every race and creed and station stand united in the presence of the common danger. We have subordinated all internal differences, all political animosities to the noble cause of our Nation's welfare and our Nation's triumph; and in solid phalanx stand behind the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy.

I will not attempt a discussion of economic, social, or political questions; neither will I burden you with statistics or military problems. Very briefly and very simply I am going to tell the story of my trip along the battle fronts, taken in conjunction with several of my colleagues in Congress. First let me tell you a little story of the war. It shows how a Yankee is always up to the last notch. This Yankee, who had been over in France only a few days, happened to meet some Canadians. He went up to where they were seated at a table and sat down with them, at the same time drawing out of his pocket a door knob. The Canadians asked him, "Why do you carry that old door knob?" and he said, "That is an old pal of mine." "But why do you call it your pal?" "Because," said the Yankee, "the other day I was up on the firing line and was just entering a house; I put my hand on this door knob and just then a shell struck and blew the house away, leaving only this door knob in my hand."

About the middle of October we sailed from New York, the purpose of our trip being to learn from first-hand observation the needs of our soldiers and to ascertain conditions both at the front and back of the lines. Our party was composed of Congressmen PARKER of New Jersey, TAYLOR of Colorado, JOHNSON of Washington, DALE of Vermont, MILLER of Washington, STEPHENS of Nebraska, GOODWIN of Arkansas, DILL of Washington, TIMBERLAKE of Colorado, and myself as Representatives, and Messrs. Patton, Hammond, Stout, and Rich. We left about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, with dusk coming on, and the last thing any of us saw of our native land as we went down the bay was the brilliantly illuminated Statue of Liberty, lighted from base to torch, emblematical of the great struggle in which we are engaged to-day. The moment we passed out of the channel at Sandy Hook we realized that we were in war, for at night every outside light on the ship was extinguished, not even the running lights or red and green side lights were operated, and every porthole was bolted fast from the outside. We were not allowed even to smoke on deck for fear that the flare of a match might disclose the location of the ship. Day after day we plowed across the deep, with no incident other than the daily target practice and deck drills. Several hours of each day were devoted to this fire drill, a float being dropped overboard, around which the ship maneuvered as the gunners worked the guns. Our ship was armed with several rifles, and the accuracy and swiftness with which the crew loaded and fired them elicited our praise as well as our admiration. We had on board a unit of Red Cross nurses and a number of officers of various branches of the service, splendid men and women anxious to do the part assigned them.

Two days before we landed, two destroyers met us and convoyed us into the harbor of Liverpool. I can assure you that it was a very welcome sight to see those American vessels, prepared to defend us in case of submarine attack. In Liverpool we saw several great ships discharging their human freight of American soldiers. It was inspiring to see our boys in their khaki uniforms marching through the streets of Liverpool, following the flag, 3,000 miles from home. From Liverpool we went to London, where we were met by Ambassador Page and Mr. Ian Malcolm, of the British foreign office. The next day we were informally received at the American Embassy by Mr. Page and attachés. It is both a duty and a pleasure to pay a well-merited tribute to our representative in London and his staff. The United States has never sent to Great Britain a more popular or more able ambassador than Mr. Page, and the work he is doing and has done reflects the greatest credit upon our country and is deserving of the highest praise.

London to-day is different from the London of peace times. We saw in the city and near-by towns buildings partly completed and temporarily abandoned, for practically all construction work not incident to the war was stopped at the outbreak of hostilities. On the face of everyone you meet there is that stern, set expression which means undying determination to win the war. There are soldiers marching up and down the streets, some wounded, others on leave of absence, and still others who are on their way to the front. At night almost total darkness prevails, just a faint glimmer in the streets, for only one out of three lamps is lighted and these have great reflectors to prevent any glare shining upward. No shop windows are allowed to have their shutters open at night, and in the hotels the blinds are all tightly closed. It is a severe offense to open them when a light is burning. We had an interesting experience in an attempted air raid, and, while we were not bombed, we had all of the sensations. We were at a conference when suddenly we heard the cry "Take to shelter," "Take to shelter," as the Boy Scouts, who are charged with this duty, ran through the streets warning the people. The authorities knew of the approach of these raiders, because when the airships fly over the channel the moment they are spotted on their approaching land, it is telegraphed to London, and the officers have an hour's leeway in preparing for defense. When we started for our hotel the streets were almost deserted, the only sound being the scurrying of feet and the cry of those boys. The few people remaining were hurrying in every direction to shelter. All through the streets signs are posted with a directing finger to indicate "Safety zones," "Fifty can be accommodated in this cellar," "Seventy-five can find shelter here." Stations in the tube, cellars, underground passages, every refuge that will afford protection, is utilized. I can assure you we did not waste much time going to our hotel. We finally reached our destination with the night air still resounding with the cry, "Take to shelter." However, there was no raid that night, for the aeroplanes had been checked by anti-aircraft guns some distance from London, and so we missed the experience of having bonds dropped upon us. You will naturally ask what is the object of bombarding London when the number of casualties is insignificant? Ten or fifteen persons killed a week would not win the war in a thousand years, and the material damage is also very slight. Then, why is it done? Because of the psychological effect on the minds of men and women—the suspense and ever-present fear that something is going to come out of the sky. It is the uncertainty which causes the nerve racking. It is this same dread of danger that can not be forestalled which is so demoralizing in the hospitals which the Germans bomb. Remember, out in these hospitals there is little protection, only canvas or at best wooden or galvanized roofs over the heads of the nurses, which afford little or no protection.

In food supplies, England is feeling the effect of the submarine sinkings, and there is a shortage of some of the staples, especially flour and sugar. The portions placed before one in the restaurants, though sufficient, are small, and strict limits are placed upon the quantities served. At breakfast, for instance, two pieces of brown war bread were the allowance, and two small lumps of sugar—lumps no larger than raisins—and if one ordered oatmeal the little pieces might be exchanged for the same amount of brown granulated sugar, and then one would have to drink one's coffee without being sweetened.

I want to speak for a moment of some of the great hospitals in London, and especially the orthopedic hospitals, where they rebuild the human wreckage of war. It was one of the most depressing as well as one of the most encouraging sights I saw abroad. It was really marvelous to see the way in which surgeons at these institutions salvage the men who are sent there, and it means much for the economic future of the nation. Some men come in without arms, some without legs, some are blind, others are so shattered in their heads or bodies that it seems impossible to do anything to remedy their pitiful condition. I have seen men with parts of the jaw fractured, others with nose and cheeks lacerated by a piece of shell. In restoring face wounds where the bone has been cut away they take a piece of a rib of the wounded man to replace the loss, carefully fitting the new part into the cavity. Or, if this be impracticable they take the rib from a brother or sister or some other near blood relative. I saw one of these men after he had been treated for several months. They showed us a picture of him taken the day he was received at the hospital. The change was almost unbelievable—his nose, cheek, and one-half of his jaw had been blown away. When I saw him several months after the initial treatment, while there was still a frightful scar, he was able to use his jaw almost as well as you or I. He could speak, he could eat, and all without pain. One man who had lost a leg at the thigh and the other at the knee was so reconstructed by the use of artificial limbs that for several moments after I saw him I was not aware he was not using his natural legs. Another man had lost an arm at the shoulder and had an artificial one, which was so adjusted with contrivances and pulleys that he could use it with almost the same power and dexterity as formerly. He was able to write, ride a bicycle, use a typewriter, row a boat, dig with a spade, and even shave himself. I saw him lift, at arm's length with the artificial limb, a 50-pound sledge hammer, and what was probably more startling was to see him take his pouch of tobacco from one pocket, which he held in one hand with his pipe, and then with the contrivance on the artificial hand take a pinch of tobacco and pack it into his pipe. Many soldiers suffer from shell shock, due to the terrific bombardment to which they have been subjected. They may be physically sound and in perfect health except for dislocated nerves. Some are unable to walk; others can not use their arms or hands. For hours volunteer nurses sit beside these men, searching with electric vibrators for a nerve which yet has life. Perhaps at first the dormant nerve will respond by only an almost imperceptible quiver, but by constant treatment day after day it will be restored to its normal condition. Then another nerve is treated, until finally the man can again walk or use his hands.

At the military hospital at Sheperds Bush, 1,200 patients are cared for, and, in addition to medical treatment, when they are strong enough they are taught gainful trades, so that they may again become factors in the industrial life of the nation. In one of the wards I met a young fellow who had come to the hospital so terribly mangled that his case was considered hopeless. He had been buried for four hours by a shell explosion along the Somme. After months of careful treatment his broken body had been rebuilt and he was bright and cheerful. I asked him how he felt. "Oh, I am feeling fine. Better days ahead."

Great Britain cares for her blinded sailors and soldiers at St. Dunstans Hospital, where 350 of these unfortunates are quartered. The hostel is situated on the estate of Mr. Otto Kahn, of New York, who contributes the use of his property to this splendid work. Sir Arthur Pearson, himself blind, is the financial sponsor to the institution. The men are taught useful occupations and everything is done to prevent the blinded soldiers from falling into the slough of despond, which usually engulfs a man who has suddenly lost the sense of sight. Instead of this, his fighting spirit is aroused as he learns of the full and wonderful lives of usefulness achieved by others, and he realizes that closed eyelids do not mean lack of vision. He is inspired with the motto, "What others can make of life, I can also make." Gainful trades are taught, which will enable these sightless men to take their places in the economic world. Shorthand writing, telephone operating, shoe repairing, mat and basket making, joinery, gardening, poultry raising, and massage are the occupations in which these blind veterans find their opportunities to again become factors in the industrial life of the nation. Many volunteer workers give their time and patience to this noble work. The men are taught to read and write by the Braille system, and a short address I made to some of the workers was handed me as it had been taken down by the blind typist in this code of the sightless. The days are divided into class and lecture room exercises, shopwork, and recreation. In many of the workrooms the men were singing as their nimble fingers plaited the baskets and mats, and everywhere there was an absence of that depression and helplessness which is so often associated with a life of blindness.

In the shops, although there are sighted foremen in each department, the instruction is mainly given by men who are themselves blind. The more intelligent and apt soldiers are kept to be pupil teachers, in order to encourage the newcomer by the fact that he is profiting by the knowledge of a man who was himself blinded on the battle field only a short time before.

Manuel, former King of Portugal, is devoting his life as a volunteer to this work, and his wife is doing her part by scrubbing floors and performing every kind of work, no matter how menial. The amount of ingenuity that has been put into this salvaging of human beings is one of the marvels of the war. The science of medicine and surgery under the spur of necessity has made rapid strides in the past three years, and the knowledge and experience acquired will be one of the compensations for the sacrifices made. When the true history of this war is written in the perspective of future years it will tell of the movement of ships and of armies, of victories on land and sea, of heroism in the air and in the depths. It will speak also of that great human side of the conflict—the silent, prayerful sorrows of devoted mothers, wives, and daughters. It will tell of the men of genius and women of patience who gave every ounce of their strength and the full measure of their skill to the task of restoring human beings, of rebuilding the bodies and the minds of men seemingly hopelessly injured, and implanting in their shattered frames hope and confidence to fight life's battles anew.

Last summer I happened to have a neighbor living next to me on Long Island by the name of William Soloman, a banker, but I had to go to London to find out the philanthropic work he is doing and I want to pay my tribute to his generosity. In one of our trips I visited a magnificent house in Regent Park that had been turned into a hospital, equipped with a staff of nurses, doctors, and all the necessary appliances, and I was told that it was maintained by Mr. William Soloman, of New York City.

On our first Sunday in England a very gracious compliment was paid us. Under the escort of Mr. Ian Malcolm, M. P., we were conducted through Windsor Castle, the great halls of this ancient fortress-palace being opened as a special favor. We were first taken to St. George's Chapel, the meeting place of the Knights of the Garter, where we were honored by being seated in the stalls occupied by the knights when in attendance. At the close of the services the great organ, in deep, dulcet tones, peeled out the "Star-Spangled Banner," the first time in history that the American national anthem had echoed in this stately church.

The day previous to our departure for the Continent was a memorable one, for we had the opportunity of hearing Lloyd-George deliver in the House of Commons one of his masterpieces of oratory. This great commoner, every fiber of whose being responds to the call of democracy—alert, resourceful, courageous, and determined—delivered on behalf of the sailors and soldiers of Great Britain, one of the finest, most inspiring eulogies that I have ever listened to. We lunched that day with many of the leaders of Parliament, and to my oft-repeated query, "What can America do to help bring this war to a speedy termination?" I invariably received the answer, "Build ships, aeroplanes, and guns." Transportation is undoubtedly the greatest factor in the struggle. On it depends not only the sending of soldiers but the shipment of supplies to maintain them. Transportation is vital also for the support of our allies. Both airships and artillery are almost as assential to the success of our cause as ocean tonnage. As Sir Charles Beresford, retired admiral of the British Fleet, said, "We want guns, guns, guns; and then more guns." Mr. Lloyd-George was equally as emphatic about the need of ships, aircraft, and artillery. He said, "Do not overlook the supreme importance of a large number of guns of all sizes, especially the 3-inch caliber and larger."

Let me put the requirements of this war in the form of an alliteration: Men, money, munitions, merchant ships, motor planes, and moral courage to fight to the end.

Among other things we saw during our stay in England was the censorship bureau which exercises control over all communications not domestic in origin and destination, whether sent by cable or messenger, by ship or wireless. Five thousand persons are employed in this important service, 2,000 of whom are attached to the Liverpool office and 3,000 to London. All mail is divided into two great classes, social and commercial. Every package and every letter, many thousand pieces a week, are examined by the readers. A great staff of language experts is employed, capable of translating 150 different languages and dialects. The newspapers, books, medals, photographs, and merchandise condemned for violation of the censorship or contraband regulations, fill warehouses. Many were the ingenious devices employed to send rubber into Germany. It was sent in the form of candy, macaroni, and even gilded jewelry. We were shown one of the medals struck off to commemorate the sinking of the ill-fated Lusitania, as well as badges bearing the portrait of the deposed King of Portugal, which had been sent to Lisbon in the hope that this would stir up civil strife and thus weaken one of the allies.

One department is devoted to the detection of invisible writing—a laboratory equipped with chemicals and test tubes, where experts examine every letter suspected of containing hidden information. But no secret code is too subtle, no method of transmission is too cleverly devised to evade the vigilance of the censor inspectors, and every bit of information, no matter how trivial, is examined and tabulated. The bureau furnishes the navies and armies of the allies with intelligence of military and naval operations and plans of the enemy and cooperates with the navy in maintaining the blockade by sending to the patrolling fleets advance information pertaining to ocean-borne cargoes. It prevents disloyal British citizens and enemy spies from forwarding valuable information to Germany and by its close scrutiny of transactions has stopped all trading with the enemy. Many tons of propaganda sent out from Germany to neutral and allied nations have been seized and destroyed. By intercepting all correspondence it has paralyzed the enemy's commercial enterprises in foreign lands; it has also foiled his plots and checkmated his widespread spy system; it has made it impossible for unpatriotic persons in Great Britain to send securities abroad to escape burdensome taxes and the possible conscription of their wealth; and to a large extent, by withholding their mail, it has put a stop to the machinations of German agents who were endeavoring to raise the cost of supplies by sending to dealers in neutral countries spurious and extravagant offers to purchase foods and munitions. The British censorship has three principal functions—to prevent information of military value from reaching Germany; to collect and coordinate "intelligence" for the use of the various departments of its own Government; and to act as a deterrent to all enemy undertakings. In addition to supplying information to the British authorities, it has also furnished our Government with much valuable information. In many ways it has been an important factor in preventing Germany from obtaining supplies, money, or credit from foreign countries and has lessened to a large degree the full effect of the insidious propaganda which has been carried on.

Another very important department and one somewhat closely related to the censor bureau is that of the blockade. We were shown files containing 500,000 cards giving the names, addresses, shipments, and so forth, of business firms all over the world. This vast amount of data enables the blockade committee to study and become familiar with market conditions everywhere and to know in advance of shipments intended for Germany.

From London we proceeded to Folkstone to take the morning boat to Boulogne, but a heavy gale was blowing and the sea was running so furiously that the authorities closed the port. We had to await the abatement of the storm, and it was not till afternoon that the ship was finally permitted to sail. Then followed two hours of misery. Sixteen hundred soldiers and 100 civilians made up the passenger list, and out of that 1,700 I think at least 1,699 were seasick. Our passage was protected by English gunboats and aeroplanes. Through this lane of destroyers, men and supplies in ever-increasing numbers are sent to France.

As they are not operating sleepers on any of the railroads, we had to sit up all night on our journey to Paris. We were received in France with the same courteous attention and the same hearty welcome that had been extended to us in England. After paying our respects to our ambassador, Mr. Sharpe, we made arrangements for our trip to the front. Before leaving for the battle line we visited the tomb of Lafayette in its obscure corner of the old cemetery. We placed a wreath entwined with red, white, and blue ribbons upon the grave of this great patriot and companion of Washington. The tomb of Napoleon, about which cluster such memories, such associations of the great conqueror, was opened to us. In the courtyard of the Invalides, just in front of the chapel where lie the remains of Napoleon, a vast collection of war relics has been deposited. In the place of honor, decorated with flowers and rosettes, stands the aeroplane of Capt. Guynemer, the "Vieux Charles." In this machine the gallant Guynemer, the idol of France, brought down 16 of the 54 enemy planes credited to his valor before fate overtook him.

That evening we were the guests of Gen. Pershing and his staff. The impression made upon us by Gen. Pershing was that of an officer of ability, force, and courage, capable of leading our troops to victory. His charge to the American soldiers voices the spirit of our Nation:

> You are now in France to expel an enemy that has invaded this beautiful land. Your first duty is to fight against this foe and protect our Ally.
>
> You are here also to lift a shield above the poor and weak. You will be kind, therefore, to the aged and to the invalid. You will be courteous to all women, and never have so much as an evil thought in your mind. You will be very tender and gentle with little children. You will do well, therefore, to forswear the use of all liquors.
>
> You will do your duty like brave men. Fear God. Honor your country. Defend liberty.
>
> God have you in His keeping.

We had the keen pleasure of meeting our colleague, Congressman LAGUARDIA, of New York, now a captain in the Signal Corps of the Army. Last summer Congressman LAGUARDIA, who had in the few months of his membership in the House won distinction for his activities in legislative work, enlisted in the Aviation Service. His patriotic and unselfish action, placing his loyalty to country above his personal interests, won for him the praise of every Member of Congress. He is now stationed at the American training camp just outside of Naples, Italy, and I feel confident that he will bring credit to his uniform and honor to himself.

Paris to-day presents almost the same appearance that it did before the war. It is true that the streets are full of soldiers, and that women and old men have to a very large degree taken the places of men in the stores, but the streets at night are as brilliantly lighted as formerly, the restaurants and theaters are open, the shops offer their usual display of attractions, and business goes on in much the same way as it did in pre-war days.

Mr. John Ball, writing from Paris, gives this picture of the city under war conditions:

> The grand boulevards, from the Madeleine to the Bonne Nouvelle, are crowded as of old. Morning or afternoon, whether there are fitful gleams of sunshine or "chill November's surly blasts" sweep the leaves from the trees, they are a blaze of color and movement. The horizon blue uniforms of French officers mingle with British and American khaki and Italian gray-green, with here and there a red fez and black face; and the gray days do not exclude touches of color from women's toilets. At nighttime the same crowd, but with civilian black preponderating, jostling and good-humored. The cafés and terraces are full. At half past 9 shrill whistles and distinctive clapping of hands are heard. No need to ask what these sounds portend. They are the signals that the closing hour is come. There is no grace. The cafés empty as if by magic.

Underlying it all, there is that ever-present nervous strain and the faces of the men and women show the tension under which they are living. They are economizing, too, and husbanding their resources, as France, for three and a half years, has borne the brunt of the conflict. Think for a moment of her burden; think, too, of the rekindled heroism of her people that carried forward her soldiers under the most terrible blows of war ever known. One and a half million of her sons dead, one and a half million more either prisoners or so injured as to be of no further military service; thousands of her women and children victims of the savagery of war; scores of her cities and towns shapeless ruins; hundreds of acres of her rich soil desolate wastes; her churches desecrated, her homes destroyed, and yet the spirit of France rises supreme to the horrors, the losses, and the sacrifices that she has made and will continue to make. The heroic nation, bleeding and maimed, yet neither unnerved nor vanquished, still stands steadfast between Prussia and her ambition to rule the world. It is the soul of France that speaks through the tears and gloom, giving a promise, like the rainbow in the heavens, that democracy is safe in her keeping.

Over and over again I have been asked, "Are the French not weary of the struggle? Will they not give up?" Having seen the faces of thousands of her soldiers on the march to the trenches, faces that wore that calm, steady, undaunted expression of men willing to die that France may live, the answer invariably must be, "No; the French will never stop." France may bleed to death, but so long as her heart beats, her sons will march forward to the guns on the battle line and sacrifice their lives freely, gladly, for the cause. French courage and morale is not weakening; her determination is not waning. France has sent to the front her youth, and it has been spent on the battle fields of the north. Countless graves scattered far and wide upon shell-torn hills and valleys and crowding the waste of shattered villages tell the story of those early struggles. She is sending her older manhood now, men of mature years. Later, perhaps, it may be old men who will shoulder the rifle. But these grim, blue ranks will be filled, for France, indominable France, still lives. Her destiny bids defiance to the holocaust of destruction thundering along her borders and leads onward to a greatness made sublime by the consciousness of duty nobly, heroically rendered for France, for democracy, and for humanity. How the world misjudged her. How it doubted her steadfastness. Many there were who thought her tottering from decay, with spirit sordid and crushed, but from the crucible in which the souls of her men and women have been tried, there emerges a glorified, ennobled France, radiant with right, true and brave and strong.

Capt. André Tardieu, French High Commissioner to the United States, in an address delivered in New York on February 6 last, said, in speaking of what France had done:

"We have in the line 15,000 guns of every caliber, and every day more than 300,000 shells are turned out by our factories. To get those guns, to produce those shells, we created an industry which did not exist before the war, and which has enabled us not only to arm ourselves but also to arm our allies.

"Without speaking of what we manufacture for you, and that is several hundred guns a month, we have during the last three years given to our allies in Europe 1,350,000 rifles, 15,000 automatic rifles, 10,000 machine guns, 800,000,000 cartridges, 2,500 guns, and 4,750 airplanes.

"And the day when faithful Italy found herself in peril—a peril which is now averted—within a few hours we brought to her front the troops which prove the unbreakable brotherhood of our alliance.

"Gentlemen, that is France, such as you must know her, you whose children are already fighting on her soil. Such is France, who for three years has awaited you, certain that you would come."

Early on the morning of November 3 we left Paris under the escort of Col. Parker, United States Army and Lieut. Count Le Marois, of the French Army. Our first point of interest was reached about 20 miles east of Paris, when we came to the battle field of the Marne, where France rose to the fullest height of her courage, stood fast, and won the greatest victory in her history. In that famous retreat of the allied armies from the Belgian frontier they had been overpowered but not crushed. Under the deadly hammer blows of the German drive they had been forced back, but always in perfect order. There was neither rout nor panic under that smashing offensive, and every inch of abandoned ground was valiantly contested by the soldiers of Gen. Joffre and Gen. French. For weeks success had crowned the attacking German columns, and their marvelous fighting machine, perhaps the best disciplined and trained military organization of which the world has any knowledge, seemed to be invincible. But the onrolling tide was at the height of its flood; the German Army had reached the extreme limits of its range when it crossed the banks of the Marne.

Gen. Joffre on the morning of September 6 issued to his troops the spirited command:

> At a moment when a battle on which the welfare of the country depends is going to begin I feel it incumbent upon me to remind you all that this is no longer the time to look behind. All our efforts must be directed toward attacking and driving back the enemy. An army which can no longer advance must at all costs keep the ground it has won and allow itself to be killed on the spot rather than give way. In the present circumstance no faltering can be tolerated.

It is estimated that 3,000,000 men faced each other on that bright Sunday morning, when the great battle opened. I will not attempt a description of the fight except in a general way. The German advance was in five main divisions, with Gen. Von Kluck on the extreme right, nearest to Paris. Next to him was Gen. Von Bulow's army. Opposed to them were the allied forces under Gen. Joffre, with Gen. Manoury commanding the Sixth French Army facing Gen. Von Kluck. During the night the famous "taxicab army" of some 5,000 or 6,000 men joined Gen. Manoury's forces. This army had been rushed from Paris by Gen. Gallieni, who commandeered motor buses and wagons for its transportation to the battle field. Gen. Manoury's army engaged so vigorously that Von Kluck, evidently thinking he was opposed by a heavy force, deployed to the westward in order to meet the attack without endangering his flank. This caused Von Bulow to swing over to the support of Von Kluck, leaving an opening in the center. Gen. Joffre, quick to see his advantage, ordered Gen. Foch, who commanded the French center, to take the offensive. His divisions broke through the gap, rolled back in panic the German columns, and the advance on Paris was ended. This battle will go down in history as one of the decisive battles of the world. There is little left to-day to tell the story of that great victory, for in this stage of the war the fighting was more in the old, open formation rather than in the trench method, later resorted to, when armies "dug themselves in." The sturdy French peasants in the three years which have elapsed since the booming of cannon rolled over the countryside have repaired the villages, rebuilt the roads, and restored the land to its former state of cultivation.

The first real battle front we saw was at Soissons, where there was a terrific bombardment last summer. It was here at Chemin des Dames, "the road of the ladies," a long, low, nearly level ridge, that the French, in seven days' fighting, expended $100,000,000 of ammunition. As we approached the line, the highways became choked with the moving mass of men, guns, and trucks. There was no shouting or singing by these silent, grim, determined soldiers. No bands played, no colors waved, no sound was heard save the thud of marching feet and the clank of moving wagons. The men appeared well fed and clothed, and the horses were in superb condition. We found this true along the whole battle front, and especially among the British troops. There is something inspiring about great masses of men; something that stirs one's blood at the thought of the power of a mighty army. All the way from Paris we had met and overtaken large numbers of autotrucks, called "lorries," which go back and forth carrying ammunition and supplies. We passed thousands of British and French troops on their way to Italy to reenforce the Italians after their reverse. Here let me digress a moment from my story.

The French were already in bitter mood over the Russian collapse when the Italian debacle occurred, and while there was neither despair nor discouragement as to ultimate victory, there was resentment caused by the breakdown of one ally and disappointment over the reverse of the other. To thoroughly appreciate the feeling of the people, one must remember that for years France had been the financial sponsor for Russia, and that Russian bonds were a favorite investment of the French people, nearly every family owning securities of France's great northern friend and Ally. The complete breakdown of responsible government at Petrograd meant, therefore, not only an additional burden from a military standpoint, but it meant also the loss of millions of dollars of savings. Then came the German drive against Italy, with its sudden, unexpected, and overwhelming success.

The Italian disaster was as much the result of Prussian intrigue and insidious propaganda as of Prussian bullets and shells. Italy, after months of courageous fighting by her army of soldiers and no less arduous exertions by her army of engineers, had advanced her battle front far into the territory of her foe. It was confidently expected that another smashing offensive would bring about the downfall of Vienna. While Italy was consolidating her gains and completing preparations for the new attack, the forces of German propaganda came to the aid of stricken Austria. The Italian Army, exhausted after months of intensive fighting among the Alps, where one bloody campaign had been followed by yet another, petitioned insistently for furloughs. Many of the soldiers had been away from their homes since the outbreak of the war, and it was stated that leaves of absence had been promised them in the fall. When these furloughs failed to be granted because of the exigencies of the military situation, the men became restive. At the psychological moment German agents began their work by appealing to the patriotism of the Italians and playing upon their incredulity and strong national pride. German spies in large numbers began to mingle with the soldiers, harping upon their wrongs, enlarging upon their hardships, and emphasizing the injustice of their commanding officers. The soldiers were congratulated upon their victories, extolled for their valor, and told that as they had driven the enemy from their soil they had won their fight and that further fighting was needless, but that they were compelled to continue the conflict because of the selfishness and greed of the British.

Subsidized newspapers carried on the propaganda back of the lines, assuring their readers that Italy had accomplished her full purpose in entering the war and recounting the probabilities of an early and honorable peace which would restore sons and brothers to the family circle. This propaganda not only held out the assurance that Germany did not seek to conquer Italy, but that, on the contrary, Prussia would undertake the restoration to Italy of her lost Provinces of Italia Irridenta. As the result of these newspaper articles and pamphlets, sent broadcast over Italy, letters poured in upon the soldiers from their wives and mothers imploring them to return home. The soldiers, already aggrieved and embittered, became dispirited, and when the onslaught, led by Gen. Mackensen at the head of several hundred thousand veteran Prussian troops, poured down upon them, they gave way.

The suddenness of the attack swept them back in precipitate retreat, large numbers of prisoners and vast quantities of military stores and equipment falling into the hands of the enemy. But to-day Italy, cognizant of the sinister influences that had wrought her disaster, is reunited in the presence of the danger of an invasion, which threatens not only the destruction of her historic cities, filled with the art treasures of the centuries, but her national existence. She is making an heroic stand in her mountain passes and along her rivers, against the hordes of Huns, that seek to overwhelm her.

As we approached Soissons we obtained our first view of aeroplanes operating in the war zone. Soaring above the rolling country, like great eagles, these daring bird men—the cavalry of the air—whose fields of battle are the clouds, darted hither and yon across the line, scouting for the enemy. For miles here and on our way to Rheims we passed along camouflaged roads, protected from aircraft observation by great screens of woven grasses and artificial hedges.

Soissons was first bombarded in September, 1914, and on every side are desolate evidences of the destruction wrought. Under that terrific fire, walls collapsed as though they had been made of pasteboard, and women and children were buried beneath the ruins or blown to fragments as they sought safety in the streets. From Soissons to Rheims the road was all but blocked by the cavalry, infantry, artillery, ambulance and supply trains. Despite the heavy traffic and the incessant rains, the roads were in splendid condition. The French take good care of their highways, for they know how essential it is to an army to have open communications. Negroes from French Africa, Cambodians, Algerians, and the peoples from Indo-China, as well as German prisoners, are employed in keeping the roads in repair. Mile after mile of dugouts, many of them still in use, lined the roads, while wire entanglements and trenches ran in every direction. These labyrinths of ditches, stakes, and barbed wire cut and sear the land from the Alps to the Channel. We saw piles of timber cut and trimmed, ready for the trenches and underground work, with here and there great depots stacked high with shells and ammunition.

As we neared Rheims I happened to see several dark puffs of smoke smudge the leaden sky over the lines. Col. Parker, who was with us, said that they were shells from antiaircraft guns. While we were looking, one of the shells struck home, for the great black envelope of a French balloon silhouetted itself against the clouds. Like a handkerchief cast to the winds, the torn bag flattened itself out, and in fantastic curves slowly sank to the earth, a mass of flames. Late in the afternoon, when the lengthening shadows of a gray November twilight were casting their somber hues upon the battered and broken walls, we entered Rheims—ill-fated, battle-scarred Rheims—the center of an ancient civilization and for ages the sought-for prize of military aggression. What memories and associations of the past; what pathos and sorrows of the present are awakened by that name! History, religion, art, romance, and chivalry—the epitome of human endeavors and aspirations—crowd the centuries of her existence. Rheims today is a melancholy ruin, a city of the dead, abandoned and closed to the outside world. Crowded cemeteries, empty houses, demolished sanctuaries, crumbled walls, and battered pavements tell the story of the bombardment of Rheims.

Surmounting all, a pathetic monument to the wreckage and frightfulness of war, stands the shattered cathedral. For 800 years this masterpiece of architectural splendor has been the shrine of countless thousands. But yesterday the pride of France, to-day a bleak and broken relic of its former glory. Birds flight their passage through the empty windows, once studded by the noblest product of the glazier's art; gothic arches and chiseled columns, rich with the tracings of a master hand, lie as heaps of dirt upon the pavement, mixed with bits of glass and fragments of holy figures. A pile of débris now defiled the altar where stood Joan of Arc when her king was crowned. Ah, the pity and the wantonness of it all!

Cardinal Lucon, gray haired and benign, to whose care the sacred edifice and its service have long been intrusted, extended to us a sad welcome. In the gathering gloom of his ruined church this patriotic and devoted prelate, who has remained steadfast at his post, came forward to meet us. He grasped the hand of each and in a few simple words expressed gratification at America's entrance into the war, "For," he said, "it will mean the restoration of my devastated country." A total of 305 shells have struck the edifice since the beginning of the war, 64 of which were fired within the last few months, and the ancient church is yet a target for the artillery, each shell taking its toll of carved statue and molded arch.

During its early bombardment the cathedral was used as a hospital, Red Cross flags flying from its spire. But this did not save it from destruction, despite the fact that it was filled with wounded German soldiers. A scaffolding which had been erected for repair work was fired by an exploding shell and the flames spread to the woodwork above the main entrance. Soon the interior became a raging furnace, which threatened to incinerate the helpless men within. The old cardinal and a young priest began the work of rescue. By this time a great crowd had gathered outside. Suddenly one of those strange and unaccountable phases of mob fury seized the throng made frantic by suffering, the killing of relatives and friends, and infuriated at the sight of their beloved church in flames. The mob rushed to the entrance, demanding that the German soldiers lying on their cots be compelled to die in the hell created by their comrades in arms. It is related how the aged cardinal stepped forward and confronted the angry crowd. Placing himself between the mob and its intended victims, with hands outstretched in appeal, he said to them, "Very well, my children; but you must kill me first." Silence and shame fell upon the frenzied crowd. Then madness gave place to reason, revenge to sympathy, and with a mighty impulse, as their hearts were moved to pity by the benevolence of the cardinal's act, they sprang forward, vieing with one another in their efforts to rescue their hated enemies in distress. As we lingered in the presence of these doleful scenes the only sound that broke the stillness of the deserted streets was the deep detonation of distant guns, booming on the battle front. That and the echo of one's footfall on the stones and the throbbing of one's own heartbeats as the terrible sacrifices and the suffering of it, all struck home!

Passing through the country around Soissons and Rheims we noted the seeming indifference of the inhabitants to all personal danger. Old men and women were working their farms close up to the firing line, women at the plow and old men bent double by age and toil spending their ebbing strength at the tasks forced upon them by the necessities of war. Occasionally a shell would burst overhead, but they kept right on at their work, oblivious to all danger, so accustomed have they become to the artillery. On our way to Verdun we passed acre after acre of vineyards, which have made this part of France famous for its wines. For miles before reaching the historic fortress of Verdun we saw grim evidences of the titanic struggle. Houses destroyed—they are always the object of attack—bridges wrecked, trees felled, and everywhere soldiers, supply trains, and motor kitchens. The very air was laden with depression—a silence of dejection reigned over all, as if the spirits of those in the ranks were stilled by the memory of those who had made the supreme sacrifice.

One of the peculiar sensations of the battle front is the feeling of loneliness. Back of the lines one sees soldiers by the thousands, but close to the firing line one sees or hears none. Except for the roaring of the guns and the whining of the shells, one might imagine one's self in a desert land. When standing on the hills at Verdun, knowing that there were thousands of soldiers near by, we saw not one of that vast army. The men were concealed in dugouts, trenches, and underground galleries. Without the blare of trumpets or the waving of banners, they silently awaited the command to "Carry on!" This war is devoid of all the glamor, glitter, and romance—yes, of all the chivalry, too—which in the past has been associated with great military movements. No flags float above the clouds of smoke and mist, inspiring men's hearts with love of country; no martial music stirs their drooping spirits; no strains of national anthems thrill their souls and steel their courage for the coming charge. Everywhere it was the same. Once only in that long journey along the line did I hear music, and then it was a single fife and drum corps marching with its company to a reserve camp, miles behind the trenches.

We reached Verdun at noon and dined with the commanding general in a vaulted mess hall, deep in the recesses of this ancient fortress. Miles upon miles of galleries have been constructed in the fort, 40 and even 60 feet below the surface. As we ate our war lunch the plates and glasses on the table trembled when the French guns answered the German artillery, for the bombardment still goes on. Verdun stands at the apex of a great triangle, where the hills that rise from the River Meuse crowd down to a narrow pass. Verdun, the rock of destiny, against whose slopes were hurled the mightiest assaults in the history of man! Verdun, whose hills burst asunder beneath the shock of the heaviest cannonading that the world has known! It was here that civilization paused before that impact, then tottered and fell as the Prussian hosts swept onward; then rose again as the dauntless soldiers of France responded to that watchword of liberty, "They shall not pass," and rolled back again, and yet again, the onslaught of the Huns! For ages that name will be the brightest page in the history of France, and you, as long as you live, will know of the glories of Verdun.

This historic spot has a place in history as far back as the time of the Roman invasion, and from ancient days has been the guardian of the eastern frontier. In the reign of Louis XIV, Vauban erected a fortification which at that time was the greatest in the world, and succeeding generations have added to its defenses. The solid rock has been blasted into a vast labyrinth of passages, tunnels, and chambers. A great wall and moat still surround the citadel—useless to-day, but silent reminders of the evolution of the science of warfare.

With the development of modern siege guns the defenses of Verdun were strengthened by the construction of a series of fortresses on the surrounding hills. There are 11 of these great forts, including Vaux, Douaumont, Froidetterre, Hardaumont, Thiaumont, and Souville, and it was for the possession of these strongholds that the soldiers of France and Germany fought and died. The great battle of 1916 opened on the morning of February 21 with a terrific cannonade from the German artillery. The imperial general staff had allotted four days for the reduction of the fortifications and the capture of the city, to be followed by a triumphant march to Paris. "Nach Verdun" was the battle cry of the German hosts as their helmeted ranks swept forward behind their barrage of fire. A most graphic description of these four days of fighting has been written by Mr. F. B. Austin, from whose article in the Saturday Evening Post I quote the following:

"There was one simultaneous vast roar, which leaped from an arc stretching from far in the northwest and passing round behind them to the south. It did not cease. Minute after minute it continued, unabated, prolonged. In the first sudden shock it appeared one colossal bellow of sound, evenly maintained. But as the ear became accustomed to it, instinctively analyzed it, it was possible to distinguish spasms of even fiercer sound than the general welter—the ponderous concussion of specially heavy ordnance, the frenzied hammering of the quick-firing field guns. The sense of hearing was overwrought, but the view changed not. The mist still hung over the landscape, was a curtain before the straining eye. Only down below them on the right a howitzer battery, adventurously pushed forward, rent the fog with stabs of orange-red flame.

"It seemed, in the overpowering blast of the German guns, that the French artillery was making no general reply. From time to time a shell came whining over toward them, finished in an ugly rush and a crash somewhere upon the knoll. They scarcely noticed these occasional jinns of death, so ineffective were they by contrast with the whirlwind of destruction that swept the other way. The habitual ear could now pick out the rumbling tramcarlike progress of the heavy shells overhead, the fierce rushing drone of the missiles from lighter guns, mingling interwoven with the uninterrupted sheet of sound.

"What was happening over there among the dark wooded hills? Nothing could be seen, but the experienced imagination sketched, conscious that it fell below the reality, fearful havoc distant in the fog. Trees suddenly blasted, toppling; parapets leaping into the air—horrors in the spout of earth that had been a sheltered dugout; trenches whose walls fell in; men who cowered, fear-paralyzed, in a shambles; overhead a ceaseless cracking that rained down death; shock upon shock, chaos—such flitted through the minds of those who strained their eyes at the fog.

"The bombardment continued, became monotonous. The fog thinned somewhat, but permitted no clear vision. The batteries were firing by the map, according to a prearranged program. Grouped behind each were the busy gunners, in rapid movement of arms and torso, crouching, laboring with swift concentrated intensity as they passed the long gleaming projectile from hand to hand, thrust it into the breech, closed, and fired. Behind them was a heap of brass cartridge cases, the flat compartmented baskets that had held three rounds. The watching officers, helmeted, in long closely-buttoned coats, stood behind their sections. The battery hurled out its stream of death in absolute immunity. No enemy shell came to seek it. The fog veiled its target.

"Beyond that battery was another, in the open like the first, almost wheel to wheel with it. And beyond that another, and yet others, an endless chain of them, all scorning concealment, all firing as fast as sweating, straining men could load and pull the lever. From behind came the prolonged, heavy, linked detonations of yet other batteries of more weighty metal. Overhead the rumble and rush of hurrying shells was as the sound of heavy traffic. And ever the indefatigable batteries hammered and crashed, spewing forth death in volumes that the men they served might live. From behind every hedge, every hillock, in long lines across the open—so many that they could afford to neglect the enemy's reply—their tongues of flame shot out, flickered, indefinitely repeated into the distance. Their infinitely repeated detonations smote splittingly upon the ear, were gathered into one overpowering roar.

"During the black night, while the gun teams of the German batteries strained and stumbled forward over shell-torn ground to new positions, the French left flank had fallen back from Brabant. The German guns hurled an avalanche of projectiles blindly upon the new lines of defense, more or less at hazard, since no longer did they have them accurately marked upon the map. Once more the gray masses swept forward; once more the hail of shells beat them down. The end of that day saw the center pushed in with wild confusion; but the French resistance, still alive, determined to perish rather than break. Once more the objective had not been attained. Douaumont was not even menaced.

"The fourth day dawned—the appointed day for final victory—and still the struggle continued fiercer than ever. Slowly, slowly the German infantry pressed forward, leaving behind them a sea of helpless bodies—a gray carpet as perceived from a distance. The artillery fire swelled and mounted in paroxysms of incredible violence, the German guns hammering in savage persistence; the French batteries, lurking for their target, overwhelming it in a deluge.

"On and on pressed the gray infantry, thrust dangerously, as night fell, straight at the heart, toward Fort Douaumont. A fierce conflict—body to body, rifles that flashed in the face of the victim, bayonets perforce shortened for the thrust, gripping fingers clutching at the throat as men wrestled and swayed, roared in an indescribable tumult upon the Ornes-Louvemont Road. The defenders had made a supreme rally. The Germans fought like men who grasp at victory, maddened that it is withheld. The French fought like heroes, desperately outnumbered, who knew their duty was to die. When night fell the defense was still intact, but the French had withdrawn to their last line, covering Douaumont.

"On the morning of the 25th the German guns roared over white fields of snow, through veils of the softly falling flakes that fluttered inexhaustibly from the leaden sky. Their thunder swelled louder and even louder, as the batteries, which had changed position consequently upon the French withdrawal during the night, got to work, searching for their target, more or less accurately finding it, despite the difficulty of observation. Not a minute was to be lost. The anxious German staff knew that the reenforcements of their foes must be hurrying, hurrying. Some perhaps had already arrived. If night fell without definite victory, the morrow would surely see fresh masses against them, reinvigorating the defense. Victory to-day, complete victory, Douaumont captured, the pursuit pressed into the streets of Verdun, meant victory indeed.

"Mighty, therefore, was the effort. By noon every German battery was firing at its maximum. Under the leaden sky, over the white ground, in the still cold of a bitter frost, their thunder swelled and crashed, roaring in a never-ending frenzy. Eighteen German divisions were massed to break down all opposition. Already they had attacked; again and again. Again and again the rapid detonations of the French guns had leaped into the din, smiting desperately, frantically, to stay them. Over there, in the mist hung gullies of the plateau, on its bare open spaces between the woods the snow had ceased to be white, save where it fell freshly upon the huddled bodies of the fallen.

"In the afternoon the weather cleared somewhat. More distant views were possible. On the higher of the Twins of Ornes, the knolls just southwest of the Foret de Spincourt, stood the figure who, more than any other individual, would have to dare the answer for all the agony rolled out there before him; for all the agony that no eye could measure, spread over continents, crying to strange stars. Spiked helmet on his head, a long gray cavalry cloak wrapped about him, his field glasses held to his eyes by the right hand only, he gazed upon the now distant conflict. At his side stood a younger figure, his face masked also by the binocular.

"The great masses of woodland rose dark from the snow of the plain, a long stretch of undulating, climbing treetops. Beyond them the bare bulk of the plateau humped itself yet higher, dirty gray against the sky. It rose to a culminating knoll—Douaumont! All that bare plateau was whelmed in a drifting reek; but the highest point was like a volcano in eruption. Great founts of smoke shot up from it incessantly, spread in the air in heavy plumes that overhung. Everywhere the infantry stood thick, waiting. The cannonade mounted to a frightful intensity, appalling even the ears now habituated to it, bewildering the senses, troubling the sight. French shells came whining, screaming, rushing, to burst with loud crashes in the woodland arising on the right hand, on the road, and in the fields through which the infantry passed. Domes of dark smoke leaped upward from the earth, preceding the stunning, metallic detonation. White shrapnel puffs clustered thickly above the trees.

"Across the open space, from a whelm of smoke and noise in the distance, groups of gray men were running swiftly toward them, shouting inarticulately. Along the edge of the woods was a line of pickets. Their weapons rose to the shoulder. Sternly, every fugitive but those wounded was driven again into the fight. Those who hesitated, screaming under the menace of the rifle, dropped, shot. That night, in the great map-hung apartment, the war lords received the news that their further advance was barred. Next morning a furious counter-attack surrounded a handful of defenders in the fort for which they had paid so much. The French reinforcements had arrived."

They did not pass, and the days became weeks, weeks months, with the tide of battle ebbing and flowing, attack being met by attack, charge by countercharge, with the artillery continually blasting away the hills. In September the last assault of the Prussian veterans was halted on the northern slope of Fort Souville. Then the French took the offensive, and by the 18th of December they had regained more than they had lost, and the Germans, after weeks of almost constant fighting, were driven back to positions further away from Verdun than when they started 10 months before.

The city of Verdun is an utter ruin, crumbled and crushed and desolate. It has long since been abandoned by its inhabitants, and is closed to all civilians. The work of destruction varied with each house. Here the blast had swept squarely through the building, carrying into ruin behind in the yard the contents of the house. Perhaps the telephone still hung to the walls in just the same position it had hung when the owner of the house had received the message of danger and in precipitate haste had departed into the outer darkness. But the house next door had lost only its front wall, and you looked into the vacant rooms, still set with chairs and beds and all the domestic economy of the house, as if you were gazing upon some stage effect in a theater with the scene all prepared for a performance, and with you sitting before the footlights looking into the interior. Then a great gap in the row of houses, a gap filled with piles of bricks, where shells had wrought their havoc. Houses completely demolished—front walls, side walls, everything gone, the stones and bricks ground into dust, the ironwork twisted into shapeless masses, the timbers splintered and charred. House after house roofless, others with great holes in their tottering walls, and others still that had succumbed to the ravages of the storms and had toppled over into the streets, the wreckage blocking the passage.

The great battle of two years ago took place on the hills which encompass the city. We went out to Fort Souville, 5 miles from the citadel. The hill on which it stands has been blasted almost to its base. Everywhere are trenches, wire entanglements, camp equipment, broken gun carriages, shells, guns, hand grenades, and pieces of shell. Here is the most stupendous, the most terrible example of the waste and destruction of war imaginable. I have seen the ruins of Port Arthur, in Manchuria, and have been to the top of 303 Meter Hill, where the Russians and Japanese fought for supremacy, but what I saw at Verdun was ten times more awful than the ruins of Port Arthur. The whole hill has literally been blown to pieces and is a desolation of shell holes and craters, filled with cartridges, unexploded bombs, and pieces of rifles. The ghastly wastage is appalling. When the Germans made that terrible attack they swept on over these hills and came up the crests, line after line, like waves of the sea. Where once a forest had stood, now nothing but blackened stumps remain. Fifty yards from where we were on the summit was a shattered tree trunk, torn and blasted, which marks the high-water mark of the German advance. One remarkable occurrence of that onrush was related to us. The infantry attack had been preceded by a heavy artillery fire, which buried in the ground a French machine gun and its crew, over which swept the first line of Germans. These Frenchmen dug themselves out of the débris, set up their machine gun, and began firing at the Germans from the rear. Caught between two lines of fire, the advancing Germans, not knowing the strength of the attack, became panic stricken and fell backward. The few who managed to escape were glad to seek refuge behind their own lines. All of the men at this machine gun were killed, but they saved the day for France. Eight hundred thousand men laid down their lives at Verdun—500,000 Germans and 300,000 Frenchmen. We saw cemeteries containing 35,000 graves. I asked where the rest were buried, and the commandant replied, "Here they lie beneath your very feet, ground back into the elements." Five men were killed for every 9 square feet of earth on this blood-soaked hill! The battle field extended over about 3½ square miles; every hill and every valley tells its story of tragedy and death. A beautiful tribute was paid the memory of his sleeping comrades by the general, who in reverence saluted the graves as he passed. At the present time the firing line is several miles distant, but the French artillery all around us were firing at the German trenches and the German guns would respond. Every few minutes we heard the sharp report of a Boche gun as a shell was hurled toward us. There was a constant roar of artillery, our conversation at times being interrupted by the din. No greater glory will ever come to France than the victory of Verdun; no greater honor will ever come to a Frenchman than for him to be able to say "I, too, fought at Verdun." To-day, with all its devastation and ruin, with all the sacrifices of life, with all the sorrow it represents, Verdun stands forth as the greatest monument to courage, bravery, and determination of which the world knows. Let us hope, too, that it is the sepulcher for the hopes and ambitions of Prussian military autocracy.

From Verdun we went to the headquarters of the American Army, traveling all night in our machines, the darkness unbroken by any lights for fear of aeroplanes. Mile after mile we sped along, passing train upon train of army supplies, artillery, and regiments of soldiers. But instead of men and trucks and guns, the impression made upon one was of some vast machine of belts and moving benches that swiftly, steadily, and silently carried forward all this vast material, of things human and inanimate, to those hills beyond. We had dinner at Bar le Duc, an old French town, famous for jams and jellies. This once prosperous city of 30,000 is now only half populated, for the incessant bombardment of the town by German aircraft has driven away thousands of citizens. A large number of people were killed the day before we arrived. At the American Army headquarters we met the general staff who are planning the campaigns for our boys. They told us of their plans and how they were caring for the men and arranging the details of future battles. From there we went to Gen. Sibert's headquarters, passing en route Domremy, the birthplace of Joan of Arc. The little house in which she was born still stands, and in the room where she first saw the light of day is a cupbord she used and a few personal relics. Gen. Sibert took us to the training school where our soldiers are being taught trench warfare. They are building great cantonments here and everything is being done for the comfort and welfare of our men. I talked to many of them and they were all full of courage and snap, only chafing at the delay in getting to the front. I asked them how they were being fed and clothed, and they said "all right." "How are your quarters?" "Fair, but we realize the difficulty of getting supplies." "Have you any complaint?" Then they gathered around me, not a few but scores, and with one accord they said "Yes; the delay; for God's sake, give us a chance to fight!" Fear not, oh, my friends, of the result. Fear not for the honor of the flag, when these brave boys from America, meet man to man, the men on the other side. The "invisible" army of the United States, as the Kaiser has sneeringly called it, will rise to the full power of its splendid manhood and strike down the oppressor of humanity, for it has sounded the bugle which never knows retreat. On November 3, a few days before we arrived, three American soldiers had been killed, a number wounded and several made prisoners. They were the first on America's roll of honor. Let me quote the eloquent words of a French officer at the burial of these heroes, words that burn with a living light:

> Men! These graves, the first to be dug in our soil of France at but a short distance from the enemy, are as a mark of the mighty hand of our allies, firmly clinging to the common task, confirming the will of the people and the Army of the United States to fight with us to a finish, ready to sacrifice so long as it will be necessary, until final victory, for the noblest of causes—that of the liberty of nations, of the weak as well as the mighty. Therefore the death of this humble corporal and these two private soldiers appears to us in extraordinary grandeur.
>
> We ask, therefore, that the mortal remains of these young men be left here; be left forever to France. We will, in the fullness of peace, inscribe indelibly upon their tombs: "Here lie the first soldiers of the Republic of the United States to fall upon the soil of France in the cause of justice and liberty." And the passer-by will stop and uncover his head. Travelers through France and from France, from every Allied nation, from the United States, those who, in reverence of heart, shall come to visit these battle fields of France, will deliberately go out of their way to visit these graves, and bring to them tribute of respect and gratitude
>
> Corpl. Gresham, Pvt. Enright, Pvt. Hay, in the name of France, I thank you. God receive your souls. Adieu.

As reports at this hour come from the war-swept valley of the Somme—how welcome the news, how inspiring the tidings from those shell-torn fields of Picardy—telling us that the khaki-clad boys from America in ever-increasing numbers are standing shoulder to shoulder with the blue-clad boys of France. They are redeeming the pledge and the promise of 150 years ago, when the soldiers of America and France together triumphed in the cause of human freedom. Those laurel wreaths of victory, scented by hallowed memories of sympathy, friendship and sacrifice, will again entwine the banners of the great Republics as their sons march onward to triumph and to glory. In my car I carried a large American flag, and, as we went past squads of American soldiers, salute after salute was given to the Stars and Stripes. In referring to our boys let me quote from Gen. Odlum, of the Eleventh Infantry, Fourth Canadian Division, C. E. F.:

> We have recently had quite a number of American officers attached to us. They are splendid fellows. The Canadians have taken to them at once. We have a great deal of faith in them, and we wish we were working together. The Americans are making a splendid impression over here.

That night we slept at Chalons and in the morning proceeded to Amiens, in northern France, where we were met by British officials, who escorted us to a chateau used for the entertainment of visitors. On the way to Amiens, for several miles we drove along the Valley of the Marne. After crossing the Marne, we passed numbers of villages partly destroyed by shell and bomb fire. Crossing the Aisne River, we came upon a part of the battle field of the Aisne, where we saw wire entanglements and old trenches and piles of worn-out army paraphernalia. For miles these plains are marked by the devastation of war. Innumerable dugouts line the road on either side, just as they were when they were abandoned. Two miles north of the river we passed a village blown to atoms, with not a house standing; nothing but foundations, with broken walls a few feet high. I saw not a living thing in that city of once happy homes. Yes; I did see one living thing. It was a raven on the stump of a tree, the only inhabitant of this city that had not been destroyed by German artillery.

We lunched at Noyon, the birthplace of Calvin and the scene of the coronation of Charlemagne in 768 as King of the Franks. Owing to the rapidity of the German evacuation, this city had been but little damaged, but its destruction was evidently only postponed, for as I utter these words reports tell of the burning of the great cathedral and the ruin of the town. For ten days now the region between Noyon and Arras has been swept and torn by the world's greatest battle. There has been no such battle before. Along that sixty-mile front more men are fighting, more cannon are belching, more aeroplanes are maneuvering, more poisonous gases are killing, more machine guns are spurting, more deadly weapons are maiming, and more carnage is seen and experienced than ever before upon the earth. The desolated wastes, the broken trenches, the gaping shell holes are strewn with the dead and dying as thick as leaves after an autumnal frost. The losses are appalling and stupefying. The advancing lines by the hundreds are mowed down before the withering fire of the machine guns, but the gaps are filled and other lines take the place of those fallen, to be in their turn sacrificed to the ambition of the Kaiser.

That line of fire is creeping seaward like a demon of destruction, in a desperate effort to divide the allies and crush their lines of communication. It is a path of ruin and despair, of plunder and carnage, of rape and outrage, devouring, devasting, annihilating. The laws of humanity and of nations alike are ignored and trampled upon. Midst the roaring of cannon, the whining of shells, the cracking of rifles, rise the cries of the mangled, the terrified shrieks of children torn from their mother's side, the agonized moans of girls and women, victims of brutal lust. The floodgates of hell have been burst asunder! What is the answer? How can the tornado be stopped; how can civilization be rescued and humanity saved? There is but one answer—only one. Send forward 1,000,000 American soldiers, 3,000,000, yea, 5,000,000, if need be, and in the name of all that is sacred and holy we will do it! That thin line of defense has been bent, it may bend more, but it will never break. It is defended by men who do not give up, who may die but never yield.

In a cable dispatch just published by the Washington Post, the famous Franco-British charge which wrested Moreuil from the hands of the enemy is graphically described by a wounded French noncommissioned officer:

We had been in line since the night before, meeting almost uninterrupted attacks. Twice during the night we had to yield ground against overwhelming forces, but each time our counter attacks had restored the situation.

At dawn the Germans attacked with evergrowing violence, throwing two fresh divisions into battle. In spite of the prodigious tenacity of our British comrades and ourselves we had to yield one street after another, until we finally fell back 300 yards west of the little town.

At 9.45 the boches were just about to launch a fresh onslaught, but we got in first with a tremendous bayonet charge, in which Tommies and Poilus fought shoulder to shoulder. The shock took place on the edge of the town and was desperate hand-to-hand fighting, in which we soon gained the upper hand, though we were one against three.

The Canadians fought like lions. I saw two of them at grips with 10 boches. After putting half of their antagonists hors de combat with knives and bayonets, they disposed of the remainder by grabbing a bag of grenades carried by one of the boches and hurling one of the grenades into the midst of the group.

Two seconds later the ground was clear, and in no time we were in the middle of the town, but the enemy clung desperately to the eastern portion. By a clever turning movement from the south we soon had them at our mercy.

The cool determination of our allies was remarkable. They brilliantly avenged their comrades who fell in the first day's fighting. One huge Canadian, driving his bayonet into a boche, was heard to say, contentedly, "Six," and he went on to find the seventh. At 11 o'clock not a living boche was in Moreuil, but the streets were covered with corpses.

On leaving Noyon we entered the battle field of the Somme, where, in the late summer of 1916, it is said the English suffered 320,000 casualties and the Germans 500,000. We passed mile after mile of complete devastation, where hardly a house remains. A cold drizzling rain was falling, which added to the depressing effect of the frightfulness that stretched away in every direction. Just as night fell we reached a spot where once stood the city of Chaulnes, with a population of 10,000, now a mass of bricks, without even the semblance of a house standing. We stood on piles of débris at what was once the center of the city; the sight in that dead silence and in the gathering darkness was of the ravages of the demon of destruction, in his full power of annihilation. Not a sound save the sighing of the winds and the falling of the rain, where but a few months ago the laughter of children rang out; not a light piercing the night, where only a little while ago the lamp on the table, in even the humblest home, welcomed those children to the family fireside. Words fail to describe the anguish and the sorrow of it all. In one corner of a wall we saw three mounds marked by the tricolors of the Republic. They are the sentinels of the tomb watching over the city of the dead, where the solitude is broken only by the wind, moaning as it were, a requiem over the graveyard of homes and happiness; every gust whispering of suffering, sadness and sacrifice.

Before reaching the chateau we visited at Etaples, a Red Cross hospital under the direction and care of Americans. It was here that a few months ago a young Boston surgeon, Dr. McLeod, was wounded when the Germans bombed the hospital; both legs had been cut off, and, owing to his condition, it was necessary to operate upon him four times. I talked to him as he lay in his bed. He was cheerful and bright; in fact, this cheerfulness prevails in all of the hospitals I visited. To my oft-repeated queries of "How do you feel?" these brave boys would answer, "I am all right; don't bother about me; we are going to win." And in speaking of these wounded soldiers in the hospitals, let me read to you extracts from letters penned by a Canadian volunteer, written to his loved ones at home from his cot, where he lay with both legs paralyzed after the drive on Calais:

Capt. Morris, of the Queen's Own, of Toronto, led an attack on the Germans with two companies. He got an alignment of an X nature, got within 200 yards when his arm was shot. "Come on, boys," he said, and waved his arm, only to get a mortal wound.

He told of a joke, how one of the boys in writing to his grandmother related that they "drove out the Germans" from a certain town. "Drove them out," said the old lady. "If I had been there I would have made them walk."

Again he wrote:

It is noticeable that officers never ask men to go on a hazardous duty that they wouldn't do themselves. It was never too rainy a night for our captain to go out on the listening patrol.

Everything in England is self-sacrifice, cheerfully rendered, from newsboy to banker and railroad president. The farmers gather their eggs and produce to take them to place on the altars of their churches, to be forwarded to the hospitals and wounded. The children give their pennies to the tobacco funds, Belgian, or patriotic funds. It's a fine old world, and I sincerely hope St. Peter is blind, tired, and forgetful in opening the gates for any of our army.

Col. ———, of Toronto, called to his men, "Center close." Only 196 responded out of 887. The poor old colonel wept, the boys said, as he remarked, "Boys, there will be many sad homes in Canada to-night." He had fought with rifle and bayonet, too.

I never heard of the Scotch running away, or a Canadian. They stand as steady as wildcats. God, how they die! They must think and know they live again.

There is a Scotch corporal here who is much of a fatalist—always saying that when your time comes it comes. He was going over the top one night, and we twitted him about covertly putting an extra pistol in his pocket. He said, "Weel, Ah might meet wi' er German whose last day haed come."

By the way, have you heard the latest gossip about Kaiser Bill? The boys say they are going to bust the mainspring of the "Watch on the Rhine." We hear he has bought up all next year's crop of Georgia watermelons so he can feed his men on the Rhine.

The reckless courage and desperate, absolutely fearless fighting of the Scotch have earned for these men from the land of the heather the sobriquet of "Ladies from Hades." A story is told of two old French women when for the first time they beheld the kilts and tartans of a highland regiment. "Zay must be weemen," said one. "Non," replied her friend, "zay are men." "Ah," said the other after deep thought, "eet is ze famous Middlesex regiment."

From the chateau we visited Calais, the great distributing point for a part of the British Army. Here is where the supplies are received and sent forward—ammunition, food, and everything that is required at the front, from pins to projectiles. Many Chinamen are employed in these great storehouses loading and unloading ships and trains. They told us a very interesting story about these Chinamen, who, by the way, come from northern China. This town is frequently bombarded from the air. After these Chinamen had been here a short time they became panic-stricken and went to the boss and told him, "We came contract to work, no contract bomb." I do not know how they settled the strike, but the Chinamen remained. One day, when a very heavy bombardment was going on, an officer happened to look up at the trees and was amazed to find them full of Chinamen, who had conceived the idea that it was the safest place to be and the higher the better. To assist them in their scramble to the branches the Chinamen had left their shoes behind at the base of the trees. As the officer approached, he noticed one Chinaman coming to the ground, and he said to him, "What is the matter; are you coming down for your shoes?" "No," said the Chinaman, "me no wantee shoes, me wantee tallee tree."

At Calais are great reconstruction works where everything from the battle fields that can be of service is made over and sent back to the lines. Immediately after a battle the first consideration is the care of the wounded and then of the dead. After this the salvage corps, depending, of course, upon conditions, come with their lorries and gather up everything that is of value—helmets, rifles, gas masks, bicycles, wagons, artillery, and shoes. I was much impressed by one shop employing hundreds of persons, where they reconstruct 25,000 pairs of shoes a week. They are first disinfected and scrubbed, then sorted to cull out those too badly damaged to be renovated—these may be cut up for patches or made into shoe laces; they are then soaked in a compound to make them pliable, after which experts go over them and designate by chalk marks the repairs to be made, placing with each shoe the new part. After they have been half-soled or patched, they are again sorted, this time to bring the same sizes of rights and lefts together. The final treatment consists of a bath in oil which makes them strong and serviceable. Strangely enough the soldiers prefer these second-hand shoes to new ones. Many soldiers unfit for military duty, women, and prisoners of war are employed in these shops. The prisoners are paid a small wage and all whom we saw seemed happy and well satisfied. There were shops where rifles and machine guns are repaired, bicycles remade, helmets cleaned and restored, and wagons made ready for service. The heavy artillery and the brass cartridge cases are sent back to England, and we were told that by refilling and repriming old cases which, for instance, when new cost $36,000 a saving of $30,000 was effected. We saw them building large pigeon cotes on wheels, the use of homing pigeons being a very effective method of communication along the battle line. I have seen it stated that despite the use of shotguns by the enemy, 98 per cent of the carrier pigeons reach their destination. The breeding of these pigeons is now one of the war industries of Great Britain, and these well-trained birds are an important adjunct to the wireless, telegraph, telephone, wigwag, flash, bicycle, and messenger services employed in the transmission of orders and reports. From the salvage plants we went to the army bakery where two hundred thousand 2-pound loaves of white bread, made from American-grown wheat, are turned out every 24 hours. Every loaf is weighed and seasoned before being shipped to the front. While noncombatants are required to use war bread, the soldiers very properly are supplied with wheat loaves.

France is also doing wonderful work in her restoration plants, saving annually millions of dollars by the utilization of this jetsam of battle, which in the early stages of the war was considered worthless. In and around Le Mans are establishments where they renovate monthly 50,000 uniforms and overcoats, 125,000 undergarments, 3,500 pairs of shoes, 60,000 pairs of trench boots, 270,000 sheepskin capes, 25,000 steel helmets, and 120,000 pieces of equipment. In addition, each month there are made from clothing that is not repairable 100,000 pairs of slippers, 50,000 caps, 120,000 canteen cases, 75,000 shoe laces, 10,000 wash rags, and 20,000 cloth bags for bread loaves.

If some one should ask me as to one of the many things that impressed me from a business man's standpoint, I would say that it was the system with which this war is being conducted, not only from a military standpoint but from an industrial one. It is organized efficiency on a grand scale, where nations, not armies, are making a business of warfare. Great Britain, France, and Italy realize they are not fighting a war as wars have been fought in the past. To-day it means mobilization of all man power and the utilization of all resources. Sacrifice and economy are synonymous terms in this great struggle.

One of the most impressive facts along the battle fronts as well as behind the lines is the order which prevails everywhere and in everything. There is neither confusion nor hurry. Every man has his appointed task to do, and he does it methodically. Nothing is left to chance, for every action of the soldier, every movement of the guns or supply trains, every action on the land or in the air, goes forward according to a regular, closely dovetailed plan. When a barrage is lifted and the charge takes place, it is timed to the second, the watches of the commanding officers being regulated to the exact time. Here let me deviate a moment from my narrative and speak of the deadly gases, the horror of the trenches. A new chapter of warfare was opened when the Germans introduced the use of poisonous gases. It was at the second battle of Ypres that this instrument of death was inaugurated. They first used large steel tanks containing the liquefied gas. These were set up on the outer edge of the trenches with the nozzles pointed in the direction of the British lines. When a favorable breeze sprang up the gas was released, which was carried down with the wind. The method of installing the gas containers was soon recognized, for the preparations were always visible, and it became easy to destroy them by artillery fire, which frequently did great damage to the Germans themselves. The present method is to fill shells with the liquid gas, which are fired from the guns in the same way as other shells. For short range a special gun has been devised.

Upon our return to the chateau from Calais we had the pleasure of meeting Gen. Fawkes and the judge advocate general of the British Army. The next morning we drove to Arras, which has been badly damaged by shell fire. The great cathedral is a mass of ruins, only one arch remaining over the lofty aisle. Wherever there had been a bronze tablet or statue in any church or upon any monument, it had been chiseled off by the Germans for the manufacture of cartridges and fuzes. Many troops are stationed in Arras, it being close to the firing line. From here we went to the American engineers' camp, some distance away. There we met the boys from home, many of them from the city of New York, and it was a keen pleasure for us to meet them and, I feel, for them to have met us. They were comfortably housed in galvanized roofed barracks, ceiled with wood and warmed with stoves. They were happy in their condition and satisfied with their equipment and food. They were laying railroads, digging ditches, and building bridges, preparing for the great forward move which will mean victory to our arms. We went from here to Vimy Ridge, passing on the way innumerable dugouts and abandoned barracks. I was much amused by many of the signs in these barracks, for the British and Canadians had marked the crude streets with names from home. One street was called "Picadilly," another the "Strand," while yet another was "Manitoba Boulevard." One sign in particular caught my attention. It read, "To Petrograd," with a finger pointing to that far-off capital.

In one of the early campaigns, when the British were using more oriental troops than at present, it is related how a stranded Sikh, arms upraised, walked over to the German first-line trench. He had been surprised in a "starlight" in "No Man's Land," and with oriental cunning decided he had no recourse but to surrender. Upon reaching the Boche trench he assumed an attitude of high glee at being freed from bondage (?). Scores of his comrades, dissatisfied and in revolt, were ready to desert, he said. The Germans were delighted at the news and gave him a fine night and suggested his going back to the allied lines to bring over his comrades. He reached his own first-line trench, telling his officer in command of his adventure and ruse to get back to his friends. For this he was gazetted for a commission.

We saw troops going into the lines and troops returning from the trenches, the latter very grimy and dirty; but they were swinging along the roads in that happy-go-lucky way which tells that they are in this fight to the finish. We climbed up Vimy Ridge, passing by a great gun which had taken part in the bombardment only the day before. From the summit of Vimy we obtained a splendid view of Lens and could see the German lines in the distance. The hill was a mass of shell holes filled, as at Verdun, with the relics of war. In one hole I saw the skeleton of a poor soldier whose life had been given in the cause for which he fought. The uniform was so faded and tattered that I could not tell whether it was Canadian or German. The fleshless hand still grasped a book, torn and weather worn. I reached down and found that the last thing which the glazing eyes of that poor soldier had beheld as the twilight of life had faded into the night of eternal sleep, had been a message from the Holy Bible. We could see the flash of the German guns, hear the shriek of the shells, followed by the detonation of the explosion. We could see where the shells struck, for great masses of brick and dust would be thrown into the air as the projectiles exploded. The allies' guns would respond, and flash after flash, followed by the roar, came to us as we stood there watching this scene of actual warfare. Above us in the clear sky many airships circled about, taking observations and noting the effect of the artillery fire. Vimy Ridge will forever stand on the roll of honor of Canada's fight for home and freedom. Here the blood of the Dominion soldiers was given like water when these brave boys from across the border marched up those heights and drove back the Germans. Vimy Ridge will stir the blood of Canadians for generations to come, for it represents the heroism and courage and the supreme sacrifice of Canadian manhood in the great struggle to make the "world safe for democracy."

The next day we went to Albert, which has been only partly destroyed. The great modern cathedral, however, is a mass of ruins. This famous church of Notre Dame de Bebrieres is crowned with a statue of the Virgin, which has bent forward and is now hanging from the campanile with the face of the Madonna gazing on the ground. The French have the belief that the statue will not fall until the war ends in their triumph. From there we went to Fricourt, or at least to what had been that city, for it exists no longer.

The whole country shows the effect of the battles that have been fought here. For miles and miles it is nothing but desolation, with the ruins of houses, broken trees, and implements of agriculture standing out in the weather, going to decay. In many places in this valley of the Somme the land has been so torn up that it is not possible to raise enough to support a single family. It must all be leveled and cleared of the débris before people can live here again. We walked over many parts of this battle field, picking up pieces of shell, grenades, and belts. We went down into many of the dugouts, great rooms excavated in the chalky earth, 30 or 40 feet below the surface. Everything is just as it was when the battle swept over the field, save for the rescue work of the hospital staff and the activities of the salvage corps. The underlying strata of the ground along the Somme is chalk, which, under the heavy downpours, is turned into slimy mud. As John Buchan wrote:

It filled the ears and eyes and throats of our men; it plastered their clothing and mingled generously with their diet. Their grandfathers who had been at Sebastopol could have told them something about mud, but even after India and South Africa the mire of the Somme seemed a grievous affliction.

Let me give you a description of this battle, where Briton and German contended for mastery.

"All night long, without cessation, the batteries of both sides, knowing exactly their opponent's range, fired perpetually. All night long searchlight bombs were thrown. All night long golden and red and yellow streams of flame or the sudden jagged flash of an explosion lit up the black smoke of burning buildings and fields in the valley or showed the white pufflike low clouds of the bursting shrapnel. Not for an instant did the roar diminish, not for a second was the kindly veil of night left unrent by a fissure of vengeful flame. Yet all night long, as ceaselessly as the great guns poured out their angry fury, so did men pour out their indomitable will, and in that hell light of battle flame engineers labored to construct bridges, small bodies of troops moved forward to join their comrades in the trenches who had been able to make a footing the day before, and all night long those ghastly yet merciful accompaniments of a battle field—the ambulance corps—carried on their work of relief. The searchlights swept up and down the valley like great eyes that watched to give direction to the venom of war."

At Peronne we visited the citadel and saw the city a complete mass of ruins, where the devastation had been planned and consummated by the German Army. Some shelling, as at Albert, had been done by the attacking allies, but the bulk of the destruction had been wrought by the Germans when they evacuated the place. The favorite way of demolishing a house was to blow out the front wall, which would let in the elements and eventually cause the whole building to collapse. Street after street presented the terrible spectacle of frontless houses, and here in the deserted rooms we saw beds, bureaus, and chairs, with the carpets still on the floors and pictures on the walls. I went into many of these former homes and saw hanging on the hooks clothing and hats, just as they were left when the poor people were driven out. In one house I saw lying on a table a child's tin horse, dented and marred by the little infant who had played with it. Where, my friends, to-day is that little tot, and where is its mother and the thousands of girls and women who once lived in this happy valley?

From here we went to Bapaume, another town deliberately destroyed. The huge cathedral, as in other cities, had been demolished. While we were here we could hear the bombardment at Cambrai, for we were not many miles away from the firing line. It was here that squadrons of tanks, those terrible engines of war adapted from American tractors, were used with such deadly effect. The general in command of the corps sent before the battle to every officer and man of the tanks this order of the day: "The Tank Corps expects that every tank this day will do its damnedest." They did. As the pilot of one of them told me, they played "merry hell." "They moved forward in small groups, several hundred of them, rolled down the German wire, trampled down its lines and then crossed the deep gulf of the Hindenburg main line, pitching their noses downward as they drew their long bodies over the parapets, rearing up again with their long forward reach of body and heaving themselves on to the ground beyond. The German troops knew nothing of the fate that awaited them until out of the gleam of dawn they saw these great numbers of gray, inhuman creatures bearing down upon them. A German officer whom I saw to-day, one out of thousands of prisoners who had been taken, described his own sensations. At first he could not believe his eyes. He seemed in some horrible nightmare and thought he had gone mad. After that from his dugout he watched all the tanks trampling about, crunching down the wire, heaving themselves across his trenches and searching about for machine-gun emplacements, while his men ran about in terror, trying to avoid the bursts of fire, crying out in surrender."

On our way back to Amiens we stopped at the Butte de Warlencourt, which the French Government has reserved as a national monument. It is a low salient, only about 45 feet high, and here was witnessed some of the most terrific fighting of all. Nothing has been touched on this blood-soaked hill. Shells and rifles lie about just as they fell, and dead men too; a simple cross crowned with a helmet or twisted rifle marks the spot where a nameless hero, a lost but not forgotten son or brother, sleeps the eternal sleep. Graves, graves everywhere; the rude mounds marked by yet ruder crosses, melancholy sentinels standing, here alone, there in groups, and beyond in thousands; at the bottom of shell craters, beside the highway, on some lonely hilltop:

On Fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead.

Frenchmen and Germans are at peace at last in the sleep of the ages. Graves of the soldiers of France are decorated with rosettes of the tricolors of the Republic, tributes of a national patriotic society. Each German grave is marked by a cross on which is written, "Here lies a German hero."

The view from the top is awesome. Ruins everywhere as far as the eye can see, an unbroken stretch of desolation, destruction, chaos, with the land so cut up that one can walk over it only with the greatest difficulty. Shell holes and craters, craters and shell holes crowd one upon the other in this inferno of man's making. Every foot of land scarred with pits like pox marks, as if nature herself, under the carnage wrought on her bosom, had sickened and died of this dread disease. Near by were several abandoned tanks, those great caterpillars which have been so effective in many of the engagements. We saw one of them that had been destroyed by an explosion, which had burned the interior and, of course, killed the crew. In front of it were the graves of the men who had manned it. There they lie by that great engine of war, with the machine they operated standing as their monument! Farther on was a great crater, about 30 feet deep and 200 feet in diameter, the result of the industrious work of the British sapper. Above this hole at one time stood some German barracks, but when the explosion took place soldiers, wagons, and mules were thrown into the air, lost forever to the German cause. Men are not only killed in these mine explosions but their bodies are dismembered—bleeding fragments of men and animals, equipment, and trench paraphernalia mingle in a gruesome heap. As an officer who had seen the explosion said to me, "Some of those Germans haven't come down yet."

An observer with the Australians has described the unceasing bombardment on the Somme as follows: "Hour after hour, day and night, with increasing intensity as the time went on, the enemy rained heavy shells into the area. Now he would send them crashing in on a line south of the road, eight heavy shells at a time, minute after minute, followed by a burst of shrapnel. Now he would place a curtain straight across this valley or that, until the sky and landscape were blotted out, except for fleeting glimpses seen as through a lift of fog. Day and night the men worked through it, fighting the horrid machinery far over the horizon as if they were fighting Germans hand to hand; building up whatever it battered down, buried some of them, not once, but again, again, and again. What is a barrage against such troops? They went through it as you would go through a summer shower, too proud to bend their heads, many of them, because their mates were looking. I am telling you of things I have seen. As one of their officers said to me, 'I have to walk about as if I liked it; what else can you do when your own men teach you to?'"

One of the striking features of the battle line are the huge concrete "pill boxes" in which the Germans mount machine guns. These deadly bomb-proof structures, with walls many feet in thickness, connect with the communicating trenches and are always a serious menace to charging troops.

Even at the risk of tiring you with a narrative which I feel is already too extended, I can not omit mentioning the noble work being done by the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, and other kindred organizations. This war, which is a battle of nations, fighting not alone on the firing line, but throughout their length and breadth, calls to humanity for help, and the Red Cross has answered generously, ably and fully. Its workers minister to the sick and wounded, reconstruct villages, purge towns of disease, supply farm implements and seeds, and carry on relief wherever it is needed. It has established canteens and bathhouses on the firing line, supplied milk to babies and food and clothing to the old and feeble. In the operating rooms, in tuberculosis wards, in tenements, in devastated villages, in stricken homes, it has made France, Belgium, and Italy know that America from across the seas is at their side and will be with them till the end. In addition, and primary to the practical relief to the military and civilian population of our allies, the Red Cross stands ready to care for our own soldiers and sailors on duty, wherever and whenever that care may be needed. It is cooperating with the Army and Navy for the protection of the health and welfare of soldiers in camps and cantonments and has established agencies for the care of dependent families of men in the naval and military services.

Closely allied to the Red Cross are the Young Men's Christian Association and Knights of Columbus organizations. They are the foster mothers to these far-away boys of ours, supplying the home influences to the men in uniform, giving to our valiant fighters a spark of spiritual life, cheering them in the performance of their duty, comforting them in their loneliness, and stimulating their mental and social instincts under proper guidance. It is impossible to more than touch upon the varied activities of these splendid institutions; of the hotels and restaurants maintained for soldiers arriving or on leave of absence; the huts with dining rooms, sleeping accommodations, and reading rooms supplied with American papers and magazines where men can read and write to their families at home; the portable lunch counters awaiting incoming trains; the rest stations and bathhouses near the front; refreshment booths; the canteens which supply wants; the entertainments and moving-picture shows; the circulating libraries, concerts, lecture courses, religious and educational classes; sports and sight-seeing trips; and the ever-present offer of friendship, sympathy, and assistance to all in distress or perplexity. In the lounging room of the Paris Y. M. C. A. I overheard two soldiers talking. They were discussing guide books, a number of which were lying upon the table. One had been studying the historic places in Paris and asked his comrade if he knew of a good guide for Berlin. "Yes," said the other, "General Pershing."

On our return to Paris we were given receptions by the President of the French Republic and by the Speaker of the Chamber of Deputies, as well as by the premier. Nothing was left undone to make our visit both instructive and enjoyable. From Paris we went to Belgium—desolate, almost annihilated Belgium. Belgium as it exists to-day is only 26 miles long and 6 miles wide. It is not as large as my own Nassau County, but there in that little remnant of a nation resides Albert, the heroic King of Belgium, who will not leave his native soil. It was on his birthday that we arrived in Belgium, and he invited us to come to his simple house. We were dressed in our trench clothes. I had on a pair of blue overalls, heavy tan shoes, an old flannel shirt, and a sweater; and I assure you it was hardly court attire for a reception. But the King was glad to see us, because he knew we came as sympathizing friends and that we were representing the power, the prestige, and the purposes of the great Republic of the west, with its 110,000,000 of free and determined people. That great democrat, King Albert, 6 feet 6 inches, stood in his home and welcomed us in a most democratic manner. He said, "We are going to continue the fight until every Belgian is killed and Belgium is no more." I asked him what message I could take back with me to America. He laid his hand on my shoulder, and said, "Take this message to your people: Tell them that without their generous aid my people would have starved to death, and from the bottom of my heart I thank them." When we left the headquarters of the King it was about 6 o'clock in the evening, and as we came out into the darkness the sky to the northeast was bespangled by the flash of guns on the firing line and there was an incessant roar of cannonading which shook the ground on which we stood.

We went to our hotel but a few miles from the line and at 2.30 a. m., my room being on the side of the hotel facing the line, I was awakened by the roar of a terrific bombardment. It kept up for 45 minutes as the big guns along the battle front saluted each other with deadly shells. We had breakfast at 4.30 and with darkness still about us set out for the trenches. We arrived about daybreak at the point where we were to enter the communicating trench which led to the front line on the Dixmude sector. We found that the bombardment of the morning had destroyed many parts of these trenches. There were great holes in the road, and a few dead horses were lying about. We saw, too, soldiers who had been killed within an hour being carried back to the cemetery. We were all provided with gas masks and steel helmets in case of an attack, for we were going to the frontier of "No Man's Land." The fields we passed were desolate, ground torn up, fences down, trees broken and shattered, for the country surrounding this section of the line has been for months in the war zone. Every house had long since been pounded into fragments, the only habitations being the rude improvised shelters erected by artillerymen from the débris that lay scattered about.

Just as we entered the communicating trench two gray German airships swept over our heads, and as our costumes were of a different color than the uniforms of the Belgium soldiers, we felt certain that our presence was known. The trenches were a mass of mud, slimy and treacherous. Crude wooden revetments lined the bottom of the zigzag ditches, over which we slipped and stumbled. We passed many dugouts—concrete bombproof structures—in which men were sleeping on straw or blankets spread on the wet ground. Here a few soldiers performing their morning toilet from a bucket of water, there a group preparing breakfast over an improvised stove of stones and discarded tin cans. Everything was mixed with dirt, mud, and slimy water, but the men were cheerful and bright and looked healthy despite their comfortless surroundings. They all saluted us, for they knew we were Americans and that our Nation had come to help their crushed country.

As most of us were fairly tall we had to keep our heads well down, for these trenches were built for Belgian soldiers, who are not as tall as we, and we knew that "somewhere in Flanders"—and that less than 100 yards away—the Boche had declared an open season for Americans. These trenches are different from those we had seen elsewhere, for as the land here is low and wet they are built above ground, being constructed by piling up bags of dirt which are reenforced by wooden stakes. "No Man's Land" was a great lake, with several feet of water and mud between the opposing lines, for the Belgians, to prevent an infantry attack, had flooded the land between the trenches. Finally we came to the front line, with the Germans only 40 yards away. We were among the men charged with the duty of holding the line or dying in the attempt. Then came to me that admonition of Demosthenes to the Athenians:

> Go yourselves, every man of you, and stand in the ranks and either a victory beyond all victories in its glory awaits you or falling you shall fall greatly and worthy of your past.

Trench mortars, machine guns, rifles, hand grenades, cartridges, gas masks, helmets all in place ready for instant use. That we had been discovered was soon evident, for we had hardly reached the front trench before the Germans opened fire. We crouched down in a heap as the machine guns and the snipers concentrated their fusillade upon us. Zip, zip, the vicious bullets flew over our heads or with a thud embedded themselves in the soft dirt of the trench a foot or two from us. We were spattered by mud, but fortunately none were hit. Then they opened with howitzers. The whine of the shells is an uncanny sound, half moan, half screech, and it is a peculiar sensation to have these projectiles, intended for your destruction, come screaming toward you. First you hear the sound on the left, then on the right, then it seems as though the shell were directly overhead, the roar gaining in intensity until the shell strikes the earth. Fortunately all of the projectiles passed over us and exploded in the mud several hundred yards away. The captain who had escorted us to the front deemed it unwise for us to remain longer, so we retired to safer ground. The one great trouble about these visits to the trenches, aside from the personal danger, is the fact that after the visitors leave, the poor soldiers who remain at their posts must endure the bombardment. While we were in this front line an officer was killed just next to us and a soldier wounded.

That morning's bombardment—the one which had awakened us—had destroyed parts of the communicating trench, leaving great gaps fully exposed to the enemy's fire. Coming in, as there was no firing, we did not realize our danger, but on our return, knowing that the Boche were aware of our presence, these gaps became real danger spots. We would wait a moment on one side of the broken trench and then throw ourselves across the opening in the hope that the sharpshooters would not have time to bag us. At one gap I asked the captain where one of the machine guns which was playing on us, was located. He said "Just over there where you see the old foundations of a mill." I peered around the open space—I can assure you my head did not protrude very far—and looked in the direction the captain indicated. There, sure enough, about 60 yards away I saw the machine gun resting on the wall of the old mill and could see the flames spurt from the barrel as the gunner blazed away at us. We then visited the northern part of the line and met the major in command. He invited us to his palace. We found it a miserable little lean-to, built against the only remaining wall of a house, just large enough for two or three people to squeeze into. We told him that after the war we would visit him in his headquarters in Brussels. "Surest thing you know," he replied in perfect American, and we felt very much at home.

From the trenches we went to a Belgian observation station, from which they send out aeroplanes equipped with photographic apparatus to make pictures of the enemy lines. We saw photographs taken from high elevations, and it was most interesting to hear the officers explain from these photographs the various objects that were shown and which to the untrained eye meant nothing. Bidding good-by to our Belgian friends, we went to Boulogne and took the steamer back to England. Most of our party returned to America immediately upon reaching London, but two or three of us remained and went to Scotland, where we were accorded a review of the great fleet. By strange good fortune we had the opportunity of seeing, not only the fleet at anchor, but the return of a large number of the ships from a victorious encounter in the North Sea. The motor launch on which we were crowded plowed her way through water, spume, and spindrift; when suddenly the curtain of mist and spray was broken by the form of a big oncoming gray ship. More followed, and then more, destroyers, battle cruisers, big men-of-war, steaming quietly along on the crested waters. Then, from the turrets and engine rooms of the ships at anchor men poured to the decks and the scene was alive with seamen, cheering the boys on the returning ships. Silent, grim, and battle scarred, coming in with perfect formation through those ships at rest, and as they passed one ship after another, the crews raised tremendous cheers, cheers which carried over the gale. Here a cap was raised from the bridge, here an arm waved in recognition, but absolute silence from the fighting, victorious forces. Signs of burnt paint and marks of shell fire and muzzles of uncovered guns, yellow and brown, told of the fight.

Our next visit was Glasgow, where we had the opportunity of seeing the shipping of the port and the great shipyards on the Clyde, where they are turning out in ever-increasing quantities destroyers, submarines, aeroplanes, tanks, and munitions of all kinds. At the Singer Sewing Machine Co. works we saw them manufacturing shells and fuses, nearly all the work being done by women. Great 16-inch shells, weighing, in the rough, a ton were handled by these women as though they had been pieces of cord wood, so perfectly adapted are the lifting devices. I am not at liberty to state the weekly output of these plants, but if Germany thinks Great Britain is short of munitions, she will have to revise her estimates.

From Glasgow we went to Carlisle, and there saw the wonderful powder plant that employs 20,000 persons, one-half of whom are women. Eighteen months ago there was nothing here but a green pasture. To-day over 60,000 people have their homes in this locality. They have schools, lecture rooms, stores, theaters, bakeries, electric lights—everything that a complete city has. We went through the houses where the employees live. The girls, if they are without their families, are quartered in large wooden buildings called "cubicals," one-story dormitories accommodating 96 girls, each in charge of a matron and an assistant. Each girl has her own little room, with partition extending part way to the ceiling, furnished with a bed, rocking chair, and bureau. There is in each cubical a general assembly room for reading and social meetings. Everything in this plant is carried on with mathematical precision. Every ounce of powder is an exact ounce, for any variation in the quantity anywhere along the line would upset the range of the guns on the front. At first they had great difficulty in making the girls realize the importance of accuracy, and many cases were reported of overcharges. When spoken to, the girls would reply, "What difference does it make? It's all for Jock, and a little extra good measure will help him win the fight." Here let me pay my tribute to the splendid womanhood of Great Britain; to the women who, irrespective of social position or financial standing, are doing their part in the great struggle. No sacrifice is too great, no hardship too severe, whether it be in the hospitals, in the workshops, on the farms, in the offices, their determination, their zeal, and their courage surmounts all difficulties and nerves them to face sorrow and suffering without a murmur. Ambassador Page related an instance which happened to him. He knew a lady and gentleman of rank and wealth, who had an only son. This boy volunteered in the army. One day Mr. Page met the lady at a reception, and with a smile on her face she came up to him and said, "Mr. Page, have you heard of the great honor which has come to my husband and myself?" He, knowing of the promise of the boy and the brightness of his future as well as of the hopes they had in him as the heir of their title and wealth, supposed, of course, she referred to some promotion. He said, "No; I have not heard of the honor." She replied, "Our boy has been killed fighting for his country." My colleagues, when you think of what this must have meant to that woman, when you think of what the heartache must have been as she faced the future, you can realize what courage means when the supreme test comes, and her case is only one of thousands. From the mansion to the hut, the poor and the wealthy, the high and the low, meet on common ground in the great democracy of patriotism and death.

Let me recount another pathetic story, or at least one showing the splendid spirit of these magnificent women. While in Flanders I became acquainted with an auto driver, a young soldier who had been in the regular army, had been wounded and honorably discharged, and then had volunteered as chauffeur. He asked me which way I was going home, and I told him by way of Liverpool. He said, "I have a mother in Chester, and would it be asking too much if you would go and see her?" I told him if I were to be in Liverpool I would also be in Chester and that I would call on his mother. I did so, and found the address he had given me in a very lowly part of the city. It was a simple house, an humble home. I knocked at the door and an elderly woman with pleasant face and kindly manner greeted me. Sleeves rolled up and a great apron showed that she was at work in her kitchen. I told her I came with a message from her boy, and her face became radiant as the sun this morning. She invited me to the kitchen where she was preparing dinner, and I met there her five daughters, who had come home from their work to take lunch with their mother. I told her her boy was safe and happy, and had sent his love to her and his sisters. She said, "Oh, he is a good boy; he is the hope of my life. I have been his father as well as his mother, because my husband died when he was only two years old. When the war came he was determined to do his part and enlisted. I did not try to stop him. After his honorable discharge on account of his wounds I thought perhaps he would stay at home, but he was not satisfied because he thought there was still some work he could do, and so he enlisted in the auto service. I did not argue with him, for I knew where his heart was and mine was there too; it was the call of duty." She told me that her five daughters were all in the service, one in an ammunition plant, one in a gun factory, one a conductor on a trolley car. I have forgotten what the other two were doing, but they were all doing their "bit" in the war; and then the mother said, "Husband gone, one son at the front, five girls at work, my only regret is that I have no more children to give in the cause of my country."

Let me pay my tribute to the noble womanhood of America, to the mothers and sisters heroically doing their part in the contest, who by thought and action, by generous deeds and cheerful words are upholding the traditions inherited from an historic past. They are steadfast and resolute in the trials of to-day, as were their forbears in the dark days of the Revolution and when the thunder from southern battle fields rolled over the land. The splendid organizations of women, who are giving their strength and their hearts to war work, are mighty factors in the great struggle, and the Nation thanks them for what they are doing.

Each one is doing her part the best she knows how, conscientiously, courageously. With her thoughts of the boys at the front, her patient fingers ply the needle for their comfort, her gentle hands soothe their brows when wounds have laid them low, her cheerful words, though her heart be breaking, speeds them on their path of duty. You can always depend upon the loyalty and the patriotism of the American woman. Oh, I know the anguish of the mother when the call comes for her boy, and my heart feels for you in your sorrow. I know that the stars upon the service flag have been wet with your tears, but those tears of grief will become tears of gladness when your boy comes marching home in victory, and until that longed-for day comes, may you bear with fortitude the sacrifice you have made and be sustained in your loneliness by the consolation that you have given your all for the flag. I received a letter a few weeks ago from a woman on Long Island. I will not give her name. No lettered tablet or sculptured stone will ever be reared to her memory. Her monument will be the consciousness of duty valiantly performed. She said, "I am not writing to you to complain; I am not writing to ask a favor, but as my Representative in Congress I want you to know my position in this great conflict. I have a husband in the Navy and two boys in the Army, and my nightly prayer is that they may be spared long enough to be of service to their country, and my only regret is that I have not more to offer."

Fellow Congressmen, fellow Americans, that is the spirit of the hour to-day in France and Great Britain, in Canada, in Australia, in Italy. It is the spirit of freedom and liberty ringing out from brave hearts. That is the spirit which inspired Washington and the patriots of our own Revolution. It is the spirit, too, of America of the present, calling to her sons and daughters in this hour of trial. That is the spirit that impels men to follow onward and plant the Old Flag forward in the fight.

Before leaving London, I spent several hours with Admiral Sims, discussing the part being played by the Navy of the United States in the great conflict. He is an officer of unquestionable ability, possessing a thorough grasp of the situation and it was gratifying to learn from British naval men, of the high esteem in which he was held by them. The snap and dash of the American is typified in Admiral Sims and by all the officers under his command. Despite submarines and mines, despite raiders and aeroplanes, whether lying ready for an offensive move or convoying ships across the war zone, wherever they may be on the surging seas, the navies of the allied nations are still the masters of the wave.

We found Liverpool congested with ships, and for three days after we boarded our vessel, owing to the submarine activities, we laid at anchor in the Mersey. Finally in the teeth of a gale, at midnight we sailed out of the harbor and after a most tempestuous voyage, losing one man overboard and being struck by a huge wave, which carried away part of the bridge and stove in a deckhouse, reached again the homeland.

I feel that the following editorial from the Washington Post of March 9 is most expressive of the present situation:

Without minimizing any of the advantages which Germany has gained by the temporary conquest of Russia and Roumania, it is well to take a broad view of the situation in which the belligerents find themselves. Is Germany now so much more powerful that the outcome of the war is rendered doubtful?

Let it be granted that Germany can help herself to anything movable in Russia. Let it be assumed that Germany can actually rule Russia, at any rate for the next year or two, to the extent that the Russians will not be able to revolt. Let it be assumed that Japan will not come to the aid of the allies. What is the situation in which Germany finds herself?

The outstanding fact, paramount over all others, is that Germany is unable to escape a life and death battle with three enemies who are impregnably armed against her two great weapons, corruption and brute force. Two of these enemies have been tested by Germany's strongest blows and Germany has failed to bring them to their knees. The third is an enemy more populous and resourceful than the other two, and its strength is fresh and unwearied. Broadly speaking, it has not yet begun to draw upon its immense reservoirs of man power and natural resources. Its war passions are not yet aroused to the point where obstacles to victory are brushed aside like chaff, whether these obstacles be enemy forces or misfits in the domestic war machine.

Six months ago the Post observed that even if Germany should completely disable Russia and gain access to all Russian resources she would still have to face the United States and defeat this Nation in battle before she could permanently hold an inch of soil that is not her own. That is the case now. The downfall of Russia has not enabled Germany to extricate herself from the inevitable. She must give an account to the civilized world for the crimes she has committed. The agents of the world, executing the summons upon Germany, are France, Great Britain, and the United States. There is no possibility of dodging this summons.

Germany tried by the strategy of the tiger's leap to pounce upon and tear France to pieces. She failed. Then she massed her brute force and attempted to hack France to death at Verdun. She failed.

Germany will fight with all the ferocity of a tiger. She will use every weapon, every stratagem, and every ounce of strength she possesses. But she will fight in vain. The France that balked her twice stands indomitable, better armed and better skilled than ever. The British armies are there, stronger than ever, keener for fight, more advantageously posted than before. The Americans are there in respectable numbers, the advance guard of an army that will never cease to march upon Germany until victory sounds the call for peace.

That is the situation. It foretells nothing but glory and victory for the hosts that are battling for the right. They are armed with a spirit that Germany does not understand and can not find weapons against. Intrigue is as powerless as bullets in trying to destroy this chief arm of the allies. For once in the sad history of mankind right is supported by might and liberty is armed with death. Every lover of liberty throughout the universe should rejoice that the hour is at hand when the powers of evil will no longer be able to elude the grasp of the avenger.

You will ask me, how many men will it take to win this war, and I answer I do not know. You will ask me, how long will it take to win this war, and again I answer, I do not know. But I do know that no matter how many men it will take or how long it will last, this war will go on, backed by all the resources and by all the men of America, until we win it for justice, humanity and righteousness.

Autocratic Prussia has flung to the nations its challenge of world supremacy, and democratic America hurls back its defiance, a tocsin that echoes from trench to trench along the battle line from the Adriatic to the Channel. You shall not crucify civilization upon the iron cross of one man's ambition.

The pathway we will follow will be a pathway of sacrifices, sorrows, and hardships; it will be a road which will lead by the graves of sons and brothers, heroes who have fallen in the fight. It will pass down into the darkness of suffering and into the shadows of tears, but it is the pathway to that victory which will mean a permanent peace and the supremacy of the principles of our great Republic now and for evermore.

THE SONS OF THE FLAG ADVANCE.

Here's to the Blue of the wind-swept North
When we meet on the fields of France,
May the spirit of Grant be with you all
As the Sons of the North advance.

And here's to the Gray of the sun-kissed South
When we meet on the fields of France,
May the spirit of Lee be with you all
As the Sons of the South advance.

And here's to the Blue and Gray as one
When we meet on the fields of France,
May the spirit of God be with us all
As the Sons of the Flag advance.

—George Morrow Mayo.

ADDENDUM.

Having had many inquiries in relation to the resources and fighting strength of the nations at war, as well as to the numbers of killed and wounded, I give below a series of tables, some of which were published by the Bankers' Trust Co., of New York. A few of the estimates were compiled by the New York Times. Definite figures as to the number of men now under arms, or of those killed and wounded, can not be ascertained and at best are largely approximations:

Area, population, wealth, and debt, Aug. 1, 1917.

ALLIES.

	Area, square miles.	Population, 1914.	National wealth (000,000 omitted).	National debt (000,000 omitted).
United States	3,027,000	103,600,000	$225,000	$3,000
France	207,000	40,000,000	62,000	20,000
Italy	111,000	36,000,000	25,000	6,000
Portugal	35,000	6,000,000	5,000	1,100
Japan	148,000	56,000,000	28,000	1,300
Russia	8,373,000	170,000,000	58,000	17,000
Total	11,901,000	411,600,000	403,000	48,400
United Kingdom	121,000	46,000,000	85,000	23,500
Canada	3,700,000	8,000,000	65,000	1,100
Australia	3,063,000	5,000,000		795
New Zealand	105,000	1,100,000		830
South Africa	473,000	1,300,000		800
Total	19,363,000	473,000,000	553,000	75,425

CENTRAL POWERS.

Germany	209,000	68,000,000	$82,000	$24,000
Austria-Hungary	260,000	53,000,000	40,000	13,000
Turkey	710,000	21,200,000	8,000	1,500
Bulgaria	43,000	4,800,000	4,000	1,000
Total	1,222,000	147,000,000	134,000	39,500

Fighting strength.

ALLIES.

	Man power ages 18–45, 1914.	Man power ages 18–45, Oct. 1, 1917	Estimated enlisted strength Oct. 1, 1917.	Per cent of man power under arms.
United States	22,000,000	22,000,000	1,640,000	7.4
France	9,000,000	6,500,000	3,000,000	46.1
Italy	8,000,000	7,700,000	2,000,000	28.9
Portugal	1,200,000	1,200,000	400,000	33.3
Japan	10,500,000	10,500,000	1,500,000	14.2
Russia	34,000,000	30,000,000	(?)3,000,000	10.0
Total	84,700,000	77,900,000	12,540,000	.....
United Kingdom	12,000,000	11,000,000	5,000,000	42.4
Canada	3,220,000	2,800,000	860,000
Australia
New Zealand
South Africa
Total	99,920,000	91,700,000	18,400,000	27.5

CENTRAL POWERS.

Germany	14,000,000	9,400,000	6,100,000	64.9
Austria-Hungary	12,000,000	11,150,000	2,400,000	20.5
Turkey	4,000,000	3,500,000	1,000,000	28.5
Bulgaria	1,000,000	1,000,000	500,000	50.0
Total	31,000,000	25,050,000	11,000,000	43.5

Cost of war to Aug. 1, 1917.

ALLIES.

	In men.				In money (000,000 omitted).
	Killed.	Seriously wounded.	Captured or missing.	Total.
United States					$2,000
France	1,500,000	900,000	693,000	3,093,000	18,000
Italy	150,000	61,000	68,000	279,000	5,200
Belgium	70,000	40,000	149,000	259,000
Serbia	100,000	60,000		160,000
Russia	2,000,000	1,223,000	1,243,000	4,466,000	15,500
Japan and Portugal	(1)	(1)	(1)	(1)	(1)
United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa	300,000	177,000	182,000	659,000	26,500
Total	4,120,000	2,461,000	2,335,000	8,919,000	67,200

CENTRAL POWERS.

Germany	1,500,000	$59,000	704,000	3,163,000	$20,000
Austria-Hungary	849,000	540,000	833,000	2,222,000	10,000
Turkey	200,000	160,000	87,000	447,000	800
Bulgaria	25,000	20,000	7,000	52,000	500
Total	2,574,000	1,679,000	1,631,000	5,884,000	31,300
Grand total	6,694,000	4,140,000	3,969,000	14,803,000	98,500

(1) Not given.

To December 31, 1917, the estimated cost is placed at $121,000,000,000.

Belgium, with a population of 7,600,000 in 1914, with men of military age in proportion, has been all but annihilated and her army now does not exceed 150,000 soldiers. As soon as the call came from France, England rushed over her regular army, the "contemptible little army," as the Kaiser in derision dubbed it, an expeditionary force of 160,000 men. It fought at Mons and at the first battle of Ypres. Its losses were appalling. In one engagement a division of 12,000 men and 400 officers came out with only 3,000 men and 50 officers. Then Great Britain began the raising of a mighty army, which on August 1 last, including troops from her over-seas possessions, was estimated to number nearly 5,000,000 men. Since these tables were compiled, the casualties on both sides, the result of the terrific fighting of last summer and fall, have been colossal, and when to these figures are added the losses resulting from the German drive of 1918 the totals are prodigious.

The total cost of the war to both sides on August 1, 1917, is given as $98,500,000,000, and it is estimated that should the war continue until August 1, 1918, this amount will approach the staggering total of $160,000,000,000, a sum larger than the national wealth of any nation in the world with the exception of the United States. To bring these expenditures to a comparison of figures, the cost of the war on August 1, 1917, was over three times the total deposits of all the banks in the United States; seven times the annual value of our agricultural products; and fifteen times the value of our yearly foreign trade. For every month the war continues it means an expenditure of money greater than that expended during the entire Russo-Japanese War, which lasted 18 months. It means that the cost of the Franco-Prussian War is being spent every five weeks. It means that our Civil War, hitherto the greatest conflict in the history of the world, and which lasted four years, is being duplicated in cost every 85 days.

To visualize $98,500,000,000, that amount would construct 258 Panama Canals; it would build a railroad which would encircle the earth at the Equator 56 times; it would build such a vast number of standard steel ships that, placed bow to stern, they would make an unbroken floating bridge from New York to Liverpool and from New York to Panama; it would construct 2,042 stone highways of standard specifications across the United States; it would purchase 221,000,000 Ford automobiles; and, if laid out in $1 bills placed end to end, it would make a chain of notes that would encircle the globe 464 times and would make 48 bands of money between the earth and the moon. That stupendous sum represents a daily expenditure of $138,240 for every day that has passed since the beginning of the Christian era, and, if distributed equally among the hordes of humanity, would give $66 to every man, woman, and child upon the earth to-day. It would build 6,560 National Capitols at Washington, and, if laid out in $1 bills, 2,224 years would be required to count it, the operator working at the rate of five bills per second, and eight hours per day for every working day.

History records no other war or combination of wars which offers a parallel in the expenditures of money to the present conflict. In fact, the total direct cost of the six greatest wars which occurred during the 125 years which preceded the present world war was $21,000,000,000. One of these six wars lasted 21 years and another 4 years, yet this sum equals the cost of but 8 months' fighting at the present rate of expenditures.

The direct cost to the United States for the year 1917 is estimated at $6,700,000,000, of which amount $3,000,000,000 are loans to the entente allies. The amount of money appropriated by the last Congress for expenditures and authorizations was about $18,000,000,000, which represents a daily gross cost of the war to the United States of $49,000,000.

While the wars of ancient times and those in the Middle Ages frequently, if not usually, called to arms all the able-bodied freemen, the slaves and serfs were almost always exempted from military service. This exemption assured the contending forces of a constant supply of food. Perhaps for the first time in history the present conflict has made it necessary to withdraw for a long period from productive pursuits one-half of the population normally engaged in such enterprises. This withdrawal of farm labor has caused a serious shortage in the food supplies of the world. To the shortage in those countries which have been engaged in war since 1914, caused by lack of labor and the loss of territory, there has been added the loss of food cargoes shipped from neutral countries by submarine activities. The Food Administration has kindly furnished me with the following tables:

Great Britain and Ireland.

CEREALS PRODUCED IN 1917.

[In American bushels.]

Crops.	Normal consumption.	Prewar average, 1911–1913.	1916	1917	Per cent increase or decrease, 1917, compared with—
					1916	Prewar.
Wheat	277,920,980	59,470,720	59,775,072	64,322,051	+ 7.6	+ 8.2
Barley	113,323,000	63,070,466	55,104,583	59,940,758	+ 8.7	− 5.0
Oats	242,702,000	200,287,831	208,004,375	253,721,018	+22.0	+26.6
Beans		7,709,352	7,140,576	3,792,803	−46.8	−50.6
Potatoes	204,618,000	259,477,737	204,171,557	321,108,774	+57.3	+23.7

Compared with the prewar average, the crops of 1917 show a considerable gain, with the exception of barley and beans. The wheat crop in Ireland has doubled, and it increased 57 per cent in Wales. In England, where by far the largest part of the crop is grown, there was an increase of 2.2 per cent. The decrease in barley was small, occurring in both England and Scotland. Oats showed a tremendous gain—over 50,000,000 bushels—especially in Ireland. The potato crop is one of the largest ever produced, and shows an increase of 23.7 per cent, distributed over all sections of the country.

These same comparisons generally hold good when comparing 1917 with 1916, except that barley shows an increase, while the increase in potatoes over 1916 is larger than over the prewar average.

The aggregate weight of horse-chestnuts collected by volunteers at the instigation of the Government will amount to 10,080,000 pounds. If, as is probable, the total eventually reaches 11,200,000 pounds, it will mean that 5,600,000 pounds of grain will have been saved. Assuming the grain to be wheat, an additional 3,700,000 2-pound loaves will be given the country.

In beef the normal consumption is 2,622,000,000 pounds and the 1917 production is estimated at 384,875,000 pounds.

In pork the normal consumption is 1,656,000,000 pounds and the 1917 production is estimated at 387,000,000 pounds.

The normal consumption of sugar is 2,056,000 short tons.

France.

CEREAL PRODUCTION, 1917.

[In American bushels.]

Crops.	Normal consumption.	Prewar averages 1911–1913.	1916.	1917.	Per cent increase or decrease, 1917, compared with—
					1916.	Prewar.
Wheat	377,872,559	324,327,000	204,883,134	145,057,455	−29.2	−55.3
Mixed grains			4,102,191	3,344,758	−18.5	−40.3
Rye	49,285,049	49,154,000	33,352,611	27,535,192	−17.4	−44.9
Barley	54,976,000	48,360,000	38,268,371	41,249,320	+ 7.8	− 1.5
Oats	343,662,129	313,038,000	277,101,827	237,412,645	−14.3	−24.3
Potatoes	498,014,000	(1)	334,000,000	333,440,846
Corn	43,092,310			4,000,000
Rice, pounds	429,142,000			13,000,000

(1) In 1913 the production was 499,000,000 bushels.

France is thus producing about 30 per cent less wheat than last year and less than half of her normal prewar production. In beef the normal consumption is 1,548,000,000 pounds, and the 1917 production is estimated at 1,378,644,000 pounds. In pork the normal consumption is 751,800,000 pounds, and the 1917 production is estimated at 555,930,000 pounds. In sugar the normal consumption is 704,830 short tons, and the 1917 production is estimated at 235,200 short tons. In 1913, 234,060,000 bushels of sugar beets were grown. Owing to the occupation by the enemy of the most valuable producing lands and to the scarcity of labor, the 1917 crop was only 85,000,000 bushels.

Beginning January 1 rules were established limiting the consumption of bread, according to advices received through consular sources. Each department of France will have allotted to it a fixed quantity or ration of flour, to be distributed among the millers intrusted with furnishing flour to the several communities.

While no final decision has yet been reached concerning the quantity allowed per capita, certain differences will be admitted, except that no individual ration will be sanctioned in excess of the ration allowed soldiers at the front. For the ordinary consumer it is likely that the daily bread ration will be 250 grams (9 ounces) or 200 grams (7 ounces).

Hon. André Tardieu, French high commissioner to the United States, at a meeting in Baltimore, March 18, in referring to the food situation, said:

You are aware that the French nation has always lived mostly on wheat bread. Our prewar consumption was 700,000 tons per month. Our present consumption has been now reduced to 530,000 tons, a reduction of about 25 per cent.

Of course, it was impossible to reduce to any great extent the bread ration of the soldier. That ration, which amounted in the first years of the war to about 25 ounces, has been progressively cut down to a little over 21 ounces.

But, on the other hand, as regards the civilian population, we had to establish the individual bread card, allowing only about 10 ounces per day, which means barely the third part of the average daily bread consumption of the French peasant or workman before the war.

We have radically suppressed, on the other hand, all flour-consuming industries. The manufacturing of biscuits and of pastry has been completely prohibited. Strict rules have been imposed on hotels and restaurants, namely, absolute suppression of fancy bread.

This suppression of meatless days resulted from the lack of cereals for the cattle feeding which involved the killing of cattle, and the killing of cattle was meant, on the other hand, to bring about a reduction in the human consumption of these same cereals.

We have reduced our sugar consumption by 49 per cent; our rice consumption by 61 per cent; our imports of dried vegetables have been reduced by 52 per cent; of oils and fats by 48 per cent.

All cereals will be subject to requisition by the Government, with the exception of the quantities necessary for seeding purposes and the quantity consumed by the families of the farmers or required for feeding the animals on the farms of the producers. The present requirement that 85 per cent of the wheat ground shall be turned into flour is abolished, and now comes the reintroduction of white flour, representing an extraction of about 72 per cent of the wheat.

It must be remembered that Germany still occupies about 8,000 square miles of the richest wheat fields of France, an acreage only slightly less than the area of Massachusetts. In addition to the actual loss of tillable land there are other conditions which have operated against production—the depletion of the soil due to lack of chemical fertilization, the shortage of labor, the destruction of barns and agricultural implements, and the wastage of the land evacuated by the enemy.

Beside the ruin wrought by fire and sword there are thousands of acres of rich land grown high with thistles and weeds for lack of labor to cultivate them. To remedy the shortage of farm workers—a shortage which the old men, women, and children have valiantly endeavored to supply—the French Government, it is stated, last year released from military service for agricultural work 274,000 soldiers of the older classes, of which over two-thirds were farm owners. In addition 2,000 interned civilians, 45,000 prisoners of war, and several thousands of Tunisians have been placed upon the farms. Temporary leaves of absence from the army have also been granted to 30,000 soldier farmers.

LIVE STOCK IN FRANCE.

CATTLE.

Before the war there were about 15,000,000 cattle in France and an exportation of 1,000,000. Since the occupation of the north of France, Germany has seized about 2,700,000 head of cattle, including 1,800,000 head of Belgian cattle. Since the declaration of war hasty and improvident measures have resulted in large slaughtering of cattle. From August, 1914, to January, 1915, there was a decrease of 1,600,000 head. At the present time the number of cattle begins to show an increase, although there is a deficit of about 2,500,000 cattle as compared with 1913. However, the herds consist, for the most part, of animals too young for consumption, and without value as food for two or three years to come. Meanwhile France is dependent upon her colonies, Madagascar and Africa, for the importation of frozen meat.

SHEEP AND HOGS.

There is a great scarcity of sheep in France, due to excessive slaughter and the fact that requisitioning of wool at low prices has made the owners willing to sell their sheep. The minister of agriculture accounts for the scarcity by the lack of labor and the difficulty of maintaining the herds. There is also a marked decrease in the number of hogs.

The following table shows the decrease in the number of cattle, sheep, and hogs:

	Cattle.	Sheep.	Hogs.
1913	14,787,710	16,131,290	7,035,850
1914	12,668,243	14,038,361	5,926,291
1915	12,514,414	12,379,124	4,915,781
1916	12,341,900	10,845,280	4,361,000
1917 (July 1)	12,442,000	10,596,000	4,211,000

Summary of the actual decreases in food production since 1913.

	Quantity.	Per cent of decrease.
Wheat.....bushels..	176,000,000	52.1
Potatoes.....do....	165,000,000	33.1
Sugar beets.....do....	148,000,000	67.9
Cattle.....head..	2,435,000	16.5
Sheep.....do....	5,535,000	36.6
Hogs.....do....	2,825,000	40.2

Italy.

CEREALS PRODUCED IN 1917.

Crops.	In American bushels.			Per cent increase or decrease, 1917, compared with—
	Prewar average, 1911-1913.	1916	1917	1913	Average 1911-1915.
Wheat	199,840,000	176,529,000	139,700,176	−20.7	−23.3
Rye	5,390,000	5,342,000	4,460,621	−16.5	−13.5
Barley	10,029,000	10,104,000	7,422,288	−26.6	−22.8
Oats	37,581,000	26,188,000	24,000,000	+30.7	− .9
Corn	100,245,000	78,736,000	83,676,998	+ 6.2	−17.8
Rice	3,874,000	25,490,000	25,093,247	− 1.6	− .2

Although last year's harvests were about equal to those before the war, this year's yields of wheat, rye, and barley show a decrease of about 20 per cent. Oats and corn show increased yields over last year and rice remains about the same. Figures on the cattle situation are not obtainable.

WHAT AMERICA HAS DONE IN FEEDING THE ALLIES.

TOTAL FOOD EXPORTS TO THE ALLIES, JULY 1, 1914, TO JANUARY 1, 1918.

Since the beginning of the war we have averaged to supply our allies with food enough each year to support 16,314,552 persons, and with an excess of both protein and fats sufficient for several millions more.

Principal foodstuffs exported to the allies during the past 3½ years.

	United Kingdom.	France.	Italy.	Total.
Barley.....bushels..	38,870,019	1,264,184	24,966	40,159,169
Corn.....do....	16,203,341	6,649,312	479,926	23,332,579
Oatmeal.....pounds..	86,657,875	4,757,301	81,225	91,496,401
Oats.....bushels..	46,439,923	112,138,023	49,403,285	207,981,237
Rice.....pounds..	6,924,595	6,912,814	22,060	13,859,470
Rye.....bushels..	2,952,082	26,000	429,740	3,407,822
Wheat.....do....	145,348,413	79,798,281	87,136,475	312,283,166
Wheat flour.....barrels..	8,512,513	5,462,908	1,895,625	15,871,052
Canned salmon.....pounds..	219,927,094	2,862,655	39,104	223,828,853
Dried apricots.....do....	15,215,221	8,086,265	1,025,372	24,326,858
Dried peaches.....do....	11,315,073	1,247,868	377,124	12,941,065
Dried prunes.....do....	28,012,591	14,219,284	2,170,085	44,401,957
Canned beef.....do....	125,387,620	16,381,114	2,941,191	144,702,925
Fresh beef.....do....	215,423,735	160,400,094	67,441,815	443,268,644
Pickled beef.....do....	25,397,867	363,095	596,176	27,267,138
Bacon.....do....	688,866,348	122,532,231	12,762,354	824,160,933
Hams and shoulders.....do....	537,643,480	16,201,334	27,813	553,872,627
Lard.....do....	435,991,630	87,603,111	8,042,796	531,637,543
Fresh pork.....do....	41,061,815	2,594,057	143,289	43,799,161
Pickled pork.....do....	22,419,602	10,033,028	2,138,619	34,594,249
Lard compound.....do....	51,889,633	360,386	51,705	52,301,784
Butter.....do....	28,095,794	6,492	2,500	28,104,786
Cheese.....do....	103,460,188	2,445	.....	103,462,633
Condensed milk.....do....	118,052,388	5,224,721	6,240	123,283,349
Corn oil.....do....	912,860	236,984	17,880,758	19,030,602
Cottonseed oil.....do....	117,052,460	42,268,127	25,397,365	184,717,952

Principal foodstuffs exported to the allies during the past 3½ years—Continued.

	United Kingdom.	France.	Italy.	Total.
Corn oil cake and oil-cake meal.....pounds..	1,680,000	41,233,472	729,296	43,642,768
Cottonseed oil cake and oil-cake meal.....pounds..	451,975,390	2,166,240	1,998,000	456,139,630
Linseed oil cake and oil-cake meal.....pounds..	95,040,417	1,521,223	27,750	96,589,390
All other oil cake and oil-cake meal.....pounds..	11,596,484	484,000	516,942	12,597,423
Sirup.....gallons..	16,323,289	199,940	61,832,920	78,356,149
Refined sugar.....pounds..	1,340,433,779	924,479,927	4,394,807	2,269,308,513
Glucose and grape sugar....do....	309,813,923	16,504,802	2,154,059	328,472,784
Canned vegetables.....value..	$3,864,417	$66,227	$6,394	$3,937,038

The total exports of wheat and wheat flour to the three principal allies are equivalent to about 384,000,000 bushels, or an average of about 110,000,000 bushels per year.

The exports to the three principal allies of all-pork products, including bacon, hams, shoulders, lard, neutral lard, fresh and pickled pork, amount to nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds for the three and one-half years, or a yearly average of about 570,000,000 pounds.

The total sugar exported to the same countries is over 2,269,000,000 pounds. This is a yearly average of about 648,000,000 pounds.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything more, but I shall ask for a few minutes' time to reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. The Muscle Shoals proposition as a purely Government proposition or as a war proposition or as a site for an ammunition plant has never been before Congress. It is very unfortunate that Congress did not adopt the recommendations of the engineers for rivers and harbors. These improvements would have been completed before the war and at very much less cost. The cyanamide process has proven successful in Germany, England, France, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Japan, and Canada.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What form of power does Germany use?

Mr. ALMON. I understand Germany uses steam for want of water power.

Mr. LONGWORTH. She uses steam power and not water power.

Mr. ALMON. Because they have no water power.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And you are asking for water power and using Germany as an example?

Mr. ALMON. Everyone informed on the subject knows that air nitrogen can be made more cheaply with the hydroelectric power than with steam power. The gentleman from New York asked the question what we expected the Government to sell this fertilizer for after the war. It is claimed that the Government will make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals with 60 or 70 per cent of plant food products and sell it for one-half for what fertilizer with 20 per cent of plant product now costs.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman states that by the use of hydroelectric power he can manufacture the nitrate cheaper than by steam.

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Why is it that 90 per cent of the hydroelectric plants in the United States in competition with steam have gone into bankruptcy?

Mr. ALMON. I do not believe that is true. Hydroelectric power can be produced cheaper than steam power.

Mr. FOCHT. Absolutely not. I would like to have the time to reply to the statement of the gentleman. The gentleman is entirely in error. I would like to cite some instances to prove the gentleman is in error.

Mr. ALMON. It would require the gentleman a long time to do it, even if he does represent a great coal-mining district in Pennsylvania.

Mr. KAHN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, there are two things I wish to refer to in connection with this debate in the few minutes which have been allotted by the gentleman in charge of time. One is in reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama to the effect that power can be more cheaply produced by hydroelectric methods than by steam. This might be true in some remote instances, but up to this time, generally speaking, it is far removed from the fact. I might call attention to at least three or four hydroelectric plants on the Susquehanna River, which great stream drains almost the entire State of Pennsylvania. None of these were successful on the original plan of financing, for the simple reason that notwithstanding the density of the population the supply of coal is abundant and in normal times cheap. I could take you up and down and all over the State of Pennsylvania and at the foothills of those great mountains draining the mighty watersheds, and you will find few hydroelectric plants. In normal times bituminous coal in Pennsylvania is cheap and it can be found in every State in the Union west of the Susquehanna River, and as long as coal is as cheap and available as it is now in most places it will be impossible for any hydroelectric plant, unless some rare exceptions prevail, to compete with steam. I hope the gentleman is satisfied as to that, but if he is not I will later amplify and prove by statistics and statements by financiers and those who have had to do with the financing of water-power plants.

Now, I wish to consume the other minute of my time in a brief observation concerning some evident manipulation or extraordinary transposition of a vast sum appropriated in one bill and applied for purposes not designated in that measure. I can not conceive by what species of legerdemain this sort of transfer could be made. An emergency deficiency bill always has the right of way because of the urgent need of funds, but according to the statements made on the floor of the House to-day $105,000,000 was transferred from the emergency deficiency appropriation made for imperative war purposes, for the construction of a nitrate plant. Why, my friends, in any country town, if a school board should transfer moneys from the poor account to the school account, or vice versa, the whole crowd of officials would be put in jail. In all my legislative experiences, here and elsewhere, I never heard of anything so extraordinary and out of alignment with propriety and which would so greatly excite suspicion and mistrust among the people. I have voted, and will vote, for all measures looking to the winning of the war and guaranteeing the perpetuation of the national integrity, but I believe that these bills for appropriations, no matter what they may be for, nor the amounts carried, should come to the Congress on their merits and give notice what they are expected to accomplish, and not, as appears to be the case in this instance, show the purpose of expending $20,000,000 for nitrate plants and then, through a yet unexplained method and without knowledge or consent of the House, jump to $105,000,000. This sort of procedure may be legal, and it may be that one or more individuals are clothed with power to make such transfer, but at best it is in bad taste and should not be sanctioned by anybody.

Let us hope that such methods may soon become obsolete and that the public trust be discharged in a way more in accord with the trend of popular thought and desire. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON].

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use those two minutes which the chairman has so kindly yielded me to deliver a message to Congress sent from my constituents:

LEWISBURG, MARSHALL COUNTY, TENN.

Two thousand citizens, in mass meeting assembled here yesterday, voted unanimously to ask Congress to pass some measure drafting all men between the ages of 16 and 60 years to some service toward the winning of the war, believing that such a measure would materially relieve the labor situation, and we beg that you give it your careful consideration.

J. N. MCCORD,
Chairman.
C. C. HOUSTON,
Secretary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in delivering this message I want to call attention to the spirit of heroism and patriotism that inspired this meeting, this large and unanimous action. It is significant in two respects. Tennessee is the State in the Union that has won the proud distinction of being the Volunteer State, that has responded nobly to every call of her country, and in that State it shows how thoroughly they have come to approve the draft system for the purpose of winning this war. Furthermore, it shows that they are in favor of using every atom of strength they have in the young and the old to the utmost toward winning victory in this great struggle. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, just one word on the subject of this particular bill. This discussion that has been indulged in has involved almost every proposition except the matter involved in the bill. This bill has nothing to do with the appropriation for Muscle Shoals. This bill has nothing to do with the location of the plant at Muscle Shoals. This bill simply gives the Secretary of War authority to condemn land for something that the President of the United States has already established.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. It simply amends the condemnation bill which was passed by the Congress at the last session.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman state what information the committee had as to the number of acres which were necessary to condemn?

Mr. DENT. I am sorry I can not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is a large amount.
Mr. DENT. Several hundred acres, I will say.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Quite a number.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. DENT. I ask that the bill be read.
The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, is this bill all to be considered as one paragraph, or shall it be considered as two paragraphs?
Mr. DENT. I think it is one paragraph.
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It is really two paragraphs, but I have no objection to its being considered as one.
Mr. DENT. There is only one.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It makes no difference for the purpose of amendment.
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I did not want to lose any right.
The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That page 1, line 8, of an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding after the word "camps" the following: "and for the construction and operation of plants for the production of nitrates and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operation of such plants," so that the same when amended will read as follows:

"That hereafter the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States, in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, temporary use thereof or other interest therein, or right pertaining thereto, needed for the site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications, coast defenses, military training camps, and for the construction and operation of plants for the production of nitrate and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operations of such plants; such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the States wherein the proceedings may be instituted: Provided, That when the owner of such land, interest, or rights pertaining thereto shall fix a price for the same, which in the opinion of the Secretary of War shall be reasonable, he may purchase or enter into a contract for the use of the same at such price without further delay: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States donations of land and the interest and rights pertaining thereto required for the above-mentioned purposes: And provided further, That when such property is acquired in time of war, or the imminence thereof, upon the filing of the petition for the condemnation of any land, temporary use thereof or other interest therein or right pertaining thereto to be acquired for any of the purposes aforesaid, immediate possession thereof may be taken to the extent of the interest to be acquired and the lands may be occupied and used for military purposes, and the provision of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, providing that no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land is located has been given, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended during the period of the existing emergency."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "compounds," insert the words "needed for munitions."

Mr. LONGWORTH. I assume the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment.
Mr. DENT. I did not exactly catch the amendment; I would like to have it again reported.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.
Mr. KAHN. I think it should be in line 11.
Mr. DENT. No; I can not consent to that amendment.
Mr. STAFFORD. Let it be reported again; there is some confusion as to where it should be offered.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "compounds," insert the words "needed for munitions."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Committee on Military Affairs refused to accept this amendment; in other words, they say that this is not a bill for war purposes. My amendment confines these compounds of nitrate to munitions of war. The gentlemen here refused to accept that amendment.
What do you propose to make out of these nitrates? I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.
Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that if his amendment is adopted this plant could not be used for agricultural purposes even after this war.
Mr. LONGWORTH. What is this measure for if it is not for war purposes? Are we here to vote $125,000,000 to a private corporation to manufacture fertilizer after the war? Is this a war measure or is it a graft measure? What is it? If any man on this floor votes against this amendment he will be voting, consciously or unconsciously, for the proposition that this money is to be used by private individuals for their own enrichment after the war.
Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will yield a minute, I will state that the fertilizer and munitions propositions are both involved in this program, and certainly the gentleman does not contend that fertilizer is not necessary in order to produce food to support an army even during the war?
Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it intended during the war to produce fertilizer at this factory?
Mr. DENT. It is intended to do so if——
Mr. LONGWORTH. This is a fertilizing proposition. It is not for war at all. You are bringing in this bill to amend a military bill to permit the Government to condemn land around military posts, and now you say that you are going to have that condemned land around the property of individuals who are going to make fertilizer after the war. Of all the outrageous propositions that has ever been submitted to the Congress of the United States I say this is about the worst, and I challenge contradiction by any Member of this House on that proposition.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman overlook the fact that when the appropriation of $20,000,000 was made it was made on the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture, and it was contemplated at that time to establish a nitrate plant for the purpose of making nitrate for agricultural purposes?
Mr. LONGWORTH. This comes out of another fund entirely.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But this plant——
Mr. LONGWORTH. The nitrate fund has this proposition:

The plant or plants provided for under this act shall be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any other industry or enterprise carried on by private capital.

You could not put over this thing under the nitrate provision. So you have gone to the urgent deficiency bill, in the provision for armament of fortification, to take $90,000,000 out of that fund, which was never contemplated to be used for that purpose, and now you resist an amendment which shall provide that this nitrate shall be used for munitions, simply because you want to protect these individuals who are going to get this plant to manufacture fertilizer—the fellows that wanted to get the plant free—and when the Government would not be bound down by such a contract as that are now in a position to get the plant cheaper than anybody else when the war is over. And here you gentlemen come to this House and say that this is not a war measure. I say it is a most outrageous proposition, and I call upon you gentlemen to realize that those who vote against this amendment will be voting to benefit private individuals and not to help the Government to win the war. Put that in your pipe and smoke it. [Applause.]
Mr. KAHN and Mr. SWITZER rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized.
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I rather think the gentleman from Ohio got unduly excited about this thing. I have never been for the Muscle Shoals proposition, so far as I recall, but that matter is not under consideration in this bill. The fact remains that the War Department did locate this plant at Muscle Shoals. They had a right to do it under the law which Congress passed. The responsibility is theirs. Now, the gentleman from Ohio has overlooked some language which immediately follows the language where his amendment goes in. He offered an amendment on line 11, after the word "compounds." I think his amendment says——
Mr. LONGWORTH. "Needed for munitions."
Mr. KAHN. "Needed for munitions." Immediately after that the language of the section is this:

And the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Surely. But mine applies to the nitrate produced at this plant, and that it must be used for munitions and not for other purposes.
Mr. KAHN. But the gentleman has maintained that because they did not specify that the nitrate should be used for munitions of war there was no provision for munitions of war in the bill, and therefore it was not a war measure.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the only materials this plant will produce are nitrates. They do not produce other munitions of war. I want to confine it to nitrates and munitions, and not to fertilizers. That is all there is to it.
Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that this bill simply provides an amendment to a section of existing law by inserting the word "nitrate" following the language that is now in the section of the law, and that it does not change the law in any other particular? And, therefore, if the gentleman from Ohio

[Mr. LONGWORTH] would succeed in getting his amendment in, he goes further and changes the law that is now on the statute books.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is all new legislation that I offered my amendment to.

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It certainly is. That is the amendment to the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit, this is an amendment to the permanent law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is all new from line 10 to line 14. The gentleman is wrong. I will read the new language.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is correct.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course this only applies to this bill.

Mr. KAHN. I simply want to call to the attention of the committee that the proposed amendment is intended for the purchase of something like 240 acres of land that are necessary for this plant.

The plant has cost many millions of dollars. The people who own this land will not sell it to the Government. The Government proposes to condemn it. That is all that is involved in the proposed change in the bill. Unless the amendment carries, the $20,000,000 or more that has been expended there is practically tied up indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. It seems to me it would be ridiculous to limit the manufacture of these basic elements that enter into high explosives to that only. Suppose that more is manufactured in six months, or in a year, than is needed for war purposes. Why should it not enter into the production or manufacture of fertilizer? Can anyone give any good reason why it should be thrown away and wasted? Can anyone give any good reason why this great plant should stop operation simply because the war stops, provided the product it manufactures will be of great benefit to the people of this country in the production of a cheaper fertilizer?

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise particularly for that. A great many gentlemen here in the past have been opposing the development of the water-power site known as Muscle Shoals, in northern Alabama. These gentlemen have attacked time and again, for the last five or six years, propositions that would have already led to the construction of a dam in the Tennessee River and a number of dams for eight or ten million dollars which now will cost the Government $18,000,000 or $20,000,000, if they are all constructed; and in place of saving the Nation money by defeating those propositions, at a time when there was an abundance of cheap labor, when the materials entering into the construction of such dams would have cost less than ever before in the history of the country, they will now be constructed when the cost of material is higher than ever known before, when labor is scarce, and at a higher wage than ever before in our history. It is, of course, galling to these gentlemen who have stood upon the floor of this House fighting water-power development bills, and who tried to point out to the country the fact that they were saving money to this Nation, when it now appears that their efforts will lead to greater expenditures on the part of the Government to bring about this necessary and useful development of water power on the Tennessee River, where the possibilities are not surpassed elsewhere in this country, other than at Niagara Falls and on the Columbia River, in the State of Washington.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. Not now. I think that one of those plants probably ought to be constructed near the Niagara River, but I can see no good reason why one of these plants should not be constructed on the Tennessee River, where, after the war—yes, during the war—it is possible to produce cyanamid, which will enter into the production of fertilizer and make it cheaper to the farmers of that vicinity—yes, even possibly cheaper to the farmers of my own State of Ohio.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. McARTHUR. Would any of these expenditures be necessary now if Congress a few years ago had met the water-power problem fairly and squarely, instead of making a political football out of it?

Mr. SWITZER. I say to the gentleman that they have been trying to put through legislation here that would make the profits of the men who are to develop the power so low that they have hesitated to enter into the scheme and thereby held back the development of these water-power sites for 10 or 20 years. But nitrate is needed, and the President of the United States has come to the conclusion that the development of this water-power site to produce nitrate is necessary to carry on the war. If this power site had been developed at Muscle Shoals some years ago, it would have saved last year probably the consumption of 5,000,000 to 8,000,000 tons of coal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] will be recognized.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I find great difficulty in relating the bulk of this argument to the bill before the committee. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] led off in a very fiery, and excited speech, in which he denounced with great vehemence something that occurred in another connection, and then after stating with reference to the action that he was denouncing, that of all the most outrageous proposition he had ever heard of, it was the worst, he concluded his remarks with the delicious non sequitur that he intended to support the bill now under consideration. If one tithe of what the gentleman stated in the course of his remarks is true, that is if it has any sort of relation to the pending bill, then that measure is one that no Member ought to support.

Following the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] made his contribution to the debate to the effect that some great wrong had been done or would be done to the Middle West. But looking through this bill, I fail to find in it any reference to the Middle West, much less the outline of a great wrong proposed to be done to that, or any other section of the United States. This bill is designed to afford the right of condemnation proceedings, in order that certain great projects heretofore arranged and agreed upon may be effectively prosecuted. Further than this, the pending bill is not related to, or concerned with these projects.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] contributed a very disturbing thought, to the effect that the general, I might say universal idea in relation to hydroelectric power, and its possibilities, is altogether at fault, and that in our throwing over the possibilities of developing cheap power, through the utilization of the tumbling waters of our great rivers, we had been living in a dream world—that the cheapest power within our present reach, will come from the combustion of coal.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. I say the gentleman is all wrong.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We are all wrong?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes. Ultimately I hope the hydroelectric power is all right, but with coal as cheap as it is now it can not be.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, I leave that thought with this body. I have no time in which to develop it. At any rate it has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of coal being cheap. Is it not a fact that during the winter we could not get it?

Mr. FOCHT. I mean in normal times.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. These are not normal times.

Mr. FOCHT. I say in normal times.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is present available power that we are seeking. The coal from Pennsylvania is not available, but the water of our rivers is flowing by our doors. It is our purpose to harness it, and make its potentialities available for domestic use, in this hour of national stress.

The gentleman from Massachusetts would have us believe that there is some great, mysterious, and sinister influence somewhere that is operating upon the officials of this Government to the very great detriment of the public interests. If these suggestions are well taken, if these sinister influences exist, then these gentlemen instead of concluding their remarks with the statement that they intend to support this bill, should one and all square their action with their declarations, and intimations, and vote against the pending proposition. I wish to say in this connection that I do not understand how it is loyal to indulge in statements, intimations, and suggestions, calculated to make the general public believe that what the Government is doing is vicious, or profligate, or inefficient, and then seek to cure, or correct the impression thus created, by the statement that the speaker responsible for these utterances, intends after all, to support the proposition before the House. If there are sinister influences that are operating somewhere, and somehow to inflict great wrongs upon the public, then an administration that knowingly, or ignorantly yields to those influences does not deserve the support of the people of the United States or of the Members of this body. These sinister influences ought to be exposed.

Gentlemen ought not to be satisfied to get up before the American people—because what is said here goes out to the American people—and make statements that are calculated to shake the confidence of that people in the integrity of their Government at this, the very greatest crisis in its history. That may be loyalty, but I do not believe in loyalty of that character. Hardly a word has been said thus far in the way of opposition to this bill that taken in its natural implication is not calculated to cause the great body of our people to believe that surrounding the simple proposition now under consideration, there is some sinister influence at work, or some great wrong upon the body politic that has been inflicted, or is in contemplation. If our present administration has yielded to sinister, or improper influences, then it should receive, not support, but the severest condemnation both at the hands of the representatives of the people, and of the people themselves. I repeat my statement that if there is anything sinister in connection with this measure, or if there is anything proposed to be done, that can not stand the full light of day, then that evil, or sinister influence should be exposed by the gentlemen who make the intimation that these influences exist, and have been operating to the public prejudice. Further if this bill will make effectual some evil, or wrong perpetrated at some other time, it should receive the stamp of severe disapprobation at the hands of this body. The gentlemen who have indulged in these criticisms ought to make it abundantly clear by their opposing votes, that they will not stand for a measure which is not promotive of the public interests. It is our present task to promote those interests, and any measure, or proposition to their prejudice ought to be sternly and instantly rejected.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now, will the gentleman yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia be extended two minutes. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman support this bill because it is intended to facilitate the manufacture of nitrates for the purpose of making explosives for the Government in time of war, or for the making of nitrates to supply fertilizer in time of peace?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I support this bill because the war authorities of the United States say that it is necessary at this time to make immediately effective certain great projects heretofore agreed upon.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; but they do not say it is for fertilizer. They say it is for munitions, and that is the reason I support it, because we must have explosives.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is not a fertilizer bill. It is a condemnation bill, that in the result will afford munitions for the effectual prosecution of our part in the great world war.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], a member of the committee.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me this is a matter that we might discuss calmly and without any feeling of excitement or partisanship, or anything that might tend to ruffle the feelings of anyone. My understanding of this bill is that it simply gives the Government the power to condemn land for the establishment of a plant for the manufacture of nitrates and other compounds, explosives, and so forth, to be used as munitions of war. I may be wrong in my view of the matter, but if I am correct in my construction of the language, then the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will not change the purpose of the bill. The Government will still be confined to the manufacture of nitrates and compounds to be used as munitions of war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; not at all.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is my understanding of the language, and I would like to have the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] or some gentleman in the House who differs from me explain wherein that construction is not sound.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The chairman of the committee refuses to accept my amendment on the express ground that this bill provides for more than nitrates for munitions, and on that ground only.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I care not what position the chairman of the committee may take on the matter. It ought not to change our minds as to the meaning of the plain language. And, further, if it is the intention of the Government under the law to enter into the manufacture of nitrates and other compounds, then the Government ought to have the right to condemn the land that is necessary to carry on an activity that has been authorized by law. And even taking that view of it, gentlemen of the House, I can see no good reason why any amendment should be put upon this bill. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], for, in my judgment, it will not alter the purposes of the bill. But even if it does not alter them, it will do no harm if it is accepted. However, if it is voted down I am satisfied that the gentlemen interested at Muscle Shoals will have no greater power than they now have. I would be the last man who would be willing to give private individuals or corporations the right to condemn land, as provided for in this bill; but if the Government goes into the manufacture of these articles, then the right to condemn ought to follow.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio is put in, with the meaning that he seeks to give it, would it not bring about this result, that hereafter, in the years to come, when we want to utilize this power, possibly, for the development of nitrates for agricultural purposes, we could not do it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think probably.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If we are condemning land with reference to the use of this great agency for war purposes alone, then when these war necessities are past and the time arrives when in due course we may want to use the output for agricultural purposes, may we not be handicapped?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is exactly my contention, that as the bill is now written you would have no power under the bill to engage in the manufacture of nitrates or any other compound to sell or to be used for fertilizer purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman makes a slight mistake when he says the Government has no power—the cyanamide plant is to be operated under a contract with the Government by private individuals. It has to be put under another appropriation than the nitrate appropriation originally passed by this Congress, because that provides specifically that these plants may not be operated by individuals.

Mr. McKENZIE. That may be true; but even if that is true I can not see wherein the Government would be surrendering any of its rights.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Illinois is supporting this proposition, but in my judgment he makes a mistake when he says that it is just as good with the amendment on it as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. With that exception the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], my colleague on the committee, and I stand together on this proposition without question. I want to speak in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], for the very reason that it curtails the law establishing the nitrate plant. If the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is put in operation they could not do anything except to make nitrates for the purpose of manufacturing powder. The law never contemplated any limitation on it. The act which created the Muscle Shoals proposition carries with it one of the very things for which I and other members of the committee fought—the proposition to make nitrate for commercial fertilizer for the agriculture of the United States. The farmers must have nitrates to fertilize their soils to produce abundant crops.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio proposes to strike that vital portion of the law out, and proposes to do it on this bill, which I claim is not germane to condemnation proceedings. This is a bill called for by the War Department, to give the right of condemnation to the Government to condemn a few hundred acres around the Muscle Shoals district.

Now, then, could this Congress accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio without doing violence to the original act, without doing violence to the purposes of the War Department, and without doing great violence to the best interests of this Government in this time of war. Could the Congress adopt that amendment and do justice to the American people. The gentleman from Ohio has to a certain extent reversed his position. In the original bill he was against the proposition in toto. Since the Muscle Shoals proposition has been accepted and is in the course of erection, he proposes an amendment to do away with a part of the purpose for which the nitrate plants are being constructed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman claim that this is being built out of the funds provided for in the nitrate provision?

Mr. QUIN. It is immaterial what fund it comes from; it is immaterial, as far as the American people are concerned, where the money comes from, whether it is provided by the Committee on Military Affairs, the Appropriations Committee, or the Agricultural Committee, or any other fund. The vital point is, Will it be constructed in a manner that will furnish nitrates at cost to the farmers, as the law now provides? I say that it is going to be constructed, and I dare say that it will be constructed as the War Department wants it, regardless of any amendment which the gentleman from Ohio may offer. His amendment is in the interest of the coke-oven industry of the country, in the interest of the steel corporations of the country, as well as the private factories producing nitrates. From the time the original bill was introduced in the House by the Military Committee those interests have made a stubborn and united fight against this measure. They kept it up for many days. They fought it in committee; and after we got it on the floor of the House they were successful in causing the House of Representatives to kill this as a war measure when we were preparing the country for defense in 1916. And after the Senate placed it back in our bill we fought it out again on this floor and won a great victory for our country and the American farmer. Now, at this late date, those same interests appear on the floor and try to keep the Government from getting title to this land, with the hope of killing the manufacture of nitrates by the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the liberty-loan drive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the liberty-loan drive. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York, who just asked the Chair for the privilege of extending his remarks on the liberty-loan drive, touches the heart of the situation here to-day. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] says, "Are you loyal?" Loyal for what? Loyal for fertilizer purposes when you are just about to go out through the country asking the people to shake down their stockings, to give money for what? To carry on the war, not for fertilizing factories.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. In just a minute. Many have talked on the subject against the amendment, and I will address myself to that subject. Are we loyal? I have a boy in France at the front, many of you have boys at the front, and we are trying our best to give them the support to which they are entitled. But we are doing it by war measures and not by fertilizer factories. The House defeated this Muscle Shoals scheme first in the river and harbor bill in 1915. After it was reported by the River and Harbor Committee unanimously, we took it up on the floor and defeated it here by a simple statement of facts. Then the gentleman from Illinois who has just spoken [Mr. MCKENZIE], from the Military Committee, came before us and disclosed facts that lay behind this same Muscle Shoals proposition, and he voted with us to drive it out of the military bill. It is the same proposition here. This bill is necessary, because it is for condemnation proceedings for manufacturing munitions. [Laughter.] Oh, you may laugh, but this is another proposition. It is what lies behind the bill that will be stopped by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, the Muscle Shoals fertilizer proposition, which we object to at this time. We object to giving $125,000,000 for a fertilizer factory unless Congress shall determine with full knowledge what the facts are and what is involved. It is right to go on with the nitrate proposition, it is right to go on with the condemnation of lands for manufacturing munitions. We will all support that. We are all loyal, but we object to the fertilizer proposition, which we have defeated here repeatedly before, first for navigation, when $18,700,000 was the amount involved, and next to the extent of $20,000,000 for a private nitrate factory. We defeated that on the floor as well, and now comes this question of a small plant for manufacturing nitrates, but behind it lurks the $125,000,000 fertilizer proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then without the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] this, in the gentleman's judgment, is a fertilizer proposition?

Mr. FREAR. No. With the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, we all know it will be confined to munitions of war and you can not put a fertilizer proposition in it. The chairman of the committee [Mr. DENT] says that is what is wanted—a fertilizer factory as well. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] says that is what you propose to do—to put a $125,000,000 fertilizer proposition at Muscle Shoals and to require the people of this country at this time, of all times, when you are going out through the country to raise money for liberty bonds, to make unprecedented sacrifices in order to build a great fertilizer manufactory in Alabama. That is what we object to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is this proposition without the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FREAR. You can read into it a fertilizer proposition, because the chairman of the committee says that is what he wants it in for when not used for manufacturing nitrates.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then, without the amendment, this bill ought to be defeated?

Mr. FREAR. No; but in the present form it has a concealed purpose and forces us to take it under the guise of a nitrate factory.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman can not be caught in a trick, for he says he sees the trick. In vain is the net spread in sight of the bird.

Mr. FREAR. You can put in the fertilizer proposition, because you have the votes to do it and carry it through as a nitrate proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no; you have as many votes in this House as we have.

Mr. FREAR. It seems to me if you will study this situation in the cold light of fairness—not because it is going to Alabama, not because it is going to the South or any other place, North or South, for that is not the thing we ought to determine—this amendment should be accepted because it is right. It shows what the plant is for. I can not see how gentlemen can object to this amendment, which is for the purpose of confining the products of manufacturing to munitions of war.

By unanimous consent, Mr. FREAR was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

By unanimous consent, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] calls this a fertilizer proposition as now written in the bill, and yet he says he proposes to vote for it as a war measure. I am at a loss to understand the consistency of the gentleman's argument. This is not a fertilizer proposition. The primary and supreme purpose of the establishment of these nitrate plants at the present time is for the making of nitrates to be used in the manufacture of powder. If the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is adopted it will absolutely destroy the purposes and objects of the establishment of this nitrate plant. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], who speaks eloquently of the fact that we are going to spend millions of dollars in building these nitrate plants for munition purposes, would have the Government totally abandon them after the war and after there is no longer need for the manufacture of nitrates in such great quantities for munition purposes. Gentlemen will remember that nearly two years ago and before the war opened it was determined, on the recommendation of the Agricultural Committee, to expend $20,000,000 for the purpose of establishing a nitrate plant to be used in the making of munitions and also for making commercial fertilizer.

Shall we expend millions of dollars to build these plants, which are now so necessary on account of the war, and then abandon them after the war is over? The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio would result in that very thing, for if it is adopted and land is condemned under it, the plants can be used only for the making of munitions. Why should we not use them to make nitrates for fertilizer for the farmers after the war is over. That was one of the original ideas; why abandon it now? Every argument is being put forth to increase the productivity of the soil, and that is as distinctly a war purpose as the making of powder, for we must have food to feed our soldiers and also furnish the allies. These plants will be used primarily to make material for munitions, but I do not want to see an amendment adopted which would not admit of their use in order to provide farmers with cheaper fertilizer, which will be of benefit not only to them but also to the cities. I do not want to see this amendment adopted and thus make these expensive plants so much junk after the war is over, and which would prevent the Government applying to a useful purpose the by-products which will not be needed for munition purposes even while the war is in progress.

Gentlemen have criticized the fact that the War Department has selected a point in the South for the location of that plant. As a matter of fact, the engineers of the Army, not from the South or from any other particular section of the country, engineers who were interested only in securing the best location for such a plant, after a most thorough investigation of every section of the country and every site offered, selected Muscle Shoals as being the best site obtainable. Why? Because there can be developed at Muscle Shoals more water power than in any other place in these whole United States, unless possibly on the Columbia River in the State of Washington, and not excepting the place on the St. Lawrence in which the gentleman [Mr. SNELL] is interested, and as the gentleman from Alabama stated, both of these places are on the border and are outside of the safety zone established by the War Department. They contend that this water power will not soon be available, but let me admit the point made by the gentleman, that it will not be, and that it will be necessary to use steam power to some extent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; and carry the power 90 miles across the country. Does the gentleman contend that these plants are to be operated by the Government?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are to be eventually operated by the Government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not at all. They are operated by private individuals, under contract with the Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true; but under a contract which has been made by the War Department and under the control and supervision of the Government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The Government has nothing to do with the operation of these plants.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How does that change the proposition?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It absolutely does change the proposition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Whether operated under a contract for the Government, and whether it is operated near Cincinnati or in the district represented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], or at Muscle Shoals, how does it change the proposition as to whether or not Congress should give the right to condemn land so that the Government may secure it at a reasonable price for the purpose of establishing these plants?

The Government is now building possibly the largest powder plant in the world at Nashville. It is the part of wisdom and good business to put these plants in close proximity thereto and also in a section of the country which would not be subject to easy attack in the event of an invasion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to see this controversy arise here between the coke and coal industries and the water-power industries of the country. I know how jealous gentlemen are, some of them, who are interested in the coke and coal business, when you talk about developing water power that is now going to waste, wasted strength that can now be utilized by the Government for the benefit of our farmers and the people generally. I can not understand how gentlemen can vote to appropriate eight or ten million dollars to buy seed wheat to experiment with in territory where the wheat crop is often a failure and then stand up here and talk about withholding from the farmers generally of the country nitrate with which to increase the supply of food for our soldiers and our allies. This proposition is to utilize a by-product, a great deal of waste substance that will not go into the manufacture of explosives, but that will go to waste unless utilized as it accumulates while powder and other explosives are being made. Why not turn this stuff to good account and use it to help the soldiers of the agricultural army of the United States as they go forth to produce food supplies for our soldiers on the battle field. They talk about manufacturing nitrate some time in the future in time of peace. Why, gentlemen, it has already been stated here that we are going to commence the manufacture of nitrates in August this year for war purposes and for farm purposes, too. We need nitrates under the plant just as you need explosives in the shell at the battle front. You can not win this war over yonder without producing the food supply over here. [Applause.] I can not understand the tactics of some gentlemen here. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], who has just taken his seat, said it is not because it is in the South, and I hope that it is not the case, that it is not because it is in the South. I visited Muscle Shoals with gentlemen from the North, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] being one of them. They were wonderfully impressed with the place and the power site at Muscle Shoals. There is no better place in the wide world for the location of this nitrate plant, and, gentlemen, it is down there at a place far removed from the coast, where even the long-range guns of Germany could not reach it. It is a meritorious measure, and the condemnation pronounced upon it by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who lives where the American Chemical & Fertilizer Co. has its habitat, can not be sustained by the facts. If you are loyal to the flag, show it in your vote on both sides of this House when these important war measures are up for consideration. Gentlemen talk about us going to call on the people to buy liberty bonds. Yes; that is true. I addressed 15,000 people last night in the big armory at Baltimore for that purpose. We will secure these liberty bond subscriptions in a very little time, and, gentlemen, if you could get away from here, some of you, and hear how the people talk and see how they actually feel at home about this war there would not be so much dillydallying here, quibbling and quarreling about these measures that the President thinks necessary for the successful conduct of this war. Let us quit it; let us vote for this measure and vote for it quickly and get behind the President and have unity of purpose and concerted action in the righteous work of winning this war. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to close debate on this amendment at some time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be closed in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. How is the time to be controlled, by the Chair?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] wants five minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] wants five minutes, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] wants five minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] wants five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I have the attention of the chairman of the committee? I think I ought to take five minutes.

Mr. DENT. I will ask to have an additional five minutes to go to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make this request, that all debate on this amendment and all amendments pending thereto be closed in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and the bill close in 30 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] in the beginning of this debate stated that it was proposed in connection with the development of water power for the operation of units No. 1 and No. 2 to purchase electricity from a private plant and pay therefor $30 per horsepower.

Mr. TREADWAY. More than that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; $30. That, of course, is an extravagant price for any section of the United States. It is way beyond the average price paid for hydroelectric power in the United States. I want to read for the RECORD a part of a statement here made by gentlemen who were arguing before the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House to secure legislation for the further development of Niagara Falls.

In that I find that the mechanical energy of Niagara Falls is sold at the following rates, $8, $9.50, and $13 per horsepower per annum, dependent upon the kind of contract which happens to be made. When that horsepower is changed from mechanical into electrical energy the expense is fairly considerable, and we find that the power thus transformed and sold is sold at from $14 to $15 per horsepower per annum. In other words, the Niagara Falls location is furnishing hydroelectric power to-day for one-half or a little less than one-half of the price that it is proposed to pay for this hydroelectrical power in Alabama. I have not very much that I care to say on this measure. I do not believe that any man, however, can have in mind the things that transpired in this House during the last five years and feel very favorably toward this proposition. It may or may not be a wise thing to develop water power at Muscle Shoals. We do know that the proposition has been before the House at least three separate times, and each time defeated on its merits. I refer now to Government development for the purpose then indicated.

We find that, in defiance of the will of Congress—and it is not too strong language thus to express it—that this same improvement is being made, but on a scale vaster, more elaborate, and more expensive than anybody ever had the nerve even to suggest in the years gone by. Instead of spending the $20,000,000, as first suggested, an appropriation of over $100,000,000 has been made, and it has been deliberately taken from money expressly appropriated for another purpose. Language certainly can not be too strong that is used in condemnation of that practice. Acts of that character usually put men in jail.

I see the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, immediately before me. I know that when the gentlemen who were before him on ordnance and coast fortifications said they needed so much money, they produced proof for it, designating exact, existing need, or he never would have inserted it in the bill.

I have that confidence in him, and so has the House. Now, when they inserted proof for that $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 or $100,000,000 they must have distinctly demonstrated that the sum was needed for artillery, ammunition, or building of fortifications. Having stated they needed the money for military purposes of described character, they diverted that money from those purposes to an entirely different one. Such an act can not be too strongly condemned. Conduct of this kind is calculated to undermine the confidence of the Congress in the administrative agents of the Government. This feeling is intensified when we consider that those administrative agents have not only misapplied the funds, but in that misapplication have done exactly that which Congress three separate times said should not be done. This project, as it stands, can not be claimed to be military in its real nature.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is absolutely pertinent and correct. It probably will not prevail, for reasons which are very apparent, but if it does not prevail the real purpose back of this legislation is still more apparent. Under the guise of doing something to help our military efficiency we are, in effect, erecting a gigantic enterprise in a certain part of the South for the manufacture and production of fertilizer. I say it is a shame thus to divert funds appropriated for a specific purpose. I say it is a shame to accomplish this in an indirect way, when Congress has specifically and directly said it should not be done. It will take years to build the plant; the war will have ended long before this plant can be used. The purpose is to have the Government provide cheap fertilizer for the South.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is recognized.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to follow the wide range which this debate has taken about Muscle Shoals and the advisability of developing the power there. That is a question which has been up many times in Congress, which has been settled several times in Congress, always the same way, but which the administration, with the right given to it by Congress, has negatived, and it has gone into the development of the Muscle Shoals project. It had a right to do so. And while I have my opinion of the influences which determined the selection of Muscle Shoals, I do not care to discuss that now, because it is not involved here. I do think that it is proper that this House should register its criticism of the use of money for this development, which was provided and appropriated by the fortifications bill, for, as we supposed, an entirely different purpose, Muscle Shoals never, to my knowledge, being suggested in the hearings. And yet that money has been diverted from one purpose to another. That seems to me indefensible, and it seems to me that it is quite probable that this whole Muscle Shoals proposition, when it is investigated, as it doubtless will be, will bring deserved criticism, if not scandal, upon those who are responsible for it.

But the only question before us at this moment is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and the purpose of that amendment, as I read it, is very simple. It simply provides that the condemnation proceedings which this bill is brought in to allow, which by the arguments of those in favor of it are simply for the acquisition of land for war purposes, shall be confined to the acquisition of land for war purposes only. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] were very fervid in their appeals to us to authorize this bill for war purposes. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] simply provides by his amendment that the condemnation of land, not necessarily at Muscle Shoals, but anywhere, shall only be made for the manufacture of nitrate when it is for war purposes. That is the sole purpose of his amendment, and therefore, if these gentlemen are sincere when they appeal to us to vote this for war purposes and say that it is necessary for war, I do not see how they can fail to vote for the amendment which the gentleman from Ohio offers, because that simply provides that this land shall be taken only for the production of nitrates needed for war purposes.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] very properly and logically, it seemed to me, discussed the purposes of this amendment. It would probably be true that if we did take over the lands for war purposes, they could afterwards be used for peace purposes, and therefore that very argument, it seems to me, would compel this House to vote for the amendment, because the amendment simply says you shall not condemn the lands to make nitrates unless those nitrates are needed for war purposes, and for the whole argument made in support of this bill the very ground upon which it is brought into the House is that it is for war purposes, and that is all that this amendment provides for. Therefore it seems to me logical, by the very argument which those who are proposing this amendment bring forward, that we must adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROBBINS. By whose authority was this fund diverted from the fortification bill to the purchase of this land? It was a clear diversion.

Mr. GILLETT. By the War Department, but I do not know just who.

Mr. ROBBINS. Who has authority to divert it—the President or the Secretary of War?

Mr. GILLETT. The Secretary of War, and above him the President is responsible.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can answer just which officer did it.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from Ohio says he can answer as to just what officer did it.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to know it.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, the administration is responsible for it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the gentleman's time, if he will yield——

Mr. GILLETT. Yes——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will read from a letter on that proposition. It is the Acting Secretary of War. He says:

> The fund being used for the construction of the plants near Sheffield for the fixation of nitrogen in accordance with the cyanide process is the appropriation for the armament of fortifications. (See urgency deficiency act, approved June 15, 1917.) These plants are for the production of high explosives as components of ammunition and the cost is therefore regarded as more properly chargeable to the appropriation mentioned above than to the one made by section 124 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is the letter of the Secretary of War?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes. They deliberately took it from this appropriation.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to take a little time later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Ohio give us his figures? I would like to know what this will cost.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will wait before I take the time. I ask that gentlemen on that side consume some time.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALMON. To whom is the balance of the time allotted?

The CHAIRMAN. To the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman from Ohio does not care to proceed now, I will be glad to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have been today amazed at the quivering and flaming earnestness, to characterize it by no stronger term, manifested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who is usually so suave. He had 20 minutes' time given him under the general debate on the rule. He has interrupted speaker after speaker, and he wants more time, and so far as I have heard up to now he has not touched any feature of the bill before the House, except to assume that this bill is for the purpose solely of allowing condemnation of property at Muscle Shoals, and then to denounce the Muscle Shoals project with all the bitterness he has displayed every time that question has come before the Congress, coupling it with a kind of sinister criticism of the official administration of the Government and a vigorous denunciation of practically the whole people of that vicinity.

Now, it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the gentleman is absurd and ridiculous, because if this plant is built by the Government for the purpose of manufacturing nitrates essential to the manufacture of powder, and they should easily manufacture, we will suppose, more than is necessary for that purpose, he would cut off the operations of the plant although they might be able to furnish nitrates for fertilizer at half what the public was paying for it.

And if in the manufacture of nitrates other compounds and by-products should be so easily manufactured as almost to be without cost, he would cut them off, and that is the kind of economy that the gentleman would have this administration guilty of. No; the whole question is, here is a great water power that may not be used during the war, but it is necessary to establish a plant for the purposes authorized by the law, for the manufacture of nitrates somewhere, where in the future as well as at present it would be to the interest of this Government and of our people to have that plant located. It is admitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] that in his district they would have to manufacture nitrates by the use of steam, and so for a while it will be necessary here. But you will have a great plant established, and the purpose is that it be established for all time, and that when the uses of war are over the uses of peace will find it there for the benefit of the people, and especially of the farmer. Now, it seems to me that the gentleman from Ohio lost all of his usual suavity. He even charged over onto this side and attempted to insinuate that every Member who did not vote for his amendment must have something sinister up his sleeve.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, I never said or suggested any such thing.

Mr. HARDY. His language bore that imputation, and, with quivering cheek, charging over onto this side, he seemed to intimate that we must vote for his amendment or be stigmatized as insincere and hypocritical.

Mr. LONGWORTH. You had better vote for it.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman now says we had better vote for it. Well, the gentleman had better go back and learn where the word "better" comes from, for I tell him we vote for this measure because we believe it is essential to the prosecution of the war to locate this plant; and if they do manufacture some other compound, and if after the war they manufacture fertilizer, it will still be the right thing to vote for this measure; and we vote against his amendment because we know it is vicious. I do not believe that the limitation the gentleman proposes is sensible, and it seems to me it must have an ulterior purpose. Why? Does he want to cut off the owners of that plant or the Government from using it for the manufacture of any compound that incidentally would be a by-product? If so, why? What is the reason? I was sorry to hear some gentlemen use the expression or say that the Army officials who located it there had some yearning for the South. Gentlemen, that is not worthy of us in this day and time. I do not know what Army officials located the plant, but I believe they were honest. This is a great crisis of this country. We have not complained that Hog Island is located up yonder.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is welcome to complain of it, although it is located in my district.

Mr. HARDY. I do complain of its cost and the waste, if not graft, that have shown up there.

Mr. BUTLER. You are welcome to complain of it. I do not defend it.

Mr. HARDY. I notice you got it there just the same.

Mr. BUTLER. I invite you to complain of it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Gentlemen, in order that there may be no misapprehension as to just what this proposition is, I will read you the main provisions of the contract with what is known as the Air Nitrates Corporation, which is building these plants. The Air Nitrates Corporation, which is a subsidiary of the American Cyanamid Co., is to build the plant. Government money is invested, but they are to build it and supervise it, and get for that 3½ per cent on all costs, not to exceed $1,000,000. On $45,000,000 3½ per cent will, of course, be at least $1,000,000. Then they are to get one-quarter of a cent per pound on the ammonium nitrate produced in the plant. Then comes in the American Cyanamid Co., which owns the patents and the machinery and various other things, and it gets 6 mills per pound of nitrogen fixed as lime nitrogen. I am informed by the War Department that this will amount to something over $1,250,000 a year for each plant. They do not invest a cent, and they do not take a particle of risk. They are the ones who are interested in this proposition. The United States Government does not want to manufacture fertilizer. I asked the Secretary of War what it was proposed to make in these plants after the development of the water power at Muscle Shoals, and he said—I quote:

> When this power becomes available it will be used for nitrogen fixation or for any other war need which to the Government may seem more urgent.

In response to a further request for information as to just what was meant by the term "any other war need" to be produced at Muscle Shoals he mentioned the following: "Ferrosilicon, ferrochrome, phosphorus, silicon, chlorine products, and electrodes." There was no suggestion of fertilizer. The whole proposition is this, gentlemen, in a nutshell: The Air Nitrates Co. wanted to get the plant free—both these plants—after the Government invested some $90,000,000 or $95,000,000 in them.

Mr. BUTLER. How did the gentleman get those figures?

Mr. LONGWORTH. They cost each about $45,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. How many are there?

Mr. LONGWORTH. There are two; one now in course of construction, and the other has been authorized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There are now to be three.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. As I understand it, there is a clause in the contract under which these plants that are being built may be operated by private interests?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Exactly.

Mr. HUSTED. Which gives them a preference when it comes to the sale of the plants after the war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is correct.

Mr. HUSTED. Now, if the gentleman's amendment is not adopted, will not these plants be made infinitely more valuable to these private interests if they are permitted to use them for the manufacture of fertilizer?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With or without my amendment, these plants, so far as the actual needs of the Government are concerned, will be so much junk when the war is over. Without my amendment they will be of infinite value to this private corporation to make fertilizer, and that is the reason why they do not want this amendment adopted.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman seems to abhor fertilizer. Would the gentleman object to the manufacture of nitrates because they might be used in fertilizer?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would not object to fertilizer if it were brought in on its own merits. But this is a war measure, you say.

Mr. HARDY. Grant that; but will the gentleman oppose the manufacture of nitrates?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The only way this money could be obtained without further action of Congress was to make a violent assault upon a provision put in the fortifications appropriations bill passed last year, which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], I think, will say was never even suggested by the War Department as intended to erect plants to make ammonium nitrate.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will not yield any more. Now, we are in this position: Gentlemen have accused me of inconsistency in saying that I will vote for this measure. I will be compelled to vote for the measure, even if you do not adopt my amendment, because we are in a position where we must have nitrates, but it comes with an ill grace in a war measure like this to have inserted in it a provision with a sting in its tail which simply and solely provides for making fertilizer after the war. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have been associated with you for the past three years. You know I have not taken much of the time of the House, and I feel like apologizing for speaking so often to-day, and would not take this additional time if I did not deem it necessary in order to correct some statements which have been made since I last addressed the House.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is adopted, one of the very purposes of Congress in making provision for the building of nitrate plants will have been utterly destroyed, viz, the making of fertilizer. The act itself provides that these nitrate plants are to be erected for the purpose of producing by hydroelectric or other power nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizer and other useful products. After the war is over, with this amendment of Mr. LONGWORTH's adopted, these plants will be of no value to the Government. They are Government plants, being built by the Government through the Ordnance Department of the War Department.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. No; I can not; I have only a few minutes. When the President decided to build these plants it was necessary to select a process or processes for making nitrates. One selected for the small plant was the synthetic process of the General Chemical Co., and the other—the large plant—the cyanamide process of the American Cyanamid Co., which owns the patent and exclusive right to make nitrates by the cyanamide process. So the Government made a contract with that company by which that process could be used. I have never seen the contract, but we have the right to presume the representatives of the Government who took part in the making of the contract protected the interest of the Government and made the best contract that could be secured under the circumstances. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has had much to say about the connection of the American Cyanamid Co. and the Air Nitrate Corporation with the construction of plant No. 2. I understand that plant No. 2 is being constructed by the Air Nitrates Corporation, an organization without capital stock, but financed by the Government and officered by experts of the American Cyanamid Co. This arrangement has been perfected with a view to eliminating official red tape and expediting the building of this plant. The Westinghouse, Church, Kerr Co., of New York, has the main contract, doing the work under the direction of the Air Nitrates Corporation. The J. G. White Engineering Corporation is building a steam plant that will furnish 60,000 horsepower, while the Alabama Power Co. will transmit 40,000 horsepower from its auxiliary steam plant on the Coosa River, thus insuring 100,000 horsepower for the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 until power dam No. 2 has been completed.

These plants can be used for making fertilizers during the war if the full output is not needed for munitions of war. After the war we hope and expect that these nitrate plants can be used almost exclusively for the manufacture of fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of this country, and render them independent of the Chilean Nitrate Trust, which has robbed the farmers of this Nation for almost a half century, as well as our Government when purchased to make explosives.

Our Government has wisely decided to no longer depend exclusively upon Chile saltpeter or sodium nitrate for the manufacture of explosives for the following among other reasons:

First. That the production of the plants in Chile are limited and are divided between several nations by an international board.

Second. Organized labor trouble there might interfere with the production.

Third. It is shipped along the Pacific coast and through the Panama Canal, and if for any reason the enemy should be able to prevent such shipments our supply would be cut off and we would not have explosives sufficient to conduct the war for a month.

Fourth. On account of the high cost and freight charges.

Fifth. The ships now being used to transport it to the United States are needed in the transportation of troops and supplies to Europe. It is said that 3,000 tons of ammonium nitrate that we produce at home will save a round-trip voyage for a large cargo vessel between the United States and Chile, requiring as much time as it would for this vessel to make two round trips to Europe.

It will be possible to produce a complete fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, containing from 60 to 70 per cent plant food, at one-half the price which American farmers are paying for the inferior fertilizer containing 12 to 14 per cent plant food which they are now using.

There has been no diversion of funds or appropriations in the building of this plant, as charged by Mr. LONGWORTH. The fund which he claims is being improperly used is for ordnance. The nitrate plants are being built by the Ordnance Department. What is the business of the Ordnance Department if it is not to provide arms and ammunition? What money does he expect the Ordnance Department to use except the appropriation for this purpose and ordnance appropriations? There has been no diversion of appropriations. Do not be deceived by the statements of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LONGWORTH) there were—57 ayes and 67 noes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 61 ayes and 68 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Under the rule the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAYBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3994) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No, sir; I shall vote for the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONGWORTH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report it back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 2, line 11, after the word "compounds," insert the words "needed for munitions."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 187, answered "present" 3, not voting 119, as follows:

YEAS—122.

Bacharach	Gillett	McKenzie	Siegel
Britten	Glynn	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sloan
Browne	Gould	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smith, Idaho
Burroughs	Graham, Ill.	Madden	Smith, Mich.
Campbell, Kans.	Greene, Mass.	Magee	Snell
Chandler, N. Y.	Greene, Vt.	Mapes	Snyder
Chandler, Okla.	Griest	Merritt	Stafford
Clark, Pa.	Hamilton, Mich.	Miller, Minn.	Stiness
Cooper, Ohio	Haugen	Moore, Pa.	Strong
Cooper, W. Va.	Heaton	Moores, Ind.	Sweet
Copley	Hersey	Morgan	Swift
Cramton	Hicks	Mott	Timberlake
Dale, Vt.	Husted	Mudd	Towner
Dallinger	Hutchinson	Nelson	Treadway
Darrow	James	Nichols, Mich.	Voigt
Dempsey	Johnson, Wash.	Paige	Volstead
Denison	Kearns	Parker, N. J.	Waldow
Edmonds	Kelley, Mich.	Peters	Walsh
Elliott	Kennedy, R. I.	Platt	Ward
Ellsworth	Kiess, Pa.	Purnell	Wason
Esch	Kinkaid	Ramsey	Watson, Pa.
Fairchild, G. W.	Knutson	Ramseyer	Wheeler
Fairfield	Kraus	Rankin	White, Me.
Farr	Kreider	Reavis	Williams
Focht	La Follette	Robbins	Wilson, Ill.
Fordney	Longworth	Rodenberg	Wood, Ind.
Foss	Lufkin	Rowe	Woods, Iowa
Francis	Lundeen	Sanders, Ind.	Woodyard
Frear	McArthur	Scott, Iowa	Zihlman
French	McCormick	Scott, Mich.
Fuller, Mass.	McFadden	Sells

NAYS—187.

Alexander	Buchanan	Crago	Doughton
Almon	Burnett	Crisp	Drane
Anderson	Byrns, Tenn.	Currie, Mich.	Dupré
Ashbrook	Caldwell	Dale, N. Y.	Dyer
Aswell	Candler, Miss.	Davidson	Eagle
Austin	Cantrill	Davis	Elston
Ayres	Caraway	Delaney	Emerson
Barkley	Carlin	Dent	Ferris
Beakes	Cary	Denton	Fields
Bell	Clark, Fla.	Dickinson	Fisher
Beshlin	Claypool	Dies	Flood
Black	Cleary	Dill	Foster
Bland	Coady	Dillon	Gard
Blanton	Collier	Dixon	Garner
Booher	Connelly, Kans.	Dominick	Garrett, Tenn.
Bowers	Cooper, Wis.	Doolittle	Garrett, Tex.
Brand	Cox	Doremus	Glass

Godwin, N. C.	Key, Ohio	Park	Stephens, Miss.
Goodwin, Ark.	Kincheloe	Phelan	Stephens, Nebr.
Gray, Ala.	King	Polk	Sterling, Ill.
Gregg	Kitchin	Pou	Sterling, Pa.
Hadley	Lazaro	Quin	Stevenson
Hardy	Lea, Cal.	Rainey	Sumners
Hastings	Lee, Ga.	Raker	Switzer
Hawley	Lesher	Randall	Tague
Hayden	Lever	Rayburn	Taylor, Ark.
Hayes	Linthicum	Riordan	Temple
Heflin	Little	Robinson	Thompson
Helm	Littlepage	Romjue	Tillman
Helvering	London	Rouse	Venable
Hensley	Lunn	Rubey	Vinson
Hilliard	McKeown	Russell	Walker
Holland	Maher	Sanders, La.	Walton
Houston	Mansfield	Saunders, Va.	Watkins
Huddleston	Mason	Schall	Watson, Va.
Hull, Tenn.	Mays	Shackleford	Weaver
Humphreys	Miller, Wash.	Sherley	Welling
Igoe	Montague	Sherwood	Welty
Jacoway	Neely	Shouse	Whaley
Johnson, Ky.	Nicholls, S. C.	Sims	White, Ohio
Jones, Va.	Nolan	Sinnott	Wilson, La.
Kahn	Oldfield	Sisson	Wilson, Tex.
Keating	Oliver, Ala.	Slayden	Wingo
Kehoe	O'Shaunessy	Smith, C. B.	Wise
Kelly, Pa.	Overmyer	Snook	Wright
Kennedy, Iowa	Overstreet	Steagall	Young, Tex.
Kettner	Padgett	Stedman

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Barnhart	Browning	Butler

NOT VOTING—119.

Anthony	Fess	LaGuardia	Rogers
Baer	Flynn	Langley	Rose
Bankhead	Freeman	Larsen	Rowland
Blackmon	Fuller, Ill.	Lehlbach	Rucker
Borland	Gallagher	Lenroot	Sabath
Brodbeck	Gallivan	Lobeck	Sanders, N. Y.
Brumbaugh	Gandy	Lonergan	Sanford
Byrnes, S. C.	Garland	McAndrews	Scott, Pa.
Campbell, Pa.	Good	McClintic	Scully
Cannon	Goodall	McCulloch	Sears
Carew	Gordon	McKinley	Shallenberger
Carter, Mass.	Graham, Pa.	McLemore	Slemp
Carter, Okla.	Gray, N. J.	Mann	Small
Church	Green, Iowa	Martin	Smith, T. F.
Classon	Griffin	Meeker	Steele
Connally, Tex.	Hamill	Mondell	Steenerson
Costello	Hamilton, N. Y.	Moon	Sullivan
Crosser	Hamlin	Morin	Talbott
Curry, Cal.	Harrison, Miss.	Norton	Taylor, Colo.
Decker	Harrison, Va.	Oliver, N. Y.	Templeton
Dewalt	Haskell	Olney	Thomas
Donovan	Heintz	Osborne	Tilson
Dooling	Hollingsworth	Parker, N. Y.	Tinkham
Dowell	Hood	Porter	Van Dyke
Drukker	Howard	Powers	Vare
Dunn	Hull, Iowa	Pratt	Vestal
Eagan	Ireland	Price	Webb
Estopinal	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ragsdale	Winslow
Evans	Jones, Tex.	Reed	Young, N. Dak.
Fairchild, B. L.	Juul	Roberts

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. CHURCH with Mr. FESS.

Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. PRATT.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. HAMLIN with Mr. HEINTZ.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma with Mr. GOODALL.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. DECKER with Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts.

Mr. DONOVAN with Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. DOWELL.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia with Mr. STEENERSON.

Mr. JONES of Texas with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. JUUL.

Mr. LOBECK with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. MARTIN with Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota.

Mr. OLNEY with Mr. HULL of Iowa.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RUCKER with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. VARE.

Mr. SMALL with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a pair with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. TALBOTT. I wish to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

The name of Mr. BROWNING was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STEELE, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. BUTLER. I have a general pair with him. I voted "yea." I will withdraw that vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 320, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 110, as follows:

YEAS—320.

Alexander	Edmonds	Kitchin	Russell
Almon	Elliott	Knutson	Sanders, Ind.
Anderson	Elston	Kraus	Sanders, La.
Ashbrook	Emerson	Kreider	Saunders, Va.
Aswell	Esch	La Follette	Schall
Austin	Evans	Lazaro	Scott, Iowa
Ayres	Fairchild, G. W.	Lea, Cal.	Scott, Mich.
Bacharach	Fairfield	Lesher	Sears
Baer	Farr	Linthicum	Sells
Barkley	Ferris	Little	Shackleford
Barnhart	Fields	Littlepage	Sherley
Beakes	Fisher	London	Sherwood
Bell	Flood	Longworth	Shouse
Beshlin	Focht	Lufkin	Siegel
Black	Foss	Lundeen	Sims
Bland	Foster	Lunn	Sisson
Blanton	Francis	McArthur	Slayden
Booher	Frear	McCormick	Sloan
Bowers	French	McFadden	Small
Brand	Fuller, Mass.	McKenzie	Smith, Idaho
Britten	Gard	McKeown	Smith, Mich.
Browne	Garner	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smith, C. B.
Buchanan	Garrett, Tenn.	Madden	Snell
Burnett	Garrett, Tex.	Magee	Snook
Burroughs	Gillett	Maher	Stafford
Butler	Glass	Mansfield	Steagall
Byrnes, S. C.	Glynn	Mapes	Stedman
Byrns, Tenn.	Godwin, N. C.	Martin	Steenerson
Caldwell	Goodwin, Ark.	Mason	Stephens, Miss.
Campbell, Kans.	Gould	Mays	Stephens, Nebr.
Candler, Miss.	Graham, Ill.	Miller, Minn.	Sterling, Ill.
Cannon	Gray, Ala.	Miller, Wash.	Sterling, Pa.
Cantrill	Greene, Mass.	Mondell	Stevenson
Caraway	Greene, Vt.	Montague	Stiness
Carlin	Gregg	Moore, Pa.	Strong
Carter, Mass.	Griest	Moores, Ind.	Sullivan
Carter, Okla.	Hadley	Morgan	Sumners
Cary	Hamilton, Mich.	Mott	Sweet
Chandler, Okla.	Hamlin	Mudd	Swift
Church	Hardy	Neely	Switzer
Clark, Fla.	Hawley	Nelson	Tague
Clark, Pa.	Hayden	Nicholls, S. C.	Taylor, Ark.
Claypool	Hayes	Nichols, Mich.	Temple
Cleary	Heaton	Nolan	Thompson
Coady	Heflin	Oldfield	Tillman
Collier	Helm	Oliver, Ala.	Timberlake
Connally, Tex.	Helvering	Osborne	Towner
Connelly, Kans.	Hensley	O'Shaunessy	Treadway
Cooper, Ohio	Hersey	Overmyer	Venable
Cooper, W. Va.	Hicks	Overstreet	Vinson
Cooper, Wis.	Hilliard	Padgett	Voigt
Copley	Holland	Paige	Volstead
Cox	Houston	Park	Waldow
Crago	Huddleston	Parker, N. J.	Walker
Cramton	Hull, Iowa	Peters	Walsh
Crisp	Hull, Tenn.	Phelan	Walton
Currie, Mich.	Humphreys	Platt	Ward
Dale, N. Y.	Husted	Polk	Wason
Dale, Vt.	Hutchinson	Pou	Watkins
Dallinger	Igoe	Pratt	Watson, Pa.
Darrow	Jacoway	Price	Watson, Va.
Davidson	James	Purnell	Weaver
Dempsey	Johnson, Ky.	Quin	Webb
Denison	Johnson, Wash.	Rainey	Welling
Dent	Jones, Tex.	Raker	Welty
Denton	Jones, Va.	Ramsey	Whaley
Dickinson	Kahn	Ramseyer	Wheeler
Dies	Kearns	Randall	White, Me.
Dill	Keating	Rankin	White, Ohio
Dillon	Kehoe	Rayburn	Williams
Dixon	Kelley, Mich.	Reavis	Wilson, Ill.
Dominick	Kelly, Pa.	Riordan	Wilson, La.
Doolittle	Kennedy, Iowa	Robbins	Wilson, Tex.
Doremus	Kennedy, R. I.	Robinson	Wingo
Doughton	Kettner	Rodenberg	Wise
Dowell	Key, Ohio	Romjue	Wood, Ind.
Drane	Kiess, Pa.	Rouse	Woods, Iowa
Dupré	Kincheloe	Rowe	Woodyard
Dyer	King	Rubey	Wright
Eagle	Kinkaid	Rucker	Young, Tex.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Browning.

NOT VOTING—110.

Anthony	Crosser	Ellsworth	Garland
Bankhead	Curry, Cal.	Estopinal	Good
Blackmon	Davis	Fairchild, B. L.	Goodall
Borland	Decker	Fess	Gordon
Brodbeck	Delaney	Flynn	Graham, Pa.
Brumbaugh	Dewalt	Fordney	Gray, N. J.
Campbell, Pa.	Donovan	Freeman	Green, Iowa
Carew	Dooling	Fuller, Ill.	Griffin
Chandler, N. Y.	Drukker	Gallagher	Hamill
Classon	Dunn	Gallivan	Hamilton, N. Y.
Costello	Eagan	Gandy	Harrison, Miss.

Harrison, Va.	Lever	Parker, N. Y.	Smith, T. F.
Haskell	Lobeck	Porter	Snyder
Hastings	Lonergan	Powers	Steele
Haugen	McAndrews	Ragsdale	Talbott
Heintz	McClintic	Reed	Taylor, Colo.
Hollingsworth	McCulloch	Roberts	Templeton
Hood	McKinley	Rogers	Thomas
Howard	McLaughlin, Mich.	Rose	Tilson
Ireland	McLemore	Rowland	Tinkham
Johnson, S. Dak.	Mann	Sabath	Van Dyke
Juul	Meeker	Sanders, N. Y.	Vare
LaGuardia	Merritt	Sanford	Vestal
Langley	Moon	Scott, Pa.	Winslow
Larsen	Morin	Scully	Young, N. Dak.
Lee, Ga.	Norton	Shallenberger	Zihlman
Lehlbach	Oliver, N. Y.	Sinnott
Lenroot	Olney	Slemp

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Mr. STEELE with Mr. FESS.

Mr. BYRNES of Tennessee with Mr. CHANDLER of New York.

Mr. DECKER with Mr. GOODALL.

Mr. DELANEY with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. HASTINGS with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. OLNEY with Mr. FORDNEY.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. LEVER with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

Mr. LOBECK with Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia with Mr. MERRITT.

Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. ROSE.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOWARD, for the balance of the day, on account of illness in his family;

To Mr. MILLER of Washington, April 6 and 8, on account of delivering addresses on liberty loan; and

To Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH, for another week, on account of illness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8696) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. CURTIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who is detained from the Chamber on account of being in a committee, I ask unanimous consent that the Agricultural appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's desk, the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and a conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9054. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] asks unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 9054 from the Speaker's table, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11123, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 11123) to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of the amendments.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, then, for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate made only one material amendment to the bill. They made a few trivial amendments in the interest of clearness, by the transposition of language, and in naming the first two acts the "First liberty bond act" and the "Second liberty bond act," in accordance with the plan we adopted in this bill, namely, by providing that the short title of this act should be "Third liberty bond act." Now, I have mentioned most of the changes, except the amendment to section 5. This is the only material amendment. The Senate struck out section 5, which relates to the tax by the States upon the shares of banks, the section upon which there was so much discussion in the House for two days. The Senate put it on the ground that there was such a conflict of opinion, both in the committee and in the Senate, that it would precipitate a debate of perhaps several days, and it would be impossible with such a debate for the bill to become law in time to begin the liberty-loan campaign on April 6. And in the interest of facilitating and expediting the passage of the bill in time, they struck that provision from it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Striking out paragraph 5 leaves the law of 1864 stand and operate as heretofore?

Mr. KITCHIN. Just exactly as it was before we introduced the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That law has reference to the right of the States to tax the value of bank shares?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I might notify the House, too, that we shall expect the same proposition to come before us some time in the future in some other bill, and gentlemen who are interested might keep on guard and look out for it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The Clerk in reading the amendment putting in a new section, naming the other acts, read that amendment as coming on page 12 after line 2. I want to inquire if it does not come after line 4?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it properly comes after line 2, which is a new section to the act of September 24, 1917, reading as follows:

SEC. 17. That the short title of this act shall be "Second liberty bond act."

Mr. WALSH. It is the next amendment I am inquiring about.

Mr. KITCHIN. The next amendment is the short title of the act of April 24, 1917. This is a new section to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. And that names it the "First liberty bond act." Would not that come after line 4?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; because section 7 is a new section to the bill. It is not an amendment to the act of September 24, 1917.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. We have already concurred in the amendments. I have just explained it.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman if there was not a very strong opinion at the other end of the Capitol to the effect that this Government had no right to limit the power of a State to tax the shares of stock in its own banks?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I do not think that was the trouble at all. From what I could understand, a majority of the members of the Finance Committee favored the proposition in the House bill, but they got to discussing it and found out that there was so much conflict of opinion that they thought it would delay the bill unnecessarily, and so struck it out.

I ask that the Speaker put the question on all the amendments together.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. WALSH. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair was putting. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL SECRETARIES OF WAR—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 451).

Mr. PADGETT rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] first.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, and move that the conference report be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed, strike out all after the word "Senate" in line 10 of the engrossed bill down to and including "year" in line 11 of said bill, and insert a period and the following:

"The Assistant Secretary shall be entitled to a salary of $5,000 per annum, payable monthly, and the Second Assistant Secretary and Third Assistant Secretary shall each be entitled to a salary of $4,500 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PAY OF RETIRED CHIEF WARRANT OFFICERS, UNITED STATES NAVY—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 455).

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on Senate bill 3400, to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers, on active duty, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House amending the title, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House inserting section 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the engrossed amendments, strike out the words "performed or," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "been on active duty since August 29, 1916, or who"; and the House agree to the same.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report:

The amendment to the House amendment inserting section 2 makes the provision regulating the pay of retired warrant officers conform to that regulating the pay of retired chief warrant officers by substituting in the beginning of said section 2 the same language as is in section 1.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, should not the statement also be read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will not read both of them unless somebody especially desires to hear them.

Mr. WALSH. We want some explanation of it.

Mr. PADGETT. The effect of the amendment agreed to by the conferees is to make the language the same as in section 1. Section 1, relating to the chief warrant officers, provided for those who had been on active duty since August 29, 1916. Section 2, which was the House amendment, did not contain that language, but says, "who has performed active service," without the limitation of August 29, 1916. We struck out the words "performed or," so that it reads, "warrant officers who have been on active duty since August 29, 1916," the same language as in section 1. That is all.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to ask my colleague on the Committee on Naval Affairs if he will not yield to me 10 or 12 minutes out of the hour he is entitled to on this conference report, in order that I may address the House?

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes in which to address the House after the adoption of the conference report. I do not want to delay it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] may have 10 minutes in which to address the House after the conference report is agreed to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I think this is an opportune moment to bring to the attention of the House one of the most serious or vital injustices being done by any of our departments operating military matters that has come to my attention, at least during the war.

If I should say to the Members of this House that there are thousands of trained soldiers, trained for from 6 to 10 months with the same implements of war, trained under the same conditions of training, the same rules practically governing their entrance into the military, excepting that they are all volunteers, and that these thousands of men are literally praying God to be permitted to go to the other side, and if I should tell the House that they are not being sent, most Members would rise in astonishment; they could hardly believe that such a state of affairs could exist to-day, when France is bleeding and crying for men, and more men; and all because of mere petty jealousy that has existed for many, many years in the War Department against the United States Marine Corps, thousands of these young men are being retained on this side of the water. That condition exists to-day.

I am quite sure the Secretary of the Navy is anxious to have marines sent to the other side.

The uncontradicted German claim that 75,000 prisoners, 900 cannon, large quantities of war munitions, and tremendous destruction of life and property have accrued from their stupendous drive in northern France, which almost shakes the earth from its axis, has caused me to wonder just how much material aid America is now giving to her allies, and to ponder over "what might have been," had we not been sadly handicapped by the lack of vision which permitted three years to go by before any military preparations were made for the conflict which must have been inevitable to those who were following international affairs.

With our allies in such a desperate struggle for life and existence as the world has never before known, and France crying to the heavens for more men, more men, and an official announcement from London that many of the partially trained men in the American Army will be immediately assigned to French and British units, I think the time opportune to say to the House that because of some military jealousy, some prejudice, or the action of some military clique, thousands of the most finished human mechanisms of war, thoroughly prepared for every eventuality, are literally begging with outstretched arms for an opportunity to blaze the way in France for the Stars and Stripes, but whose prayers fall on deaf ears.

There are from 6,000 to 10,000 marines down at Paris Island and at Quantico, many of them trained to the minute——

Mr. BUTLER. And armed, too.

Mr. BRITTEN. Armed to the minute with machine guns and artillery.

Mr. BUTLER. And fully officered.

Mr. BRITTEN. Fully officered, and praying to God to be sent to the other side where they can deliver their punch that we all know the Marine Corps have. The Secretary of the Navy is just as anxious to have these fighters sent to the other side as I am or as any other lover of the Marine Corps is; but because of some jealousy, some petty prejudice in the War Department, they are not permitted to go, but are retained on this side of the ocean. That one condition will do more to wreck the Marine Corps for all time to come than anything else I could think of. If it were the intention of certain officials in the War Department to wreck the Marine Corps—and I know it is not—to destroy its morale, its esprit, this will certainly do it. The motto of the Marine Corps is known the world over. I am glad to say I heard it in China when I was there some three years ago. It is "First to fight." That is the attractive slogan of the Marine Corps, "First to fight." To it will soon have to be added the word "mosquitoes"—first to fight mosquitoes at Paris Island, Quantico, and other marine training camps, where many of these splendid young men have had from six to nine months of the most intensive training known to military minds, unless some power sweeps away this prejudice that exists in the War Department against the marines. I am afraid the Marine Corps will have to bury Gen. Barnett unless his boys are given a chance to fight. In the name of Heaven, who is keeping them on this side? I call upon the Secretary of the Navy to tell the country who is keeping them from France, when they should be over there fighting and blazing the way for the Stars and Stripes. There are over 30,000 men in the Marine Corps. My good friend from Pennsylvania reminded me a moment ago that many of them have been trained for 10 years, and thousands of them have been in training for more than eight or nine months. They are thoroughly equipped and officered, and they use the same weapons that the Army are using. Yet they are kept on this side of the water.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell the committee how many are on what is known as the waiting list, waiting to be enlisted in the Marine Corps—waiting for months to be enlisted?

Mr. BRITTEN. There are many boys waiting to be enlisted because of that attractive slogan "First to fight." The marines are all volunteers. There is not a drafted man among them.

Mr. BUTLER. The officers come from the ranks.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; the officers are promoted from the ranks. Gentlemen of the House, I am sure, will agree with me that there is no sense in keeping on this side men who are trained and equipped to fight in France, while others who are not their equals are being sent to the front.

Mr. HICKS. Is it not a fact that many of these marines are under the age of 21, and therefore the Marine Corps does not conflict with the selected army?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is very true. Further, the marines will not enroll a recruit unless he bring with him the approval of his exemption board. The Navy will not take him either. So there is nothing to conflict with the Army or Navy. These men are all volunteers. They want to go across. Many of the drafted men will not make as good fighting men as the marines do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman says it is apparently due to the jealousy of some official in the War Department that they are not sent across. Does the gentleman mean to say that exactly?

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not say some official in the War Department.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The question of facilities, of course, does not enter into it?

Mr. BUTLER. The facilities are ample.

Mr. BRITTEN. The facilities are ample. It is just a matter of sending trained men.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A matter of who shall go there first.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; and these men are trained and equipped to the minute in every way. I do not want the House to understand me as saying that an official in the War Department is responsible for this injustice.

I mean that some military clique in the War Department is keeping these young men from the other side. I have no idea who it is, or what the clique is. I have tried to find out and I can not. I should like to know who in authority is responsible for the marines in France being kept on patrol or police duty until very recently, and who under the heavens dares to say that from six to ten thousand of these thoroughly trained fighting machines should be kept on this side of the water doing patrol duty in Cuba, Santo Domingo, Haiti, and at our various navy yards and naval stations, when France is crying for men, men, men?

Can it be due to the same false pride which even now prevents utilization of the unquestioned military ability of such generals as Leonard Wood and Thomas Barry? Political and personal prejudices should be cast aside and every ounce of our military strength placed on French soil just as quickly as it can be made available.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will.

Mr. FARR. I understand that Gen. Pershing is very anxious to get the assistance of the marines.

Mr. BRITTEN. Maybe he is, but if he is why were not the marines, until very recently, put on the fighting line; why were they kept doing police duty that any policeman or any constable could do instead of being put in the first line? Gen. Pershing may want many more marines, but so far they are not going across when their training period has been finished.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that within the last three weeks Gen. Pershing has taken four captains in the marine service and made them colonels in the Army?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; and I know a number of marines taken from the corps and put into the Army. One of my constituents got into the corps because he understood that he could get quick action in France. He got to France, but with no chance for early action. They recognized his ability in the Infantry, and he was immediately transferred by the consent of Gen. Barnett, who said at the time that he never opposed the transfer or promotion of anybody if he can improve his condition. The young man, who was Ferdinand Jelke, went into the Infantry, as other Marines have gone, and is now a lieutenant.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not true, to return to the question of transportation, that the Secretary of the Navy is anxious to transport these men across?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is true, if my information is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right.

Mr. BRITTEN. But suppose it was a mere matter of transportation; they are sending partially trained recruits across, and, according to a dispatch from London yesterday morning, by agreement entered into between Lloyd-George, President Wilson, and Secretary Baker, we are going to send green men into the front line and let them fight shoulder to shoulder with the French and British units. That may be all right. They are not green men, but they are men partially trained—infantrymen. Why should we send them to fight with the British and French units when we have thousands of marines on this side who have been in the service anywhere from nine months to nine years, and who are kept here because of some prejudice or some jealousy of some clique on this side, and the Lord only knows what they are kept here for.

I am calling on Secretary Daniels now to tell the country what is keeping the marines on this side when he wants them to go across as badly as I do.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Can the gentleman put in words what is this prejudice that he speaks of?

Mr. BRITTEN. I wish to God I could.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Do I understand the practical situation to be this, according to the gentleman's statement, that we have the facilities available for the transportation of a considerable body of soldiers who are ready and anxious for service on the other side; but that the authorities who are charged with the arranging for the transportation of soldiers, refuse to send them to France, in other words decline to put them on the fighting line?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; that is not quite my statement. I am not so certain about available facilities for transporting the men; men are being transported every week, however, and what I complain of is that the Marine Corps, with its experience, its equipment, its length of training, should go across first. They are sending across men who have not had the experience and training that these men have had.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue for two minutes more.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask that the gentleman may continue for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I ask a further question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Who controls the order of transportation and the personnel of the troops that are transported to France?

Mr. BRITTEN. The War Department.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Do they do this, on the request of Gen. Pershing?

Mr. BRITTEN. I think it is understood that all available troops shall be sent as soon as possible.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If Gen. Pershing desired a particular body or unit of troops and made a request to that effect, I presume that the authorities on this side would take the action that would conform to that request?

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not think he requests any particular troops. He will accept all he can get. The Marine Corps is not in the Infantry and not under the jurisdiction of the War Department, but under a different department.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Gen. Pershing is aware of these groups of marines now available for active service, is he not?

Mr. BRITTEN. He may and may not be.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Presumably, as the head of the Army in France, Gen. Pershing is kept advised as to the available material in the way of soldiers on this side of the Atlantic?

Mr. BRITTEN. I venture to say that Gen. Pershing does not know that there are 4,000 marines at Paris Island. He does not know we have 4,000 marines at Quantico, nor does he know we have 3,000 marines at Mare Island.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will leave Gen. Pershing out of my inquiry. The authorities who are charged with the transportation of troops to France certainly ought to so order the movement of our forces that those units which are calculated by reason of their training to be of the best and most immediate service will be first moved. On that proposition I presume that we are all agreed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; but here are two different characters of troops.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But they are all under the control of the War Department.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; they are not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Who controls them?

Mr. BRITTEN. The Navy Department controls the Marine Corps.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Do I understand that the War Department can not send the marines without the request of the Navy Department?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; it can not. The Navy Department has requested and is requesting continually, and the War Department is continually rejecting.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the War Department can send them and presume on the request of the Navy Department?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, since the Navy Department has made that request upon the War Department then the suggested lack of authority in the War Department, has been removed, and has been afforded the authority required for action on its part.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no; I am not complaining about the Navy Department.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So that I am justified in saying that the War Department is now empowered to move this group of fighters, if it chooses to do so?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then the situation, according to the gentleman, is that the military authorities of this country distinctly decline to take advantage of the opportunity to move this body of highly efficient fighters?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is exactly true.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And preferably I understand you to say, they are sending inferior material?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is exactly true.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That then is what the military authorities of this country are doing at this time of national peril?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is a very grave accusation that you are bringing against these authorities.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then I will ask the gentleman to explain why the thoroughly trained and equipped marines are not in France?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I can not explain the situation for the simple reason that I know nothing about the facts, but we have been told that the military authorities are entitled at this particular time to receive our loyal support and cooperation. Yet I understand you to say that these authorities with no difficulties arising from lack of transportation, and with full authority to move a body of troops of a highly efficient character, distinctly decline to take that action.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is correct.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why if the gentleman is correct in his statements that is almost treason to the United States, on the part of the authorities who are charged with this grave responsibility.

Mr. BRITTEN. The Marine Corps is the greatest fighting aggregation for its size in all the world. We appropriated for its upkeep and improvement last year the sum of $53,000,000, and the Navy bill now on the calendar for the coming fiscal year carries more than $95,000,000.

Thoroughly trained Artillery regiments at Quantico might well be designated to fight side by side with the French, the Americans, or the Canadians, and yet some group of military directors in our own War Department are deliberately preventing from going abroad these men who volunteered for a service that promised all the early glory of the battle field, to which their splendid physique, wonderful discipline, and natural American courage has so brilliantly qualified them.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. Do I understand that the marines are not in the trenches now?

Mr. BRITTEN. Some marines are now in the trenches. They have been put there very recently.

Mr. WELTY. The Navy Department informed me a month and a half ago that Gen. Pershing had assigned them to a place there.

Mr. BRITTEN. The Navy Department could not inform the gentleman a month and a half ago, because they were not there a month or more ago, when the Secretary of the Navy and the Commandant of the Marine Corps were before the Committee on Naval Affairs. The gentleman has his dates confused.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There have been marines there.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, there have been marines in France for months, doing patrol duty.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman had had his way, according to the resolution that he presented, there would not have been anybody over there.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken, if I am guessing correctly at what he alludes to. What resolution has he in mind?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The resolution which the gentleman introduced provided that no one should go abroad and fight——

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman is as wrong as it is possible to be. I am glad that he has brought the matter up. The caption of my resolution read:

> A bill to authorize the President to exempt from foreign military service, upon their request, such citizens of German or Austrian birth or descent whose blood ties in the enemy country might discourage the supreme effort that is necessary for the victory of our troops on foreign soil.

It was intended to increase the efficiency of the Army and not to evade the draft. It specifically exempts no one from the draft. It is in line with an order from the White House issued by the President on March 22, 1918, directing that conscientious objectors drafted into the National Army and who are unwilling to accept combatant service, as provided in the draft law, shall be given the choice of a wide range of activities, including almost everything except actual fighting, in order to keep them in the Army, where they may be utilized to the Government's very best advantage. This presidential order is in complete accord with the desires of my resolution. If there is objection to my resolution, then there must be the same objection to that presidential order just issued to the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed a minute more in order to answer some questions.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have been interrupted rather freely, and I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask that his time be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman changes his request to five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman to a fact illustrating his position, that marines from the district which I represent have several times visited me, urging that they volunteered last summer and joined the marines for the purpose of getting into the fight, and they feel very much aggrieved, having been so thoroughly drilled for months, at being kept at home; and I want to ask the gentleman the question, Is it not a fact that sometimes people are awfully anxious to start a fight and other people sometimes have to bear the brunt of it when they get into it?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes; it is easier to start a fight than to finish it successfully.

Mr. LITTLE. Anybody can start a fight, but it often takes a good man to finish it.

Mr. BRITTEN. This is not a War Department war nor is it a Democratic war, but a conflict in which all of the resources, whether they be physical, financial, political, or otherwise, of the country should be utilized to their utmost, and I question whether Congress will sit idly by while the War Department is keeping our most efficient volunteer fighting men at home and at the same time drafting into the service thousands of sons, brothers, and fathers whose military value may be far below that of the average marine who practically fights his way into a service where quick action is promised.

According to a statement made by Maj. Gen. George Barnett, Commandant of the Marine Corps, when he appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs recently, there is nothing that will more seriously affect the morale of his corps for many years to come than to prevent them from performing a solemn duty they so sincerely desire.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think it is possible for this House to direct military movements from the floor of the House of Representatives?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I do not suggest that any military movement be directed from this floor. Is the gentleman in favor of keeping trained marines on this side or sending them to France?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am in favor of the military powers doing that which is necessary according as it appears to them, and I have absolute confidence in the patriotism of the military powers of this country and their disposition to do the thing that will win this war.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have equal confidence with the gentleman, and I say this, that Americans are in no mood to trifle with military prejudices or jealousies, and will, if need be, insist upon the Marine Corps getting into the front line of battle to fight shoulder to shoulder with the French or with the Canadians if the War Department does not want them, and the quicker we get a large number of them on the other side the better. They belong there and not here. I have every confidence in the War Department. I am not accusing any particular individual, but I do say that most of the marines are on this side of the water and they are begging to go over to France. Ninety-two per cent of the marines are good marksmen—sharpshooters.

Mr. MAGEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. MAGEE. I want to ask a question for information. Now, are the marines under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; they are.

Mr. MAGEE. Has the Secretary of the Navy offered the marines to the War Department?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am satisfied that he has. And I am calling upon the Secretary to tell to the country the reason why the marines are kept on this side.

Mr. MAGEE. The point I raise is that I can not understand where the friction would be provided the Secretary had made such a request.

Mr. BRITTEN. Most members of the Navy Committee believe the request has been made and refused.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think perhaps I ought to say in that connection that when the marines operate with the Army they are under the Secretary of War.

Mr. BRITTEN. When they operate with the Army of course they are. I want to say this also: That the marines have the machinery and an organization capable of recruiting from 4,000 to 5,000 men per month who will in no way interfere with the draft law of the Army or the regulations of the Navy. The majority are volunteers between the ages of 18 and 21, young men from colleges, full of enthusiasm, the kind that make good scrappers. That is the reason the marines are so successful.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman would consider that Gen. Pershing is in position to know possibly what we need on the other side, would he not?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; and I think he will take all the fighting men we can send him. And I am told that in the last 30 days he has said that he wished he had 500,000 marines on the other side.

Mr. FIELDS. I am told by the War Department that the orders of Pershing are followed out in the sending of men and supplies.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not know that he has ever said that he did not want marines on the other side.

Mr. FIELDS. That is not the question. I am told by the War Department that they follow the orders of Pershing.

Mr. BRITTEN. Can the gentleman tell the House why trained and equipped marines are not on the other side?

Mr. FIELDS. I do not know. But I am saying that the War Department follows the advice and orders of Pershing.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, we have all listened with surprise to the very vehement statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], and I am glad to know that he is now desirous of getting troops on the battle fields of France, because I can not help but recall that when the declaration of war was pending in this body the gentleman offered the following amendment:

Provided, however, That no part of the military forces of the United States shall be ordered to do land duty in any part of Europe, Asia, or Africa unless so directed by act of Congress, excepting those troops who specifically volunteer for such service.

If the gentleman is still of that viewpoint, before the marines or any other force could be sent abroad there would have to be a poll taken in order to see how many of them specifically volunteered, though I am glad to say that both for the marines and all other enlisted men of the service the poll would show all of them volunteering for that service. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. No.

But, Mr. Speaker, I took the floor for a particular purpose—a purpose larger than that of the gentleman from Illinois—it is to emphasize that the House can make no more fatal mistake than upon the statement of some one, or the desire or complaint of some one, in or out of Congress, to undertake to say what troops shall be sent abroad, and when and how. [Applause.] The marines have been and are abroad. They were one of the first organizations to go to Europe, as they are always one of the first organizations to go where there is fighting. There is no reason to assume, and I have heard nothing that warranted the assumption, that the marines were being discriminated against. The matter of placement of men is a matter requiring very intricate knowledge of the whole situation, not possessed even by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. The marines have expanded just as the Regular Army has expanded. They have in their ranks new men, untrained, to just the same degree that the Army has new and untrained men. Most of the very 5,000 men that the gentleman speaks of have not been in the service except since the war. The marines have been increased greatly in their number. The gentleman referred to those that were down at Quantico, and many of them are new recruits that have recently come in.

Mr. BRITTEN (interrupting). The gentleman is mistaken. There are no new recruits at Quantico.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois must not interrupt unless permitted to do so by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is entirely in error.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not care if he is. It is against the rules of the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is not in order, and is not even willing to exercise the ordinary courtesies that should mark Members of the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am very sorry, and I apologize.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let that be the end of that.

I repeat that the marines have gone through an expansion, as the Army has, and that as a necessary result of that expansion they have had to take in, as the Army has had to take in, new men, new recruits.

Now, the marines are one of the most efficient organizations of this or any other country, and I would not by any word or suggestion of mine detract in the slightest degree from their magnificent history. But there is no warrant for the bald accusation of the gentleman that officials having in their keeping the safety and the honor of the Nation are willing to trifle with them in order to discriminate against this corps. [Applause.] I repudiate such a suggestion; but I again congratulate the gentleman that his zeal has at least carried him to the point where he now wants to see a part of the forces of America on the other side. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. FIELDS. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take all of the five minutes, but I want to say that we can not prosecute this war from the floor of this House. I have conferred with high officials of the War Department, and we have had them before the Committee on Military Affairs, and the one thing that I have understood from them all the time is that Gen. Pershing's orders are followed out to the letter as to the character of troops that shall be transported, and the supplies, and so forth.

Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] impugn the motives of Gen. Pershing, the man in charge of our forces in Europe?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman asking me a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. No. I do not impugn the honor or the glory or the intention of Gen. Pershing. I have every confidence in the general; but the fact remains that the troops are still in this country.

Mr. FIELDS. Does not the gentleman think that Gen. Pershing is better informed as to the character of troops that should be sent to Europe than the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BRITTEN. I question whether he knows what character of troops we have in this country to-day.

Mr. FIELDS. Does the gentleman suppose that Gen. Pershing is not informed as to the number of marines that we have in the United States to-day?

Mr. BRITTEN. He knows the number, but not the location.

Mr. FIELDS. That is very immaterial. He knows that they are in the United States and that they are in the service of the Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. They may be scattered all over, and he would not want them. There is a large unit right close here.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman know whether Gen. Pershing, in any sense, at any time, in any way, has indicated to the War Department here what division or what part of a corps or what class of troops should go over?

Mr. FIELDS. He does not indicate what particular division or part of division that shall be sent, but he does indicate what class of men he wants, whether they shall be trained men or raw, or partially trained, whose training shall be completed over there.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it not a fact that Gen. Pershing makes no recommendation or request beyond the fact that he wants to get men there just as rapidly as they can come—all men who are efficient? In other words, is not the selection of men in this country, the divisions to go over, purely in the province of the officials on this side?

Mr. FIELDS. It is my information that Gen. Pershing's orders are observed in the selection of men and supplies to go over.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Gen. Pershing really is not to be considered in connection with this discussion at all.

Mr. FIELDS. Gen. Pershing is consulted as to the character of troops that are sent forward. Whether they send them there for training, or whether they send trained men, that is a question left to Gen. Pershing, and the character of supplies that is most needed is left to Gen. Pershing. In fact Gen. Pershing is in charge on the other side. There is where the work is being done. Gen. Pershing's orders are being carried into execution, and a man can not criticize the work without criticizing Gen. Pershing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11123. An act to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes."

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3736) to provide for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relative of any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 459), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 460), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WATKINS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2866) for the relief of Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs of Joshua Nicholls, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 461), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11004) granting a pension to Jennie K. Burke; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1867) granting a pension to Joseph F. Flynn; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 3106) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Keefe; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. VAN DYKE: A bill (H. R. 11231) to regulate the hours of duty of the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GARRETT of Texas: A bill (H. R. 11232) to fix the punishment of persons acting as spies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 11233) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate condemned cannon and balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 11234) granting 30 days' leave of absence in each year, without forfeiture of pay during such leave, to civilian employees of the United States Coast Guard and Life-Saving Service; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SWIFT: Resolution (H. Res. 302) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to audit certain accounts and expenditures of the Treasury; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the independence of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TAGUE: Memorial of the Legislature of Massachusetts, relative to the independence of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Memorial of the Legislature of Massachusetts, relative to the independence of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 11235) granting an increase of pension to William H. R. Snyder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11236) granting an increase of pension to B. L. Walker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOODALL: A bill (H. R. 11237) granting a pension to George Maybury; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11238) granting a pension to Nathan N. York; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 11239) granting an increase of pension to James R. Lewis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 11240) granting an increase of pension to Lillis C. Keech; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 11241) granting a pension to Drucilla T. Collier; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMYER: A bill (H. R. 11242) for the relief of Dr. R. B. Leister and Mercy Hospital, Tiffin, Ohio; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BEAKES: Papers to accompany House bill 11220 to increase the pension of Alfred Dobbins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: Memorial of General War-Time Commission of the Churches, urging the passage of House bill 6320, to increase the number of chaplains in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of Phillips-Jones Co., New York City, urging the passage of the bill providing for partial payments of excess-profits taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of W. Benton Crisp, New York, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 9406; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. ESCH: Papers in support of House bill 783, granting a pension to Marcia J. Dewey; also papers in support of House bill 784, granting a pension to Jennie M. Nichols; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, resolution of the Trades and Labor Council of La Crosse, Wis., asking for an amendment to the Federal Constitution, providing for popular election of and short terms for the Federal judges; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Resolution of the executive committee of the Authors' League of America, in opposition to the zone system as applied to second-class mail matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of Pauline W. Holme, president Baltimore Woman's Christian Temperance Union, urging war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Evidence in support of House bill 10140, granting an increase of pension to Mathias Logelin; also papers in support of House bill 10138, granting a pension to Maggie Coss; also evidence to accompany House bill 10139, granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of House bill 10141, granting an increase of pension to Conrad H. Rowe; also papers to accompany House bill 10137, granting a pension to Catherine Mahady; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NOLAN: Petitions of Countess Markievic Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom (Timothy O'Leary, president; Hugh O'Connor, secretary; and Mrs. Maude McGoldrick, recording secretary); Columbia Division, No. 2, Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians; and Connaught Social and Benevolent Association (Bernard Boyle, secretary), all of San Francisco, Cal., favoring House joint resolution 204, by Jeanette Rankin; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TEMPLE: Papers to accompany House bill 10056; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 5, 1918.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for the light of another day and for all its possibilities and opportunities. We thank Thee for the land in which we live and all that it represents, not only to us within its borders, but of liberty beyond the seas. Grant that in this great struggle of the nations there may be given unto those who represent truth and righteousness and freedom final and splendid achievement on the battle front and may peace soon crown their endeavors. We ask it in the name of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Overman	Sterling
Baird	Hollis	Page	Sutherland
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Swanson
Calder	Kendrick	Pittman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kirby	Poindexter	Thompson
Colt	Lewis	Pomerene	Tillman
Culberson	Lodge	Ransdell	Townsend
Curtis	McCumber	Saulsbury	Trammell
Dillingham	McKellar	Shafroth	Underwood
Fall	McLean	Sheppard	Vardaman
France	McNary	Sherman	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	Martin	Shields	Warren
Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gore	Nelson	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Hale	New	Smith, S. C.
Hardwick	Norris	Smoot

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. He is taking part in the liberty loan campaign.

I wish also to announce the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is also taking part in the campaign for the sale of liberty bonds.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to state that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is absent and will be absent for some time in the liberty loan campaign.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is detained on account of illness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is detained on important public business. I also wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3994) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, requests a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10205) to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I present certain memorials from the Montana Legislature to the Congress of the United States. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD in the order in which they have been arranged. I will state that the first memorial is in favor of the antisedition legislation which is now pending before this body.

The memorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 1. Introduced by Holt, Griffin, Kemmis, Davis, Sand, Hawks, Sektnan, and White.

A resolution memorializing Congress to pass necessary legislation defining as a crime, and providing punishment therefor, all acts of individuals, associations, corporations, and partnerships, done or attempted to be done, that may be construed as sedition or sabotage.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas under the present laws of the United States successful prosecution of persons has not been maintained in the Federal district of Montana for the making or circulating of false statements, arguments, and reports concerning the objects and purposes of executive officers of the United States and of legislative bodies thereof in declaring that a state of war exists between this Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government, criticizing, belittling, and ridiculing the armed forces of the United States to the detriment of the successful enlistment and procuring of men for service in the Army and Navy of the United States and interfering with the success of the sale of bonds of the United States for the purpose of raising money in carrying on the war with the Imperial German Government; and

Whereas the successful prosecution of individuals and organizations can not be maintained under the present laws of the United States for advocating and threatening the destruction of industrial and agricultural properties and interfering with the management and production thereof under the guise of bettering the conditions of workingmen, and such actions being detrimental to the industrial and agricultural institutions in the various communities in the State of Montana: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the Senate concurring therein, now assembled in extraordinary session, That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of the necessary legislation defining as a crime, and providing punishment therefor, all acts of individuals, associations, corporations, and partnerships done or attempted to be done for the purposes aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the honorable Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from the State of Montana, requesting them to exert every effort within their power to enact such legislation.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved, February 20, 1918.

S. V. STEWART, Governor.

Filed February 21, 1918, at 10.20 o'clock a. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial 1, memorializing Congress to pass necessary legislation defining as a crime, and providing punishment therefor, all acts of individuals, associations, corporations, and partnerships, done or attempted to be done, that may be construed as sedition or sabotage, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 20th day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

—

House joint memorial 2. Introduced by Kemmis.

Memorial to the Senate in Congress of the United States to pass an amendment to the Federal Constitution and submit the same to the several States for ratification, extending and giving throughout the United States the right of suffrage to women.

To the honorable Senate in Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas the State of Montana has granted the franchise for the ballot to the women of this State and accorded to them equal political rights; and

Whereas the woman's suffrage in this State has been conducive to good government, has purified our politics, made better homes, and the enobling influence of Montana's womanhood, exerted at the polls, has been for the best interests of this young and prosperous Commonwealth; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate in Congress of the United States a measure known as the "Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States," the purpose of which measure is to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending and giving throughout the United States the right of suffrage to women, and which measure has been passed by the House of Representatives, and is now pending in the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we, the members of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, in extraordinary session assembled, do hereby petition and earnestly pray the Senate of the United States that such measure so proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending and giving throughout the United States the right of suffrage to women, be passed and submitted to the several States for ratification; and

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senate of the United States; and that copies hereof be transmitted to the Senators in Congress of the United States from the State of Montana.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 23, 1918.

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

Filed February 23, 1918, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 2, petitioning the Senate in Congress of the United States to pass an amendment to the Federal Constitution and submit the same to the several States for ratification, extending, and giving throughout the United States the right of suffrage to women, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 23d day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State. Done at the City of Helena, the capital of said State, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

—

House joint memorial No. 6. Introduced by Henderson, Rainey, and Belden.

A resolution memorializing Congress for the passage of proper legislation enabling the President to order railroads to make additions and improvements necessary for war purposes and the public interest, and petitioning for an order directing the construction of the proposed line of the Great Northern Railway Co. from Richey, in Dawson County, to Winnett, in Fergus County.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas in the year 1909 the Dakota & Eastern Montana Railway Co., a subsidiary of the Great Northern Railway Co., made a survey for a railroad from Newlon Junction, Mont., to Lewistown, Mont., passing through the central portion of the counties of Dawson and Fergus from east to west, and being equidistant from the main lines of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railways; and

Whereas during the year 1910 the right of way for the construction of said railroad was procured, and that during the year 1916 the said railroad was constructed as far as Richey, in Dawson County, Mont., on the eastern end, and as far as Winnett, in Fergus County, Mont., in the year 1917, on the western end; and

Whereas there is approximately 175 miles of the said proposed railroad between the said towns of Richey and Winnett which has not been constructed; and

Whereas the territory through which the railroad is proposed to be constructed is very fertile and productive agricultural land, and there are approximately 30,000 people residing in the territory now wholly without railroad service which would be tributary to the proposed line, practically all of whom are engaged in agriculture, and there are about 7,000,000 acres of agricultural land which would be tributary to the said proposed railroad, a very large percentage of which would immediately upon the construction of said railroad be cultivated and used in the production of small grains; and

Whereas the said proposed railroad will, when completed, form the only direct connection between the smelters of Great Falls and Lewistown and the rich and highly developed farm lands of the Judith Basin, on the one hand, and the markets of the east, on the other; and

Whereas there is a great emergency justifying the use of money and steel necessary to be used in the construction of said railroad, and that the said proposed railroad would be of great benefit to the Government as a war measure in increasing the production of wheat and other small grains and the marketing of said products; and

Whereas, section 4 of Senate bill No. 3385, now pending before the Congress of the United States, provides: "The President may also on or in connection with the property of any carrier make or order any carrier to make any additions or improvements necessary or desirable for war purposes or in the public interest": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, in extraordinary session assembled, the Senate concurring therein, petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation enabling the President to order the construction of necessary improvements to and extensions of railroads necessary or desirable for war purposes and in the public interest; and be it further

Resolved, That we respectfully petition the President of the United States, in case of the passage of such legislation, to order the construction of the said proposed extension of the Great Northern Railway Co.; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the presiding officer of each House of the National Congress and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana and to the Director General of Railroads, and that every effort be used for the accomplishment of the purposes herein indicated.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 22, 1918.

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

Filed February 22, 1918, at 9.10 o'clock p. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 6, memorializing Congress for the passage of proper legislation enabling the President to order railroads to make additions and improvements necessary for war purposes and the public interest, and petitioning for an order directing the construction of the proposed line of the Great Northern Railway Co. from Richey, in Dawson County, to Winnett, in Fergus County, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 22d day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 14th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

—

House joint resolution 1. Introduced by Mason.

A joint resolution relating to the labor situation throughout the State of Montana and the Northwest and the urgent need for legislation providing for the location, registration, classification, and proper assignment thereof.

Be it resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That—

Whereas the principal industries of the State of Montana, to wit, lumber, sugar beet, mining, and farming industries, are at the present time confronted with a very grave situation owing to the fact that there now exists a serious shortage in the various classes of labor required to properly conduct those industries and to the further fact that this condition is largely due to a lack of sympathetic organization of the available men therefor; and

Whereas the same situation confronts the railroads in this State and the United States, and State public road building now under way, and also the efficiency of the Forestry Department; and

Whereas owing to the fact that a tremendous number of men of various classes have been called to the defense of their country, leaving these industries and work of all kinds in the State of Montana and throughout the Northwest with a great deficiency of labor and more especially experienced help; and

Whereas at the present time the Government is in great need of lumber, more especially for shipbuilding and aeroplane construction, and also of minerals of the various kinds that are being daily used in the manufacture of armor and munitions, these therefore being necessary supplies for the conduct of the war and to properly and efficiently supply our allies; and

Whereas this Government is undertaking to provide the world with foodstuffs, in addition to provisioning our own Army and Navy and feeding our people, and will require therefor great quantities of wheat, sugar, meat, potatoes, and other farm products; and

Whereas these industries of the season of 1918 will not be able to operate at their full capacity and greatest efficiency without the proper steps being taken to relieve this condition; and

Whereas there has been great congestion of railroad business in the country due to this shortage of labor and a shortage of help which makes it impossible to give proper protection to the forests from fires of incendiary and other origin; and

Whereas it is now the immediate and paramount duty of every man, regardless of his business or station in life, to make every sacrifice and to bend every energy to aid and assist in carrying on the business of production and the accumulation of the energy and resources of our State and country; and

Whereas, without the location, registration, and proper classification and assignment of every man available for the work in which he can do the most good for his country, it will be impossible to save the crops that will be grown in Montana this year, and impossible to conduct other industries at their full capacity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Montana, That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact such laws as may be necessary for the proper registration, classification, location, and assignment of the various classes of labor in this State and throughout the northwestern part of the United States in order that this situation may be relieved and the industries and business above mentioned may be operated at full capacity; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana in the Congress of the United States with the urgent request of this assembly that they use their utmost efforts to immediately secure the enactment, if possible, of legislation which will relieve this condition and thereby greatly aid our Government in prosecuting this great world war to an early and a successful conclusion.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 20, 1918.

S. V. STEWART, Governor.

Filed February 21, 1918, at 10.20 o'clock a. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of House joint resolution No. 1, relating to the labor situation throughout the State of Montana and the Northwest, and the urgent need for legislation providing for the location, registration, classification and proper assignment thereof, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 20th day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 16th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

—

House joint resolution 2. Introduced by Kemmis.

A joint resolution ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America, at its second session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress." Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Montana, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana; and, further, be it

Resolved, That certified copies of this joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State at Washington and to the presiding officers of each House of the National Congress.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR.
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 20, 1918.

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

Filed February 21, 1918, at 10.20 o'clock a. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 2, ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 20th day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

—

Substitute joint house resolution 3. Introduced by Harbert, Mason, and Larse.

A resolution memorializing Congress for an appropriation of $750,000 for the Flathead irrigation project for the ensuing year.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana meeting in extraordinary session in response to a proclamation of the governor calling this body together for the consideration of measures necessary to a successful prosecution of the war, among which of primary importance is a bill providing for loans at low rates of interest to needy farmers for the enhancement of agricultural production in the State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana hears with grave concern reports from Washington of the intention of Congress to reduce a contemplated appropriation of $750,000 toward the completion of the Flathead Reservation irrigation project in western Montana to $250,000, and does hereby go on record as in favor of and registers its wish for an appropriation of $750,000 for said project; and it is further

Resolved, That a failure of the Congress of the United States to make such appropriation of $750,000 would be violative of the best interests of this Nation, a great discouragement to the farmers and to the farming interests of Montana, thereby resulting in decreased farm production in one of the most fertile sections of the State of Montana, and being prompted by a consideration for the best interests of this Nation and the State of Montana demands favorable action by the United States Congress of an appropriation of $750,000 toward the completion of the Flathead Reservation project, and it is hereby ordered that a copy of this resolution be telegraphed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, with the recommendation that it be read before both bodies and referred to the proper committee.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 19, 1918.

S. V. STEWART, Governor.

Filed February 19, 1918, at 3.20 o'clock p. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of substitute joint house resolution No. 3, memorializing Congress for an appropriation of $750,000 for the Flathead irrigation project for the ensuing year, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 19th day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

—

House joint resolution 4. Introduced by C. F. Holt.

A resolution memorializing Congress to vest in the President such authority as may be necessary to regulate the production, distribution, and price of commodities necessary for the production of the cereal crops of the Nation.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas farm implements, grain sacks, binding twine, and other commodities necessary to the production of wheat and other cereals have increased in price from 50 to 400 per cent; and

Whereas there is either an actual or artificial shortage of some of these commodities; and

Whereas this condition threatens to lessen the food production of the Nation: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That we petition the Congress of the United States to vest in the President such authority as may be necessary to regulate the production, distribution, and price of such commodities, and that such action be taken in time to guarantee an abundant supply and reasonable price of such commodities for the production of the 1918 crop: And, further, be it

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted by the secretary of State of Montana to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about speedy action for the accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 22, 1918:

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

Filed February 22, 1918, at 9.10 o'clock p. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution 4, memorializing Congress to vest in the President such authority as may be necessary to regulate the production, distribution, and price of commodities necessary for the production of the cereal crops of the Nation, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 22d day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

—

House joint resolution 10. Introduced by Holt.

A resolution petitioning Congress to take steps and measures to investigate the feasibility of constructing a spur track from the main line of the Great Northern Railroad running through the city of Belt, State of Montana, to the coal fields lying on the east edge of said city.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled.

Whereas at the present time the demand for coal throughout the United States greatly exceeds the output now available; and

Whereas on the east side of the city of Belt, Mont., lies an immense coal field, containing millions of tons of coal with several mines already producing jointly from 250 to 300 tons of coal daily, but, owing to the fact that there is no railroad spur constructed to the said coal field, the output of said mines is limited, and the cost of producing coal under present conditions is almost prohibitive; and

Whereas should a spur track be built from the main line of the Great Northern Railroad, a distance of approximately 1½ miles to said coal fields, the production thereof could very easily be increased from the present tonnage to approximately 3,500 tons daily: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, in extraordinary session assembled (the Senate concurring herein), that we petition the Congress of the United States to take steps and measures to investigate the same and if feasible to construct such a spur at the earliest possible time so that the increased tonnage from said coal field will be available for use within the near future; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of Montana to the Senate of the United States; and that a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the state of Montana to the House of Representatives of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about a speedy action for the accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 22, 1918.

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

Filed February 22, 1918, at 9.10 o'clock p. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of House joint resolution No. 10, petitioning Congress to take steps and measures to investigate the feasibility of constructing a spur track from the main line of the Great Northern Railroad running through the city of Belt, State of Montana, to the coal fields lying on the east edge of said city, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 22d day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 16th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

Mr. RANSDELL. I present a communication from the Teachers' Association of Porto Rico, expressing appreciation and gratitude to the President and Congress of the United States for conferring a larger measure of self-government and full citizenship upon that island, and pledging loyalty and support of the Government in the world war. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. I also present a telegram transmitting resolutions unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Monroe, La., one of the largest towns in the northern part of my State, urging me to use my best efforts to secure amendments to the espionage law so as to make the punishments thereunder more severe, and to include women, and so forth, in order that they may be prosecuted. I move that the telegram be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to present a large number of petitions, signed by a number of people in my State, asking for the enactment of a law to punish those who impede or interfere with the operations or success of the United States in the war or in recruiting or enlistment, and so forth. I move that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present resolutions from the Interstate Association of Building Contractors and also a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of East St. Louis, Ill., which I ask be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions and memorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERSTATE ASSOCIATION OF BUILDING CONTRACTORS.

Whereas it is essential to the welfare of our entire country that each and every part of the country participate to the greatest possible extent in all activities leading to a successful and honorable prosecution and termination of the war; and

Whereas the experience of the past year has demonstrated the necessity of avoiding an unbalanced condition of business caused by concentrating an undue proportion of war activities along one edge of the country, with the resultant evils of traffic congestion, coal and food shortages, labor difficulties, and lack of housing, all of which reacts on the entire country and leads to profiteering and unwarranted increase in the cost of living; and

Whereas the States of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin have enormous resources, available to the Government but not yet made full use of, in the lines of finance, manufacture, production of raw material, rail and water shipping facilities, housing, labor supply, and construction facilities, which can be made use of most effectively in their several home localities, thereby restoring the country to its normal balance and relieving it from the evils due to unbalanced conditions: Be it

Resolved, That we, as loyal citizens and business men of the loyal States above mentioned, do hereby tender to the Government of the United States the immense uncontracted resources of these great States, and do most strongly urge the utmost possible use of these resources toward the attainment of an honorable and lasting peace.

Resolved, That we urge concerted action by the building organization and all other business and labor organizations in these States to place before the authorities at Washington complete and up-to-date data regarding such of our resources and output as are not yet contracted for or susceptible to increase and, if desirable, to maintain a permanent bureau at Washington for prompt cooperation by these States with the Government in war and other activities.

Resolved, That we, the representatives of the building industry of the States of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, assembled here at the city of Des Moines, Iowa, this 20th day of March, 1918, do hereby unanimously request that a representative from the States mentioned above be appointed to serve upon the war emergency construction board; and be it further

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress be requested to present this request to the proper authorities for their immediate and favorable consideration.

—

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
East St. Louis, Ill., April 2, 1918.

To the Illinois delegation in Congress:

The cities comprising the East St. Louis district are lacking in postal service; it might be said that they have no service at all. East St. Louis has 93,000 inhabitants, and the whole district, which includes Granite City, National City, and Dupo, besides other towns, has a combined population of nearly 200,000. This district forms practically one community.

The joint congressional committee has just recommended an extension of the pneumatic-tube system in St. Louis, Mo., but has ignored the imperative requirements of this district in Illinois, which is now approximately one-fourth as large as St. Louis.

We feel that this disregard of interests of East St. Louis justifies us in calling on the whole Illinois delegation in Congress to cooperate with Senators LEWIS and SHERMAN and Congressman RODENBERG in securing justice for us.

You will notice in the report of the hearings conducted by the committee that we showed that this city and district are grossly neglected, and that improvements, including a tube extension, are necessary. All the mail from all parts of the United States, as report shows, is handled at the round table of the St. Louis post office.

We respectfully request you to urge the committee to recommend extensions to East St. Louis, and that due pressure be brought to bear also on the Post Office Department. We have asked the First Assistant Postmaster General to assign an expert to investigate conditions here, with the object of improving the postal service generally. We would be glad to have you join in this request.

As you know, St. Louis is using the war as a subterfuge to get unfair advantages over the neighboring Illinois cities. You are familiar, no doubt, with the recent fight which we have had over our coal differential. St. Louis is employing every means and artifice against this district, and therefore we ask you to support our cause at every opportunity with Senators LEWIS and SHERMAN and Congressman RODENBERG. We need your support and cooperation.

Truly, yours,

J. N. FINING, Secretary-Manager.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of the congregation of the Boulevard Baptist Church, of Fort Worth, Tex., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oakland County, Mich., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the Academy of Medicine, of Kalamazoo, Mich., praying for advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps in the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Fort Laramie, Guernsey, Lingo, Thermopolis, and Gebo, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Newport, Corvallis, and Portland, all in the State of Oregon, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Peak, Oreg., praying for a repeal of the present zone system of postage rate on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted by the Symposium Society of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps in the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. I send to the desk various memorials and resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of Montana, and ask that they be incorporated in the RECORD and appropriately referred. I shall ask that the Secretary read from the desk one which relates to a piece of legislation now pending before the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

House joint memorial 1. Introduced by Holt, Griffin, Kemmis, Davis, Sand, Hawks, Sektnan, and White.

A resolution memorializing Congress to pass necessary legislation defining as a crime and providing punishment therefor all acts of individuals, associations, corporations, and partnerships, done or attempted to be done, that may be construed as sedition or sabotage.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas under the present laws of the United States, successful prosecution of persons has not been maintained in the Federal district of Montana for the making or circulating of false statements, arguments, and reports concerning the objects and purposes of executive officers of the United States and of legislative bodies thereof in declaring that a state of war exists between this Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government, criticizing, belittling, and ridiculing the armed forces of the United States to the detriment of the successful enlistment and procuring of men for service in the Army and Navy of the United States and interfering with the success of the sale of bonds of the United States for the purpose of raising money in carrying on the war with the Imperial German Government; and

Whereas the successful prosecution of individuals and organizations can not be maintained under the present laws of the United States for advocating and threatening the destruction of industrial and agricultural properties, and interfering with the management and production thereof under the guise of bettering the conditions of workingmen and such actions being detrimental to the industrial and agricultural institutions in the various communities in the State of Montana: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring therein), now assembled in extraordinary session, That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of the necessary legislation defining as a crime and providing punishment therefor, all acts of individuals, associations, corporations, and partnerships done or attempted to be done for the purposes aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the honorable Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from the State of Montana, requesting them to exert every effort within their power to enact such legislation.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 20, 1918.

S. V. STEWART,
Governor.

Filed February 21, 1918, at 10.20 o'clock a. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial 1, memorializing Congress to pass necessary legislation defining as a crime and providing punishment therefor all acts of individuals, associations, corporations, and partnerships, done or attempted to be done, that may be construed as sedition or sabotage, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 20th day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State. Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WALSH presented a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of Montana, which was read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

House joint resolution 2. Introduced by Kemmis.

A joint resolution ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States of America at its second session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"'ARTICLE —.

"'SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"'SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"'SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress'";

Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Montana, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana; and further be it

Resolved, That certified copies of this joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State at Washington and to the Presiding Officers of each House of the National Congress.

JAMES F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 20, 1918.

S. V. STEWART, Governor.

Filed February 21, 1918, at 10.20 o'clock a. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution 2, ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, this 20th day of February, 1918.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1918.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WALSH presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Montana, relating to the labor situation throughout the State of Montana and the Northwest and the urgent need for legislation providing for the location, registration, classification, and proper assignment thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Montana, memorializing Congress for the passage of proper legislation enabling the President to order railroads to make additions and improvements necessary for war purposes and the public interest, and petitioning for an order directing the construction of the proposed line of the Great Northern Railway Co. from Richey, in Dawson County, to Winnett, in Fergus County, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Montana, petitioning Congress to take steps and measures to investigate the feasibility of constructing a spur track from the main line of the Great Northern Railroad running through the city of Belt, State of Montana, to the coal fields lying on the east edge of that city, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition adopted by the Legislature of the State of Montana, memorializing Congress to vest in the President such authority as may be necessary to regulate the production, distribution, and price of commodities necessary for the production of the cereal crops of the Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Montana, memorializing Congress to pass an amendment to the Federal Constitution and submit the same to the several States for ratification, extending and giving throughout the United States the right of suffrage to women, which was ordered to lie on the table.

COST OF OFFICERS' UNIFORMS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, some time ago the Senate passed a bill requiring the Government to furnish uniforms to officers at cost. That bill was referred to the proper committee in the House, and the chairman of that committee sends me a report from the office of the Quartermaster General that I think it is appropriate to call attention to, especially in view of many letters I am receiving from persons interested. I quote a paragraph from this report:

> At the present time the Quartermaster Corps will sell to all officers all quartermaster supplies that are in stock for issue to troops, with the exception of the wool coat and breeches, which are only furnished to officers overseas or on priority lists. This slight restriction will be entirely removed when there is an availability of wool garments. The Quartermaster Corps can easily comply with the act and keep in stock the equipment referred to, provided a uniform specification for each item is furnished, so that the same shall be similar in quality and design.

That is one of the important provisions in the bill the Senate passed. It gave to the Secretary of War the authority to fix the quality and design of these uniforms. In view of the report of the Quartermaster Department, it seems to me there ought to be no objection anywhere to the passage of the bill. It is very important that it should be passed so as to prevent the recurrence of a situation which has existed heretofore, where the Government has refused to furnish these supplies, and which led to the passage of this bill by the Senate. It is very important that the department should be given the authority to determine the quality and the design, and then, as the department says here, it can very easily comply with the act. There seems to be no objection from any source that should be given any weight.

So I hope the House committee will act very promptly and that the House will act promptly. I am glad I can make that reference without violating the parliamentary rules of this body.

I ask that the letter be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, March 25, 1918.

(Memorandum for Secretary of War.)

With reference to Senate 3433, an act requiring the Government to furnish uniforms to officers of the Army and Navy, sent to this office for report by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, the following is submitted:

At the present time the Quartermaster Corps will sell to all officers all quartermaster supplies that are in stock for issue to troops, with the exception of the wool coat and breeches, which are only furnished to officers overseas or on priority lists. This slight restriction will be entirely removed when there is an availability of wool garments. The Quartermaster Corps can easily comply with the act and keep in stock the equipment referred to, provided a uniform specification for each item is furnished, so that the same shall be similar in quality and design.

At present officers are required to purchase all their own clothing and quartermaster equipment for personal use, except as noted below:

Special articles of clothing for aviation purposes issued to all officers on duty in the Aviation Section.

Pins, tent shelter, issued to officers below the rank of major.

Poles, tent shelter, issued to officers below the rank of major.

Tent, shelter, half, issued to officers below the rank of major.

Whistle and chain issued to company, battalion, and regimental officers, except chaplains and medical officers.

GEO. W. GOETHALS,
Acting Quartermaster General.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3943) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 357) thereon.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3923) authorizing the Indian tribes and individual Indians, or any of them, residing in the State of Washington and west of the summit of the Cascade Mountains, to submit to the Court of Claims certain claims growing out of treaties and otherwise, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 358) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3572) authorizing the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians in the State of Oregon to submit claims to the Court of Claims, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 359) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 4273) canceling Indian trust patents Nos. 307319 and 366449; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4274) providing for the establishment of the Port of San Juan, customs district of Porto Rico, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4275) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4276) to provide for the care and relief of destitute Indians in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4277) providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4278) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Nimocks (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 4279) for the relief of Francis L. Flanders (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4280) to amend the act of October 3, 1917, entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4281) referring claim of Fred Hartel et al. to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4282) to prevent in time of war departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 146) extending to Porto Rico the same rights and privileges as is accorded the several States under the act of February 23, 1917, providing for the promotion of vocational education; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. MYERS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the compensation of postal employees, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ELIZABETH CROCKETT.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 5481, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, granting a pension to Elizabeth Crockett, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PAY OF RETIRED CHIEF WARRANT OFFICERS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, on yesterday I submitted to the Senate a conference report on the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty, and it was received and ordered to lie on the table, as it had to be acted upon first by the other House. I understand a message from the House has been received, announcing that the report of the committee of conference had been adopted, and I ask that the conference report submitted by me be taken from the table and considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers on active duty having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House amending the title, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House inserting section 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 1 and 2 of the engrossed amendments strike out the words "performed or" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "been on active duty since August 29, 1916, or who"; and the House agree to the same.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is agreed to.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. POMERENE. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes. I ask that the report lie on the table for the present and await action thereon by the other House.

The report was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5 and 6, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and the matter inserted by said amendments strike out in lines 1, 2, and 3, page 3, all of section 2 after the word "or," in line 1, page 3, the matter stricken out being "intentionally and unduly enhances prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "intentionally enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association, or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 18, page 5, in addition to the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment, strike out the words "and unduly," and in addition to the words added by the Senate amendment add in line 20, page 5, after the word "association," and before the word "it," the following: "or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

ATLEE POMERENE,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GORE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. NORRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10205. An act to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 4, 1918:

S. 2469. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney.

On April 5, 1918:

S. 3714. An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] The morning business is closed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8753.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neurality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire at this time to offer an amendment, which I propose later to move to the bill now pending. I ask that the amendment be read. It is very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The use of the mails shall not be permitted to any newspaper, magazine or periodical, circular, or pamphlet, which is printed in whole or in part in the German language.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire if the amendment which has just been read is intended to be proposed to the bill now under consideration?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it is to be proposed to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. WALSH. I rose to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Judiciary Committee has under consideration another bill, the purpose of which is to exclude from the mails matter that is regarded as not properly mailable, and that, in my judgment, the amendment would be more germane to that bill than to the bill now under consideration. Possibly the Senator being so advised, he might choose for the present to withhold the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Committee on the Judiciary is considering the subject, but I can see no objection to adding the amendment to this bill. This is simply exclusion by act of Congress, and does not leave the matter to the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggested yesterday that I should like to see the word "calculated," in line 24, page 2, stricken out, and the word "intended" or the word "designed" inserted in its place. I desire to ask the chairman——

Mr. HARDWICK. The word "intended" is better than "designed," for "designed" might mean "calculated."

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not agree to substitute the word "intended," because it is very hard to prove an intent. I think "designed" is a better word.

Mr. BORAH. I think the word "intended" there would be perfectly safe. A man is presumed to intend the natural consequence of his act, but I think as it now exists the intent would have to be proved, because the authorities——

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely suggested that I thought "designed" was the better word. I am not objecting to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Then, Mr. President, I move to strike out the word "calculated" and to insert the word "intended," in line 24——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not assume from the statement of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] accepting his amendment that it is an immaterial amendment, or that the entire committee is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President. The Senator from Washington misunderstood me. I only speak for myself always and from my own personal standpoint. I do not intend to bind the committee. I said I would not fight the amendment. That is all I said.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My opinion is that it is a very important amendment, and I wish the Senator from Idaho would reserve it for a while, in order that we may confer a little further about it.

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly willing to reserve the amendment for the present.

Now, Mr. President, I want to make some general remarks in regard to this bill before we proceed to its further consideration. The amendment which the Committee on the Judiciary have reported to the bill as it came from the other House begins upon page 2, line 18, and reads as follows:

> And whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States—

Leaving the remainder of the amendment out for the present, and discussing the portion which I have just read, the first provision provides for the protection of the form of government, the Constitution, the soldiers and sailors, and the uniform of the Army and the Navy. Any scurrilous, abusive, profane, or contemptuous language used against these several objects or subjects is made punishable under this proposed act. I take it that up to that point there would be very little difference of opinion; I rather suppose that no one would object to that portion of the amendment. I assume that in these times it will not be deemed improper to punish those who profane those things for which our people are making such great sacrifices and for which many of our countrymen are offering their lives.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Idaho will allow me to ask him a question in regard to the phrase "the form of government"; as it reads it is all right, but is that supposed to cover the persons engaged at the moment in the Senate or in the House of Representatives or elsewhere who are carrying on the Government?

Mr. BORAH. I do not so understand at all; in other words, I understand that a person would be perfectly free, under this bill should it become a law, to discuss, for instance, the incompetency of any officer, or the policy of any office or officer, or the policy of the administration, or the inefficiency of any department. That is my understanding of it; I believe that to be a fair interpretation of it. I do not believe the courts could place any other construction upon the language here used.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand that the words "form of government" as used there principally have reference to language that is used in the Constitution and in oaths administered to certain officials, to immigrants arriving in the United States, and not to laws already on the statute books—namely, a republican form of government.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the principal significance of that language, in my judgment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have just received a resolution as to which I should like to ask the Senator's judgment whether or not it would come within the prohibition of this proposed law? The resolution reads as follows:

> Whereas the courts of the United States are the most serious menace to the constitutional rights of the American people;
> Whereas the power now exercised by the courts to declare laws passed by a legislative body unconstitutional was expressly denied the judiciary by the convention that framed our Federal Constitution;
> Whereas the constitutional rights of the American people are not secure while an irresponsible oligarchy are permitted to exercise the powers above enumerated. Democracy does not and can not exist while such unlimited powers are wielded by judges responsible to nobody. The American people have permitted the judiciary to assume all of the governmental functions;
> Whereas there are problems in modern industrial life that must be solved by the ordinary machinery of popular government. If the courts continue to hamper the people in the exercise of that sovereign power, then the courts must be controlled by the people: Therefore be it
> Resolved by the Spokane Central Labor Council in regular meeting assembled, That we demand that Congress shall immediately prepare and submit to the American people, through the proper channels, an amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the election of all Federal judges, with short terms of office, and placing the power to recall Federal judges in the people, the only place that power should exist.

Mr. BORAH. From simply hearing the matter read I understand that it is the advocacy of an elective instead of an appointive judiciary. I do not believe that would come under this proposed law. I am sure it would not. Our Constitution itself provides for amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It struck me that it would; but I have not given the measure very much consideration. I merely wanted to get the Senator's judgment about it.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand that that resolution has any other import or purpose than that of asking for a change in the Constitution so as to provide for the election of judges instead of appointing them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It denounces the present form of government, as they construe it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I was wondering whether the Senator thinks that one who advocates by argument and by peaceful means State socialism or the substitution of social democracy for our present form of government would be liable to punishment under this act?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think so. This law punishes the denunciation of our Government through profane and scurrilous language.

Mr. GORE. I wanted to get the Senator's opinion in that regard, because it might be serviceable in the future.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will yield to me, I was wondering how he could have condemned Mr. George Creel's editorial if he thinks that the resolution just read does not come within the prohibition of this bill?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator seems to have confused the Senator from Idaho with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Senator said that Mr. Creel could, in his judgment, be indicted for the editorial in the Rocky Mountain News, which is about the same thing.

Mr. BORAH. I think that was an entirely different proposition. That, as I was impressed from hearing it read, was a denunciation of our entire scheme of government.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will examine he will find it is not any different, I think. I listened to it very carefully.

Mr. BORAH. Then I would change my view with reference to the editorial; but, as I remember the editorial, it was an attack in abusive language upon our entire system of government; that the writer was opposed to republican representative form of government.

Mr. HARDWICK. The editorial I had in mind—the Senator may not have based his opinion on that editorial—was almost entirely on this identical subject.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand, Mr. President, that this bill goes that far. If I thought the bill covered the right to present a demand to change our Constitution by amendment, or anything of that kind, I certainly would be opposed to it; but the resolution to which reference has been made does not propose to change the form of government, but simply amplifies some particular power covered by the fundamental law and already preserved by it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder if I am correct in drawing the conclusion from what the Senator has just stated, that he thinks anyone who favors a complete change of our form of government would come within the prohibition of the pending measure?

Mr. BORAH. I do, if the change is advocated by methods other than provided in the Constitution and by the use of profane and disloyal language.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, if that be true, the man who believes that a monarchical form of government, for instance, is the best—assume that he honestly believes it and is conscientious in his belief—would be liable to be sent to jail if he dared advocate it.

Mr. BORAH. Well, not if he simply dared to advocate it; but if he advocated it in disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive language I think he would. For instance, I received a paper from a Western State this morning that gave an account of an incident one day last week, when the German Army seemed to be winning its cause, where a number of persons congregated and made eulogistic speeches upon the German form of government, eulogized the Kaiser and the Hohenzollern dynasty, and said it was a much better and more efficient and more effective form of government than this Republic for which we are fighting now. I want to say that I am perfectly aware that it is very difficult to enact a law to cover that kind of a situation without seeming to cover cases which ought not, of course, to be covered by the law, and to cover acts which ought not to be punishable; but there was just one thing that saved those gentlemen from mob law, and that was the fact that there happened to be at hand just at that time sufficient authority to protect them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not want him to get the idea by any question I ask or by anything I may say that I am defending any conduct of that kind. Those men were disloyal, and I would be glad to see that kind of men sent to the penitentiary; but they were disloyal because they were opposed to our Government; they would have been opposed to it no matter what the form might have been; they were loyal to Germany rather than to the United States. I take it that in their disloyalty the probabilities were the form of government did not enter as a moving feature; but it seems to me it does not quite answer the question I put. I do not advocate it, and of course do not believe in it at all, but I can conceive of men—and I know there are a good many such men, loyal men; I have talked often with them—who think our form of government is not the best, who think that a monarchial form of government would be better. While I do not agree with them, I can see how that kind of a man might be just as loyal as though he believed our form of government was the best in the present emergency, for instance.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to say to the Senator that it is impossible for me to conceive of that man being as loyal as the man who thinks our form of government is the best.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that he might be just as loyal.

Mr. BORAH. He might; but I can not grasp it.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, if the Senator's statement is entirely correct, then the man who favored an amendment to the Constitution giving suffrage to women, for instance, would not be quite as loyal as the man who is absolutely satisfied with the Constitution as it now exists.

Mr. BORAH. No; the advocacy of suffrage does not change the form of government at all; it does not affect the form of government in any way, shape, or form; if anything it accentuates and strengthens the form of government from the standpoint of a wider basis for the electorate.

Mr. NORRIS. A more liberal basis?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, suppose we take the man who is opposed to the appointment, for instance, of members of the Supreme Court, or who adopts the idea Col. Roosevelt expressed before the Ohio convention and advocated publicly, and that a great many good men believe in, that there ought to be some sort of appeal from the decisions of the Supreme Court to the people. I know there are men who think that would be absolutely disastrous to our form of government, although it is supported by those who want to make the form of government more liberal than it is now. I should like to go just as far as I possibly can to punish any man who in any way is disloyal, but I would not want to punish a man because he advocated a different form of government if he honestly believed in it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator a practical question. Suppose that a person held the view that the Senator has just expressed with reference to the election of judges, instead of the appointment of judges, or with reference to the recall of judicial decisions instead of the present system, and suppose that some district attorney should bring that man into court and undertake to prosecute him for presenting such a proposition in a reasonable and in a proper way, how far does the Senator think they would get toward punishing that man under this bill?

Mr. NORRIS. If I were on the jury I am satisfied that I would not agree to a conviction, no matter what the bill might say. My own idea is that he could not be convicted. But even though that would be true in every case, that they could not be convicted, if there were prosecutions even that we knew would result in the release of the defendant, that is a very serious proposition.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so; but the Senator will understand that right now, if a district attorney is corrupt enough and crooked enough, he can bring into court any citizen of the country, however innocent he may be, and undertake to give him a trial, and put him through the form of a trial, regardless of whether he hopes to convict him or not.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is true; and we ought to be careful, in passing laws, that we do not encourage that kind of conduct.

Now, on the recall of decisions——

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator another question in that connection. I have asked the Senator one question, and now I ask him this question: How would the Senator deal, under any present law upon the statute books, with the case which I cited to his attention a few moments ago? What law is there on the statute books now to punish the man who simply eulogizes the advances of the German Army and the superior worth of the Hohenzollern dynasty? What law is there by which we can punish him?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that there is any; and I will go just as far as the Senator will in enacting a law that will inflict any kind of severe punishment on anybody that will do that.

Mr. BORAH. What law will suffice to meet that situation other than the measure which we now have before Congress?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I beg leave to interject, if the Senator will permit me, that if we had juries and judges that responded to the needs of the situation, so as to give a construction to the existing law in harmony with the purposes for which it was enacted—a law which provides a penalty for the man who does an act which obstructs the enforcement of the draft act or the sale of liberty bonds—they would find that such conduct as the Senator has described had that effect and was a violation of that law.

Mr. BORAH. It may be true that the law as at present upon the statute books would cover that situation if it were properly construed; but we do know that it has been so construed as to relieve that kind of conduct from punishment, and that is the very object of this bill, as I understand.

Mr. GORE and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota, and then I will yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the very language of the bill now. In order that the party may be amenable under the bill, the language must be disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator from Idaho think that a mere academic discussion of the forms of government, and an assertion by one that he believes a monarchial form of government superior to a republican form of government, would render a party liable under this law?

Mr. BORAH. No. I stated, as I thought, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, that if it was simply a presentation of a man's view in a proper way, as to his difference of opinion as to the worth of different forms of government, or as to a change in the Constitution, or something of that kind, it would not come within the purview of the law at all.

I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, if he desires to interrupt me.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I first want to suggest that there is another provision in the pending bill which would meet that exact situation. It is found in the provision contained in line 17, page 3:

Whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire.

But I wanted to ask the Senator this question: The Declaration of Independence, after reciting certain inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and averring that to secure these ends governments are instituted among men, adds that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, to organize its powers in such form, and so forth. Does the Senator think that that declared right would collide with the provision in the bill?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not.

Mr. GORE. Then, I will ask the Senator one other question. If anybody outside of Congress should insist that the Constitution of the United States is suspended or should be suspended pending war, and that we should substitute an autocracy during war, that a democracy is unfitted for war, would that subject him to prosecution under this bill?

Mr. BORAH. I do not so understand, if a man should make that kind of a statement; but if a man should speak of the Constitution and the Government of the United States in an abusive or profane way, I think he would come within the purview of the proposed law.

Mr. GORE. Then, Mr. President, there is a provision that anyone using any language calculated to subject the Constitution to contempt is liable to prosecution.

Mr. BORAH. We will come to that in a minute.

Mr. GORE. I am anxious, the Senator will see, to protect some of our associates and others. I want to know exactly the boundaries of this provision.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand that the Senator from Oklahoma is uneasy about himself.

Mr. GORE. No. I cherish some lingering respect for the charter of our liberties.

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. COLT addressed the Chair.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Washington; then I will yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to ask just a very brief question of the Senator from Oklahoma, in view of the question that he has just asked.

Of course, this legislation is a product of the times. Many of the things that are proposed to be punished by this bill might very well go unnoticed and be of trivial public importance in times of peace; but the bill ought to be judged by its application to the emergency that confronts the country. It is a great emergency. Everything that the country stands for is in the balance as the result of the efforts of our people, acting under our Government, under the laws as they exist to-day. Now, does the Senator think that it is consonant with good public policy in that situation to speak contemptuously of the Government or of the Constitution or of the Army and Navy of the United States?

Mr. GORE. Not at all; not at all. I think perhaps that has been done in some high places, and I wanted to know just the boundary of the rights and privileges the people would be permitted to enjoy hereafter and the words and acts that would be subjected to punishment.

I think that one of the chief objects of our free institutions—in fact, the object recited in the first amendment to the Constitution, and the assurance that that amendment would be adopted procured the ratification of the Constitution—was the guaranteed right of freedom of thought and freedom of speech. Now, if our institutions stand for anything at all, freedom of thought and freedom of speech are among the cardinal and inalienable rights of American citizens, and those rights are baptized with the blood of our ancestors. I think the Senator put his finger on the point when he said there were trivial things in times of peace, and I think there may be trivial things in times of war that ought not to be magnified into serious breaches of the law or the Constitution.

I think Lloyd-George was right when he said that the Government which could not hear the truth about itself, which was not virile enough to hear the truth about itself, had not reached the status of a first-class power. It is an ancient and it is a correct principle of law that the law takes no account of trifles. All I desire is to differentiate between trifles and matters of serious moment.

Of course, everything done and everything said, intended, and calculated to inspire sedition ought to be punished. This bill undertakes to penalize a man who merely favors certain things, unaccompanied by word or act. It undertakes to turn an X ray into hearts and minds of men. As I remember, Monus, one of the Greek gods, had a window in his breast, so that you could read his feelings and his thoughts. If we had any intellectual X ray of that sort, I should not hesitate to vote even for the word "favor"; but I know of no means of scrutinizing the inner thoughts of men as disembodied from word or deed. I think we ought to be careful not to go too far or too fast and not to become too intolerant. I am afraid that some acts of intolerance in this country have contributed more or less to the social dissolution prevailing in Russia.

The guaranties in favor of freedom of thought and freedom of speech are the fruits of immemorial centuries of experience. They were embodied in our Constitution because experience had demonstrated that freedom of thought and freedom of speech did not work as much mischief as the intolerance and the despotism which undertook to cut the tongues out of the throats of men who sought to give utterances to honest convictions.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that is very beautiful rhetoric that the Senator from Oklahoma has entertained the Senate with, but it is not very practical in the solution of the problems of this war.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a minute. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. GORE. It will not be necessary, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt long enough, to say that I will join the Senator in all practical and well-advised measures.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think it is necessary myself, but it is appropriate. The Senator says there is no way provided in this bill for determining whether or not a man favors the German cause. I assume from his argument that he thinks that a citizen of the United States should be allowed to favor the German cause.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not think so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then, if the Senator does not think so, he ought to vote for this bill.

Mr. GORE. The Senator misunderstands my criticism. I did not refer to the word "favor" where it appears in connection with the German Government. In that connection the bill expressly requires, as it should, that such fact shall be proved by words spoken or acts done. I approve of that. I referred to the word "favor," in line 15, where it is merely defined as a state of mind, unaccompanied by word or deed. I think that any American citizen who favors the German cause, if that fact can be proved by competent evidence, ought to be subjected to swift and merited punishment. He is entitled to no immunity in the courts of this country. He has no right to live in this country under our flag and enjoy its protection, and favor any other country or any other government which is at war with our own, if that fact can be established by competent evidence. We want no double allegiance, no divided loyalty in this country. In their nature these things are indivisible. They must be one or they must be none, if I may say so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, permit me to say that if that is the attitude of the Senator this bill is not strong enough. This bill does not go to any such length as that. This bill does give the man who favors the German Government the benefit of the institutions of America, its representative form of government, its courts, and its juries, to determine whether he is guilty or innocent.

Mr. GORE. That ought to be so. Perhaps I did not finish the statement. I intended to say that the fact that he favors the enemy ought to be proven in a court by admissible evidence, and by evidence that accords with the established principles of law and civilized jurisprudence. Now, I will point out to the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Washington the distinction which I make.

The word "favor," as it occurs in line 15, page 3, provides no rule of evidence and suggests no principle of law by which that fact shall be ascertained. In line 17, page 3, it provides that whoever shall by word or act favor the German cause shall be subject to punishment. Unquestionably such a person should be subject to punishment, but that prescribes a method of proof or a character of proof that is sanctioned by time and approved by experience. Men's motives and men's intentions can be ascertained only by acts done and by words spoken. That prescribes a method of proceeding which comports with the spirit of free institutions, but the word "favor" as used in the other sentence does not. That was the distinction which I had in mind.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this bill does not purport to deal at all with the question of rules of evidence. The same mode of procedure, the same rules of evidence, the same method of establishing a fact, the same presumption of innocence, would accompany a party through the trial from the beginning to the end under this law just as it would under any other statute of the United States.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in line 17 the bill provides for the punishment of any person who by word or act favors the German cause.

Mr. BORAH. Any person who supports or favors it.

Mr. GORE. Yes. In the other line it does not say "by word or act." A court would construe the omission of the phrase "by word or act" in the first instance as meaning that Congress had left out those words deliberately and by intention.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Which are the lines?

Mr. GORE. Line 15 in the first instance, line 17 in the second. The point I was making is that we ought to insert "by word or act" in line 15 as well as in line 17; and if that be done, certainly that objection is removed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think anyone could reasonably object to that suggestion. That is a very practical suggestion. There is no objection to that, I am sure, on the part of the chairman of the committee or anyone else.

Mr. GORE. That is the point which I had in my mind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to add just this word as to the criticism which the Senator has made that there is no rule of evidence provided. That being the case, the rule of evidence as it is now established in our courts remains. It is not changed in any way, as the Senator says.

Mr. GORE. Well, here was the point: Perhaps I did not make it plain. In one instance we use the expression, "Whoever shall, by word or act, favor." In the other instance we do not use the phrase, "By word or act," and yet we make the favoring of certain things a crime. Now, the omission of those words in the one instance would be construed by a court to be deliberate and intentional.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it would be interesting to know how you could possibly prove that a man favored a thing except by some word or act.

Mr. GORE. That is the point; and I thought the safeguards ought to be erected in both instances as they are in one. The committee thought it advisable, if not necessary, to state how you would prove it in line 17, "by word or act." They did not conceive it to be necessary or advisable to state the way in which it should be determined in the other instance. I do not know why the difference was made. I assumed that there was some reason for making it. If the clauses are exactly identical, notwithstanding the omission of those words, of course, that is satisfactory. I do not know how we can determine in advance that they are; and they might be differently construed.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. COLT addressed the Chair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that part of the section of the bill he has quoted is a copy of an act of the Legislature of Montana, and a part of it was framed here in the Committee on the Judiciary, without any reference to the act of Montana; and that accounts for the difference in the language.

I agree with the Senator from Idaho that, so far as the protection of the party accused is concerned, the insertion of the words "by word or act" adds nothing whatever, because it is obvious that you never could show a man's guilt except by some word or act. My impression is that the insertion of the words "by word or act" tends to strengthen the statute from the standpoint of the Government, because without the insertion of those words it might well be argued, and certainly would be argued if lawyers in the courts are as technical as lawyers are in the Senate in the debates on this bill in defining its terms, that a mere act could not be construed as favoring the cause of Germany. The reason why "by word or act" is inserted in the bill is in order to enable a court to punish a man for taking an attitude, even though it is shown only by his act and not by his word.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I think the controversy here arises over a misapprehension of the two paragraphs. They relate to different subjects. The part which the Senator from Oklahoma refers to in line 16 is as follows:

> Whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated.

That paragraph relates only to the acts enumerated in the law. Then the next paragraph is of general character and is more comprehensive. I will read it:

> And whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire—

And so forth.

One is of a general character and the other is confined to the matters referred to in the bill. We have those words of a general character.

If the Senator will allow me, some criticism of that paragraph was indulged in on yesterday. There are some offenses that are committed that we have to define by general terms. Take the crime of usury. Take the crime of fraud and deception. You never can get into any statute a specific definition as to what acts shall constitute usury or what acts shall constitute fraud or deceit. The courts are unwilling to lay down any definition in those cases.

So in this case it is impossible, any more than you can define in the case of fraud or usury or deceit, to define specifically what acts or what words will be in favor of the Germans and will be against our Government. You have got to lay down a general term; it is unavoidable; and it is for the court and jury to determine whether the act committed by the defendant is hostile to the United States and in favor of the German Government, just as it is for the jury and the court in a case of usury to determine whether the roundabout acts committed in a usurious case are acts that constitute usury, and just as in the case of fraud whether the acts resorted to taken collectively as a whole constitute an act of fraud.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with the construction of the Senator with reference to this general clause. Let me call attention, while it is upon my mind, to the fact that there has been upon the statute books of the United States for 40 years, at least, a general provision punishing those who conspire to injure the United States. There could scarcely be a broader definition of a crime than a conspiracy to injure the United States; but, as the Senator has just said, when the matter comes to be dealt with in the courts before a jury all the acts and deeds of the parties charged are taken into consideration, and the court and the jury come to the conclusion whether or not combined as a whole it constitutes an injury to the United States. You can not define every crime that you mean to punish by specific or limited terms or definitions so as to prevent the possibility of unwise construction.

Mr. HARDWICK and Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia first.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator, I understand, offers an amendment to strike out the word "calculated," in line 24, page 2, and substitute the word "intended."

Mr. BORAH. I suggested that amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator also intend to suggest an amendment to strike out the word "calculated," in line 5, page 3, and substitute the word "intended"?

Mr. BORAH. If I should succeed in inserting the word "intended" for "calculated" in the first instance, I think the second would follow.

Mr. HARDWICK. That would make the intent apply to every one of these sentences?

Mr. BORAH. I think so, but I desire to say that I am not at all sure that that is necessary, because, with the single exception of one decision, I have found no authority that holds that the word "calculated" involves the intent of the party, and, with the single exception of a Federal case, that has been the definition which has been given. The purpose of the party, the intent of the party, the design of the party, is synonymous with "calculated," and it was only for clarity that I suggested it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Are there not two decisions exactly the reverse of that?

Mr. BORAH. I would be glad to see them. I have found that one.

Mr. HARDWICK. A decision of the United States Supreme Court?

Mr. BORAH. No; a decision of a lower court.

Mr. COLT. If the Senator from Idaho will allow me a question, I would like to ask him if he does not think the word "disloyal," which precedes the word "profane," is the most significant word in that paragraph?

Mr. BORAH. I think it characterizes the whole statute.

Mr. COLT. It characterizes the whole statute. I think in the construction of a statute we should always fall back upon the great principle of reasonableness, or what is a reasonable and fair construction under all the circumstances. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not construe the word "disloyal" to mean that the utterance, or writing, looking at all the circumstances, must be, by reason of its very nature, disloyal; and, further, that no academic discussion of the question of the form of government was intended to come within the statute.

I do not think this act was intended to include the discussion of the question whether under the Constitution the court has the power to declare a law unconstitutional, or the discussion of true democracy as distinguished from a republican form of government, or the discussion of a constitutional monarchy as distinguished from a republican form of government—all those questions when discussed in an abstract way, I think the Senator will admit, do not come within this act.

The question, then, is not whether a man may express his belief in one form of government rather than another, but whether he expresses his belief in such a way and under such circumstances as to show a disloyal intent.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for his suggestion.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I presume I did not quite make my point clear. To advocate or defend or conspire are, of course, affirmative acts. In the nature of things they involve either the utterance of words or the performance of deeds. Favor may be a mere state of mind, never taking form either in act or word.

Mr. BORAH. You can not prove favor except by some fact, however.

Mr. GORE. That is true. It seemed to me that the phrase "by word or act" ought to be inserted in both instances or ought to be omitted in both instances. I did not know the history of this bill, but I am familiar with the high abilities of the Judiciary Committee, and when they inserted the phrase "by word or act" in one instance preceding the word "favor" and omitted it in another sentence containing the word "favor," of course I was compelled to presume that they had done so for some reason, and that the use of different language was to impart a different sense and significance. It was to call attention to that disparity that I injected myself into this debate.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Rhode Island refers to the word "disloyal" as characterizing this section, and I think it does; but all the adjectives used—disloyal, profane, contemptuous or abusive language, in speaking of the Government and the Constitution—imply a willful, a criminal, or a disloyal mind or spirit on the part of the party who is using the language. Of course, there would have to be, in my judgment, a clear proof of that state of mind or that condition of mind in order to satisfy any court or jury that the party was guilty under the law.

Now, Mr. President, may I say in reference to some remarks made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and others since I have risen that if our soldiers are not in France for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against assault our form of government, our Constitution, and our flag, the things which are here protected, I should be glad to know why they are there at all. If they are there for that purpose, I ask in all sincerity is it too much to ask complete devotion upon the part of those who remain at home to the things for which our boys are fighting and dying upon the western front?

It may be that this will interfere to some extent with the mental processes of some of those who remain behind and are out of sympathy with the purpose for which those boys have been called into foreign lands; but I submit when you consider the ten thousand ways in which a disloyal man may pour his subtle poison into a community to embarrass the cause in which those boys are engaged, it is not too much to place upon the statute books that which will turn upon him the calcium light of investigation by a court and by a jury. I know this is a drastic law, and I would not support it except in times like these and unless I believed it necessary to prevent things far worse.

I am just as well satisfied as that I stand here that unless the Senate of the United States provides an orderly method by which to deal with this class of cases, unless it provides a means by which it can be taken into court and determined by the court and by the jury, just so surely as matters proceed as they are we will either come to military trial or to mob rule or vigilance committees.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator let me introduce a telegram just received?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send to the desk a memorandum, including a telegram handed me by a distinguished Senator from the West along this same line. I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senator CURTIS received the following telegram recently from an assistant attorney general of the State of Kansas:

"Good men from central Kansas complain that American citizens of German birth frequently and publicly express desire for German success in the war and their own wish to help Kaiser; also complain that Department of Justice declares it has no power to act. They fear serious trouble. Can you advise me definitely as to power of Federal authorities under present law; and if new legislation is needed, can you secure such legislation soon?

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that we have no law at all to cover it.

Mr. BORAH. Now, we come to the second clause, to which most objection has been made:

Or any language calculated—

Or, I will say, "intended"— to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

Mr. President, is it too much to ask that those who are not making the supreme sacrifice, but are here enjoying the protection of our form of government and the protection of our Constitution and the protection of the flag, to refrain from the use of such language as is profane or abusive or calculated to bring these different objects into contempt? Is it too much to ask that they conform their words, their language, and their conduct so as to harmonize with the feelings and sentiments of those who have sent their boys to the front?

I might myself individually be willing, treating him with the contempt which I should feel for him, to listen to one who would advocate the success of the German cause, or I might be willing to content myself while some would express doubt as to our form of government and as to whether it were better for the human race that it should survive or not, but I venture to say, Mr. President, that the countless hundreds of thousands of homes in this country whose own kith and kin and blood are in Europe fighting for the preservation of these things will not be tolerant about it. The true friend of representative government and of order and of law is the man who undertakes to deal with these classes in the courts and in a method established from time immemorial by Anglo-Saxon procedure rather than to leave it to the movement of those whose passions are aroused by this constant carrying on in their community. It is too much to ask, too much to expect of human nature that those who are giving up those who are near and dear to them, who are making the supreme sacrifice to preserve our Government and maintain our flag to stand unmoved while disloyal individual denounces and profanes the one and insults the other. If we do not do our duty here, the impulses of loyal men and women will seek justice in rougher ways. Senators may hesitate and draw back, but already the news comes over the wire that patriotic citizens are taking the law in their own hands. I abhor military trials. I shudder at the thought that this proud Republic is about to resort to the law of riot and disorder. I would rather trust the courts and the jury with a drastic law, believing that in that way we can still protect the innocent and punish the guilty. We live in days of sad hearts and agonizing minds, and such days involve hazard and some new experiments. We would not pass this law in peace, but I believe it is demanded now.

I know, Mr. President, that there have been letters pouring into my office, as I have no doubt there have been in other offices in this city, for the last six months calling attention to just this situation, and already movements have been started locally to deal with the matter. I heard a very able Senator say upon the floor a few days ago that his people dealt with such a situation with the shotgun. I do not believe that it is necessary for us to resort to mob law or to the vigilance committee or to the shotgun, used indiscriminately by those whose passions have been aroused, if we will properly appeal to our courts and our juries to enforce a drastic law in the ordinary method. It is for this reason that we are driven to the adoption of such a law. It is for this reason that we must appeal to it in time of war, whereas, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] said, that might not be thought of at all in time of peace. Indeed this law itself expires when peace comes.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. I am very sorry to say that I do not agree with all the Senator is saying.

Mr. BORAH. That is discouraging to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. FRANCE. Personally I believe that this country is essentially sound. I believe we have here a country of patriots devoted to our cause. I refuse absolutely to believe that we have in this great Republic any substantial number of people who under these circumstances favor the cause of the German Empire.

I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. Before the Senator proceeds further I will pay the Senator the courtesy to say I agree with the Senator entirely. I approve all that the Senator says, that this country as a whole is essentially sound. I further say that the great mass of the German citizens are patriotic. But the Senator will not contend that there are not in this country those who are conspiring to embarrass the Government in the prosecution of the war. Fortunately the percentage is very small.

Mr. FRANCE. I entertain the highest regard for the Senator from Idaho. I believe that he is a statesman whose reputation is fully established, and I like to follow him when I can. I rose to ask the Senator a question, and that question is this: Upon what theory can he explain the alleged fact that there is in this country a large body of American citizens who favor the cause of the enemy? I can myself find no ground for such an allegation. I am very happy to say that, so far as Maryland is concerned, there is no evidence which compels me to adopt any such theory, because we have a loyal people. I do not know of a single man in Maryland who favors the cause of the enemy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am very frank to say that I have no theory upon which I can explain it at all. I am simply dealing with concrete facts.

Mr. FRANCE. I can not understand how such a condition could possibly arise, and I do not believe that it exists. So far as I am concerned, I voted against the espionage bill, and I shall vote against this measure, because I believe in the soundness of the American people, and I believe that when a man complains he is complaining against conditions which need correction, and there are conditions which need correction, and I believe that we should correct them. I believe that we have a patriotic country, and that these men who are, perhaps in a tone of petulance or irritation, uttering sentiments which might seem to be disloyal are not in heart disloyal. I believe our country is sound, and I do not believe that such legislation as this is necessary.

Mr. BORAH. I am very frank to say that I have no theory upon which I can explain the disloyalty of a man to this Government. I can not conceive, and I have never been able to conceive, how a man could flee from the environments of the Old World, to get away from conditions which he there believed to be unfriendly to his interests, and come to this country and enjoy the freedom of this Republic, avail himself of the western opportunities, and then turn, whenever the crisis arises, to aid the power from which he had fled.

I have no theory, Mr. President, whatever by which I can explain why it is that a few days ago when the Germans seemed to be conquering there were bodies of men congregated in different parts of this country who shouted for the success of the German cause. I have no theory by which I can explain it. I simply state that it is a fact; that is all I know; and with the fact I deal.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that a man was a candidate for the Senate in one of the great States of this Union a few days ago who advocated the withdrawing of our soldiers from Europe, who advocated, according to the papers, the abandoning of the cause of America in this fight, and who got a hundred thousand votes. I deal with facts and not with theories.

Mr. FRANCE. I am glad he ran——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. I wish to say with reference to the candidate that some people would have withdrawn him from the field from fear that he might be elected; but I am glad that he ran, and I rejoice that he was defeated in a fair and square election. I know that many thousands of the men who voted for him were not disloyal citizens, but they voted for him because they hold a theory of government which they think, if adopted, would mitigate some of the unnecessary evils which we have allowed to exist in this Government. Many of the men who voted for him I believe were not disloyal.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not want to discuss that question with the Senator from Maryland; and I trust, when the Senator from Maryland comes to reflect upon his language that, out of respect to the Senate of the United States, he will strike that part of it out.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I will appreciate it if the Senator from Idaho will tell me what portion of my remarks he would like to have stricken out as indicating a lack of respect for the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator says that he is glad a man who ran for the Senate on the platform upon which Mr. Berger ran, a platform, if correctly reported, of disloyalty in every sense of the word and received 100,000 votes, he is uttering sentiments not creditable to this body.

Mr. FRANCE. I did not say that. I said I was glad that he was defeated, instead of being withdrawn, because that is the proper method of dealing with such a man under our system.

Mr. BORAH. I leave the Senator to review his language when he comes to read it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thoroughly disagree with all I have read which was published about Mr. Berger's platform, but I rise to ask, Does the Senator from Idaho contend that a man is disloyal to this Government if he advocates the conclusion of peace with Germany now or later?

Mr. BORAH. That would depend upon the terms on which he advocates it. If he advocates it upon the terms that Mr. Berger does, I contend that he is disloyal.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know what those terms are.

Mr. BORAH. They mean the triumph of the Hohenzollern dynasty and the domination of that Empire over this Republic. They mean the ruin of all which we as Americans hold dear and all for which our fathers and our forebears fought.

Mr. HARDWICK. What I want to ask the Senator is, Can it be true in a free country that it is perfectly loyal to advocate one policy and absolutely disloyal, no matter what the circumstances are, to advocate another?

Mr. BORAH. No; that is not the proposition.

Mr. HARDWICK. Who is to judge of the circumstances?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Georgia did not understand me to state any such proposition.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is exactly the proposition. This man, you say, advocated the conclusion of peace, and you say that, in your judgment, he favors a peace now which would mean the triumph of the Hohenzollern dynasty. Probably Mr. Berger does not agree to that; but can it be contended under this proposed law that any man who either now or later advocates a conclusion of peace by this country, either on the terms suggested by Mr. Berger or on other terms, or any man who contends that the time has come to begin peace negotiations, is disloyal to his country, and is subject to indictment under this bill, should it become a law?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I repeat that it depends upon the conditions of peace which such a man advocates. If the conditions are such as to involve the ruin of my country, he is a traitor.

Mr. HARDWICK. But who is to be the judge of that?

Mr. BORAH. He is to be judged in that matter by the institution set up in this country to pass judgment. It is perfectly easy to determine whether a proposition for peace is in conformity with loyalty to this Government; there would be no difficulty about that at all. We had that same situation to deal with from 1861 to 1865. The copperheads of the North advocated peace from the first hour of the fight, and they advocated it upon the proposition of permitting the South to go out from the Union and to destroy the Republic. It was disloyalty; and Mr. Berger's scheme is just as disloyal. Both mean ruin—absolute ruin—to the Republic.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know anything about Mr. Berger's scheme; but the Senator from Idaho can not maintain here, or in any other forum of reason, at least—and I do not think the Senator from Idaho would undertake to do it—that loyalty to this country necessarily always means that this country shall continue at war. Otherwise how would we ever end the war?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho has not advanced any such doctrine at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was wondering if the Senator's argument did not lead to that.

Mr. BORAH. I have said that whether advocacy of peace is loyal or disloyal depends upon the conditions upon which the peace is advocated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that Mr. Berger favored withdrawing our troops?

Mr. BORAH. I so stated.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I understood; and I think in the present situation that is an absolutely disloyal proposition.

Mr. BORAH. It is not only disloyal, but, in my judgment, if it is not, it ought to be brought within the purview of the criminal law. The advocates of peace of this kind encourage the enemy and nerve them on to kill a few more American boys. They are just as truly the aids and friends of that blood-soaked dynasty as if they stood on the other side of that fearful battle line and hurled their poisonous gas at our soldiers.

Mr. LODGE. One other thing. Is it not true that Mr. Berger is now under indictment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HARDWICK. What I wanted to ask the Senator was this: Of course, I do not know anything about what Mr. Berger contended in Wisconsin——

Mr. BORAH. That is all we are discussing.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know, but I am merely discussing the general proposition of how in the world a nation would ever arrive at peace.

Mr. BORAH. That proposition has not been adverted to by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HARDWICK. But you have referred to one man who, you say, is guilty of treason because he did want to conclude peace.

Mr. BORAH. I referred to that man because he was the party under discussion and stood on a disloyal platform.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know that.

Mr. BORAH. I say, now, generally, that a man may advocate peace, even with the Germans, under conditions which are in conformity with the preservation of free institutions and the honor of the American Government and the future safety of the American people and be perfectly loyal.

Mr. HARDWICK. Who is to be the judge—each man for himself?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. FALL. I merely want to suggest that if this bill becomes a law the courts and the juries will be the judges, and that is exactly what those of us who are advocating this bill want to bring about.

Mr. HARDWICK. In other words, you want to have it—and if this bill becomes a law you will have it—so that if the time has come when what a man regards as perfectly honorable terms of peace could be concluded he could not advocate it without being guilty of treason.

Mr. BORAH. Neither the Senator from Idaho nor the Senator from New Mexico has made any such suggestion.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely wanted to see how far it is going.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me just a word, I would suggest that Mr. Berger did not propose honorable terms, or what he regarded as honorable terms of peace; he did not propose any terms at all, but he proposed an unconditional surrender.

Mr. BORAH. He proposed precisely what Trotsky and Lenine gave Russia—a surrender to the German Government. That is disloyalty; it is treason in every conceivable sense of the word.

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Idaho will not, of course, understand that I favor any such policy as that.

Mr. BORAH. No; I did not so understand.

Mr. HARDWICK. The very reverse is true about that; but I want to get this plainly before the Senate. The time may come when we may be able to conclude peace, and will be able to conclude peace, I hope, on terms that are perfectly honorable to this country.

Mr. BORAH. Then all of us will be for it.

Mr. HARDWICK. When that time does come, is not the humblest citizen in this land to have just as much right to advocate it as the President of the United States or anybody else in authority, without being guilty of violating the criminal laws of this country?

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly satisfied with the Senator's proposition now. Nothing in this proposed law would interfere with the humblest citizen advocating peace upon that kind of a basis; and there will never be any law passed by the Congress of the United States which will do so, in my judgment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was just wondering whether it would or not.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. The Senator from Idaho has apparently misunderstood me, and evidently I did not make myself clear. I desire to say that the Socialist candidate in Wisconsin in no way represents my views; in fact, all of his views, all of his theories of government, and all of his doctrines concerning this war are utterly repugnant to me; but believing, as I do, in the essential soundness of our people, and believing, as I do, in the reliability of the judgment of our citizens, inasmuch as Mr. Berger had declared himself as a candidate, I much preferred to have him defeated fairly at the polls to having him withdrawn as a result of threats or violence against him. I think that the results of the election in Wisconsin have proved conclusively the soundness of the American people and the soundness of the judgment of the people of Wisconsin.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; Mr. President, Mr. Berger enjoyed all the privileges and blessings of a representative Republic; he was permitted to run for office without hindrance and without disturbance; he was given all the rights of a free citizen to acquire position and place in a Government which he stood ready to surrender to the domination of the Hohenzollern dynasty, and I can not conceive of a more despicable and contemptible creature under the protection of the American flag than the man who would seek to avail himself of the privileges and the honors of this Republic at a time when he stands ready to surrender it to a foreign power. His plan to withdraw our Army and our support would place bleeding and heroic France where torn and dismembered Russia is to-night. It would probably bring ruin to England, whose soldiers are fighting our cause in this very hour; and it would ultimately bring additional misery and suffering to our own land, if not complete ruin to our whole form of government, and annihilation to our entire conception of civilization. I do not know Mr. Berger, but his platform, if properly reported, was moral if not technical treason.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho, in order that my record may be perfectly clear, allow me to indorse all that he has said in that very eloquent paragraph? He has expressed himself far more eloquently and forcefully than I could have done.

Mr. BORAH. I am glad to have the Senator's conversion.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say, in order to correct the Senator again, that there has been no conversion.

Mr. BORAH. Then I express my keen regret.

Mr. FRANCE. My attitude toward this war has never changed since last April. My policies have not changed. I would unite this whole country to a man and organize it for the prosecution of the war, and I believe that the country would respond.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator ever assumes that task, I assign to him first the duty of converting Mr. Berger himself and bringing him into the cause. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Idaho proceeds, the Chair will say to the occupants of the galleries that, under the rules applying in this body, no evidence of approval or disapproval is permitted. The statement is made merely for the sake of order and that the debaters may not be disturbed. The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. BORAH. Now, Mr. President, I go to the other clause, which reads:

> Or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator proceeds to a discussion of that clause——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I venture to inquire of the Senator whether it would weaken the general purpose, indeed the specific purpose, of the measure if the words last discussed by the Senator were eliminated, the words being—

> Or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

Do not the preceding words in the section characterize the things that are offending, the acts and words which are criminal, so that the words which I have just read really are meaningless, and will lead to controversy, misunderstanding, and honest, legitimate criticism? If the Senator will further pardon me, if we say:

> And whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States.

Does not the very fact of saying or writing or publishing these things tend, directly or indirectly, to bring into contempt the Government of the United States, the Constitution, the flag, and the uniform; so that we might, without weakening the purposes of this measure, eliminate from it the words to which I have alluded?

Mr. BORAH. I am rather inclined to think that would be a better expression.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the clause following that to which he alluded. It constitutes an entirely different offense from that provided in the preceding clause. It reads:

> Or shall utter, print, write, or publish anything calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I did not allude to those words. I would leave those words in.

Mr. NELSON. I thought the Senator referred to that language.

Mr. KING. No; I was not asking for the excision of those words from the measure. While fully concurring in all that the able Senator from Idaho has said and indorsing every word he has uttered, my judgment is that the elimination of the words to which I have referred would perhaps relieve this bill of some objections and criticism, relieve it from the criticism which has been urged that some persons, not using wisdom or discretion, might employ the act oppressively, and thus insure a more hearty response upon the part of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I did not quite understand what language the Senator from Utah would eliminate.

Mr. KING. I was merely suggesting it; I am not quite clear in my own mind, but it occurred to me, in listening to the discussion and in reading the bill, that the words I alluded to were not necessary and did not add to the strength of the section itself.

Mr. OVERMAN. What are the words?

Mr. KING. The words are found in lines 24 and 25, on page 2, and lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 3, and a part of line 4, as follows:

> Or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

The very acts charged in the preceding language of the bill necessarily would bring or have for their object bringing into scorn, contempt, and contumely the Constitution, Government, and the uniform of the sailors and soldiers; and if we state that the uttering of certain words shall constitute a crime, why go on and attempt to define what the effect would be? Necessarily the effect of language of the character referred to would be calculated to bring the Government into disrepute.

I am not moving that as an amendment, because the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who more than anybody else is responsible for this provision, is not here, and I would not offer the amendment in his absence, but I suggest it to the able Senator from Idaho, because he has been discussing so ably the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the concluding section of this bill, which contains seven substantive proposals, if he will allow me to do so—and I dislike to trespass so much on the time of the Senator——

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Georgia knows that the Senator from Idaho is always glad to have his suggestions.

Mr. HARDWICK. I read the following from the last paragraph of the bill:

> And whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein—

The Senator from Idaho will recall that some time ago, when the President of the United States presented to both Houses of Congress what he termed the war aims of this country and made what might have been regarded, and was regarded, throughout the world as a proposal which presented a substantive basis upon which peace could be concluded, in his judgment, even then so high an official as the President of the United States did not escape criticism, and severe criticism, from some people in this country on the ground that he was injuring the cause in this country in the war and was really aiding the German cause by doing that.

Now, having laid that much premise for the question I am about to ask, let me say that I did not intend—as, of course, the Senator from Idaho and, I take it, every Senator understands—to convey the impression by the question I asked just now that I approved in any way, shape, form, or fashion of Mr. Berger or his campaign for the Senate or his platform. As a matter of fact, the very reverse of each one of those propositions is true. But it was stated baldly here on the floor of the Senate that this man was disloyal to the country because—as I understood it, at least, it was stated in that way—he had proposed peace with Germany.

I believe it is fundamental, if this is to remain a free country, and even the remnants of free speech are to be left to its people, that people should have just as much right to advocate peace as to advocate war. The advocacy of peace, on conditions that are honorable to this country and on terms that are fair to its opponents, at some proper time must come.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. Just a moment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I was going to say that I should be glad to yield the floor, and then the Senator can go ahead with his statement. I dislike to hold the floor quite so long, and I am really through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right. Then I will yield to the Senator from Washington in just a moment.

Mr. President, what I had in mind was not to have anything enacted into law, based on which the contention could be made in any moment of hysteria, from which any possible construction could come from any court, that the humblest citizen of this land, in private station though he be, should not have just as much right to advocate a peace as the mightiest official in all the Republic should have a right to advocate a continuance of war; and I am afraid that some of the language in this bill is capable of a construction that makes it doubtful whether that right—one of the inherent and fundamental rights of freemen in a free land through all time—will remain unimpaired if this bill is enacted.

At a later period during this discussion I propose to address the Senate at length on this question, and I propose to show how certain provisions in this law may quite probably be construed to deny a great many of the fundamental rights of free speech to people who are in no sense disloyal, who have a right to differ with anybody on earth they please about what policy this Government shall adopt, or what plan it shall pursue, or what methods it may take, either in the prosecution of this war or in the conclusion of a peace.

Now, I yield to my friend, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I was just going to inquire of the Senator if he thought that Mr. Berger's program, or the program of the people advocating peace whose rights he is defending, tends toward the maintenance of liberty of speech and free government?

Mr. HARDWICK. I must confess that while I believe myself that this is no time to talk peace—we have not done enough in the war yet to give us the right to force a peace, and while I would be anxious to see one concluded if it could be done with honor to this country, I do not think that time has yet come—but I hope, in the providence of an Almighty and Merciful God, it may come to this country before too much blood is shed and before too much misery is undergone; and when the time does arrive when we can in honor compose our quarrels with our foe, I do not want to see any statute on the law books of this country that will make it possible for men who venture to assert their belief that the time has arrived to be treated as criminals.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The great mistake which I think is made by men who are so jealous of the liberty of speech being preserved, regardless of its effect upon the conduct of the war, is the assumption that under German rule we would have all sorts of these beautiful privileges. Another thing that seems strange—and I am not applying this to the Senator from Georgia but to the general class of people who do contend that none of their privileges must be interfered with—is why they attach so much more importance to and value so much more preciously the right to talk as they choose and express all sorts of opinions than they do the right of life and the right of property and the right of trade, all of which were involved in our cause against Germany when they opposed any action on the part of the United States to protect those rights. Ships were being sunk with American citizens, who, under every guaranty of government and of law that the human race knew anything about up to that time, were within their rights. They were engaged on business as important to them as business can be to anybody. Their property was just as essential to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as the Senator's property is or his business or anybody else's. We went to war, among other things, for the purpose of giving to those people, in the enjoyment of those privileges, the protection of the Government of which they formed a part. That was opposed by a great many people who did not think that those rights and privileges were important or precious enough to involve the United States in a war. Why is it that, regardless of its effect upon the war, they attach so much more importance to the right of free speech, while at the same time we take men's bodies, conscript them into the Army, and subject them to the dangers of the firing line? We pass laws here without very much objection as war measures, to commandeer manufacturing plants, to take the property of the citizens of the country and subject it to the purposes of the war. Now, I should like to know what distinction there is, if in the judgment of men it is necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, while we are taking their bodies and their property if we also take away from them somewhat of this license of speech which is so much defended.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator has finished his interruption, which I welcome, my reply to him, of course, is that I fully agree with him in his last statement. Liberty of speech, freedom of speech, does not mean license. No man ever did have in this country, in time of war or in time of peace, the right to speak freely his own opinion except subject to the laws of the land; and if he spoke falsely or injured or maligned or abused or slandered his neighbor, he must answer to the law. Liberty of speech in a free land has never meant license of speech. People who are guilty of licenses of the kind and character to which the Senator refers are now, and have always been, amenable to law.

I fully agree also with the statement of the Senator that we went to war with Germany because Germany fired upon our flag and sank peaceful and innocent American citizens on the high seas, and I believe that we went to war with Germany for that reason alone. If Germany had not sunk our ships and murdered our citizens and fired on our flag, I do not believe either House of Congress would have voted a declaration of war with Germany.

What boots it, however, to discuss those matters? The water that is past turns no wheel. We are in this war with Germany. I voted for it for the reason, and the sole reason, stated by the Senator from Washington, but that reason was all-sufficient with me and for me. When a Government which professed to be at peace with us deliberately ordered its navy to fire on our flag and kill our people I wanted no further or other reason than that to embark upon a war with that Government.

We are in this war. We ought to prosecute it vigorously, effectively, with every power of mind and body and heart and soul. I agree to that. But it is by no means necessary, I say to the Senator from Washington and to this body, in the proper prosecution of that war to either sacrifice or abridge American rights or American liberties. On the contrary, the very reverse of that proposition is true.

If we are fighting freedom's battles, let us fight in a cause worthy of freemen. Let us preserve the ancient and immemorial rights of freemen as they come down to us not only from the Constitution which this bill protects—and that part of it I agree with heartily—but from Magna Charta and from days that were before Magna Charta, from our Anglo-Saxon ancestry for generations back unnumbered. Let us preserve those rights in their entirety and integrity and we will do better for this country, we will make more for the efficient prosecution of this war, we will serve this country and its cause more loyally and more patriotically than if we continue to surrender those rights on every occasion, if we continue to hedge about those rights on every occasion, if we continue to deal with the American people as if they were a race of disloyal people who are plotting against this Government and disloyal to its cause simply because some of them do not approve every plan that may be suggested or every method that may be devised.

Senators, in times of war people grow hysterical, and when people grow hysterical even executives, even legislative bodies, are not exempt from the contagion of hysteria. It is better to move along slowly; it is better to be deliberate about these things; it is better not to confer powers that are so broad that they are not only capable of abuse but liable to abuse; that are so broad that not only the miserable German that you are striking at may be reached, but honest, loyal American citizens may be persecuted.

That is what happened once before. It is not a new proposition in the history of this country for a bill of this kind and character to be suggested to an American Congress. One came to this body—yea, originated in this body—120 years ago, when the alien act and a sedition act, one approved June 24, 1798, and the other July 14, 1798, were passed by these two Houses of Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that was not during war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, Mr. President, we were in the situation then which led up to the War of 1812. We were then fighting a war that never was officially declared with the French Government, during which we had, if my recollection is not inaccurate, five naval engagements with the navy of France, fights between battleships flying the flag of the Union and the flag of the French Republic. It is the one unofficial and undeclared war of our history; and one of the very sections of those two bills, although it was stricken out, proposed to declare every citizen of France, every alien who came from France, a public enemy of this country; so that we faced then practically the situation that we face now. We were in an actual state of war with France. We were in complications growing out of our right to the freedom of the seas to our commerce, both with France and with England, that finally resulted in the War of 1812.

What happened? We passed that bill. Before this debate is concluded, I expect to lay its terms before the Senate. I expect to submit it, word for word and paragraph for paragraph, to this great body; and I tell you now that this act is twice as drastic as the sedition act of 1798.

Mr. President, that act changed the course of American history. It murdered a great and powerful party. It sent to its political doom and to its early and unwept grave a party that at that period of our political history was puissant in American councils. Take care that we repeat not the performance now. Too much unnecessary and unjustified and unjustifiable meddling with fundamental rights and the fundamental liberties of freedom will not help win this war, and there will be a heavy reckoning to pay some time on this earth when accounts are settled about it all.

What is the necessity for this legislation? The department is urging it. The Senator from North Carolina says he must press it because the department wants it pressed, and of course he concurs in the idea that it is necessary to have some such legislation as this. But as this legislation passed the House it did not contain anything that was seriously offensive or that could be used to either mistreat or abuse some of our people if they happened to have honest differences of opinion with people who are no more loyal than themselves, but who happen to hold public office at the moment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. KING. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, who has this bill in charge.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know that I ought to have referred to it. He told me that——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will state to the Senate what I said privately to the Senator from Georgia—that I have just had a special message from the Department of Justice begging that I proceed with this bill to its conclusion, calling my attention to the forthcoming sale of bonds, etc., and I will say to the Senator from Georgia, to do the Attorney General justice, that the Attorney General did not suggest these amendments.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad he did not, and I hope the Senate will strike them out. I am glad to hear the Senator make that statement.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will do him the justice to say—and I am saying this now to do the Attorney General justice—that the amendments he suggested to the committee are not contained in the language we are discussing, but those amendments were made by the committee. I say that because I think I ought to do it for the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice is anxious to get this bill through, and sent me a special message on the subject; and I expect—with the consent of the Senate, of course—to ask the Senate to lay aside temporarily what is known as the Overman bill and continue the consideration of this bill, realizing myself the importance of it. If the Senate wishes to amend it, all right; but the bill ought to pass, and it ought to pass to-day. It ought to be the law next Monday.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I merely rose for the purpose of making the observation the Senator from North Carolina has just made, namely, that the Attorney General was not responsible for the latter part of this bill and did not urge it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am very glad indeed to hear both Senators avow that.

Mr. KING. But, if the Senator will pardon me, the members of the Judiciary Committee——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will Senators pardon the Chair? Under the rule the Chair must remind Senators that the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the regular order of business proceeds, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is recognized. The unfinished business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. In doing so I give notice that I am going to ask the Senate to remain in session until the bill which has been before the Senate is disposed of.

Mr. HARDWICK. I object to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Senator can not move it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can resist an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. It is in order for the Senator from North Carolina to move to proceed to the consideration of House bill 8753, which is the bill the Senate has just been discussing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; having laid aside the unfinished business temporarily, my purpose is to proceed with the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request made by the Senator from North Carolina will require unanimous consent, and that seems to have been objected to.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I did not object to that, but the Senator from North Carolina wants us to consent to stay in session until we pass this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That will come up afterwards. I merely gave notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair misapprehended the objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. The request of the Senator from North Carolina was to lay aside the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina to make his motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8753.

Mr. LODGE. That motion, of course, displaces the other bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not want to displace that bill. I ask that by unanimous consent the Senate proceed with the bill that was pending when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not need any motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent. That is included in the request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senate resumes the consideration of House bill 8753. The Senator from Georgia having the floor upon the interrogation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Utah is recognized with the permission of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KING. I just want to complete the sentence which was suspended by the announcement of the unfinished business, and the part of the sentence I wanted to complete was that at least some members of the committee had numerous requests from their constituents and others for legislation to deal with the subject embraced in this bill, and in their judgment—certainly, in mine—some legislation was deemed necessary.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the Senator's view as to trouble along that line; but, to continue for just a moment, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] suggested that there would be ample safeguards for the rights and liberties of the American people because trial by jury was provided. So it is; and yet I invite the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that when the alien and sedition laws of 1798 were passed trial by jury was provided in those statutes; and, more than that, because it was in derogation of the common law to so provide—it was thought it would take a special statutory provision to change the law—it was expressly provided in the sedition act that the truth could be given in evidence in answer to the charge laid in the indictment. So I say the experience of this country in its very infancy with an alien act and with a sedition act is not such as to encourage us to repeat it now.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will in just a minute. Not only that, but the Senator from Idaho said that there was little danger of unjust conviction. Again I refer him to history and again I rely on history rather than prophecy. What was the situation then when the excitement was far less intense than it is now? How was it in the Lyon case, where a jury had convicted and both Houses of Congress, by practically a unanimous vote, voted to refund the fine out of the Public Treasury?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield, of course.

Mr. BORAH. May I be permitted to say that there has always been a very grave doubt by historians but what the jury was right and Congress was wrong?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator entertains that view?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I entertain a doubt, and I think I can submit some facts if the debate continues which will convince the Senator that in all probability that resolution was put through Congress under the whip of party and not upon an examination of the evidence.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think the Senator will convince me of that, for I have studied the case pretty closely, although I have great faith in the power of the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will agree that historians have said it was party interests and the party lash put it through.

Mr. HARDWICK. Only Federalist historians wrote that. There was a good deal of party feeling about the matter, I admit.

Mr. BORAH. I do not remember whether they were Federalist historians alone.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know how Democratic and Republican historians may write about some of the party issues that we have now or may have later.

Mr. BORAH. Let me say to the Senator the fact that a man might have been unjustly convicted is not a conclusive argument against the justice of a law, because men have been unjustly convicted of murder.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly. The Senator from Georgia is making no such argument as that.

Mr. BORAH. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator did not suspect the Senator from Georgia of that, I know. But the fact remains that there were so many and so notorious instances where, in the opinion of the legislative branch of the Government, at least, the court had decided wrong and the jury had decided wrong in respect to this matter, that not only in the Lyon case, but in other cases—I can not remember the names of any more, but there were several of them—the Congress of the United States refunded the fine that had been imposed on the defendant out of the Public Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Let me call the Senator's attention to another refunding upon the part of Congress. The Senator will remember that when Gen. Jackson was in New Orleans he refused to obey the order of a judge and that he was fined for refusing to do so. In that case was involved the great question of the right of the civil authority as against the military authority. The judge fined the general. The general paid his fine. Nobody that I know of has ever contended but what the action of the judge was entirely correct, and Gen. Jackson conceded it to be correct by paying the fine. Yet Congress refunded the thousand dollars which he paid.

Mr. HARDWICK. Because Gen. Jackson violated the civil law in the performance of a great military duty. Congress did not refund the fine that was paid by Lyon and these other men because they had rendered great military service to the country. Congress refunded those fines to these men, if you will read the debates at that time—and I suppose the Senator has—on the ground that they had been martyrized in the cause of free speech and had rendered as great a service to this country as any soldier ever did on the battle field.

Mr. BORAH. I know that was the reason assigned.

Mr. HARDWICK. That was the true reason, too; and, according to my view, I am sorry if the Senator disagrees with me, as it is the absolute truth and right about it.

Mr. President, I see no need of taking this sort of a step. There is certainly none in most parts of the country. I understand that the real—in fact, practically the only—object of this section is to get some men called I. W. W.'s, who are operating in a few of the Northwestern States, and you Senators from those States have been exceedingly solicitous to have legislation of this kind enacted, so as to curtail some of the very undesirable activities of those particular people.

Mr. President, I dislike to be confronted by a situation in which in the name of patriotism we are asked to jeopardize the fundamental rights and liberties of 100,000,000 American people in order to meet a situation in a few Northwestern States, where those States themselves ought to be able to handle those questions for themselves and by themselves. It is another illustration of the inefficiency and impotency of the State under this growing custom of carrying all their troubles and all their burdens and all their woes and all their responsibilities to Washington and laying them upon the back of Uncle Sam.

Senators from those States, so far as I have been able to confer with them personally, admit to me freely that they have ample State statutes to deal with most of the things these I. W. W.'s are doing or are threatening. Why do they not enforce them instead of coming and asking us to pass a statute that is much worse than the sedition act of 1798, and applying that statute to 100,000,000 people, among the majority of whom at least there is no excuse or justification for any such legislation?

Mr. WALSH. I understood the Senator from Georgia to infer that there was some language in the bill which would prohibit one from advocating a negotiation of peace.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator will pardon me. I ask him not to interrupt me now on that subject, because I have not come to it. I am going to discuss that. I did, however, an hour or two ago make that statement, but I do not want to anticipate my argument. I have not quite reached that point. I shall be delighted to be interrupted by the Senator when I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was just going to suggest that the substance of the Senator's argument seems to be that the Western States ought, if they see fit, to prohibit people from favoring the cause of Germany and leave the citizens of Georgia the right to favor the cause of Germany.

Mr. HARDWICK. That suggestion is not worthy of the Senator. There is no citizen of Georgia who favors the German cause—not one that I know of or ever heard of——

Mr. POINDEXTER. The portion of the bill the Senator criticizes would not affect him.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I am not afraid of that part of the bill. I will tell the Senator what I am afraid of before I get through. There is no trouble like that in Georgia, and there is none in most of this country. It looks to me like this is a question the Northwestern States could handle as to the I. W. W.'s, in a few States there, without asking the entire country to jeopardize some of its fundamental rights and liberties. It is because they will not do it or do not do it or can not do it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. KING. One of the observations just made by the Senator I so heartily indorse that I want first to express my approval of the same, and then probably express very briefly a dissent from others of his views, and then to propound a question to the Senator. I do agree with the Senator most heartily that many of the States are becoming impotent; they utterly fail to discharge the responsibilities resting upon them under the Constitution, and are attempting to place upon the Federal Government the duty of discharging the police powers and functions which as sovereign States appertain to them.

It is lamentable, indeed, that there is not more of a spirit of virility and strength on the part of the executive and legislative officers of the States, so that they might lead the States to a discharge of their duties. But the point concerning which I am going to ask the Senator a question is this: There is an organization in the United States known to all of us, the object of which is to destroy all government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me interject there. There is no man on this earth more utterly opposed to them than the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KING. I know that. I know somewhat the views of the Senator from Georgia, and I know that he believes in order and in the Constitution and in the orderly growth and development of our Government. But that organization aims at the destruction of all government, the dislocation and destruction of our industrial and economic system. Its members do not strike for higher wages or improved conditions of labor; they strike for the purpose of absolutely destroying government. It is an anarchistical organization; a murderous, wicked, destructive organization. It does seem to me that as it is pursuing its diabolical work so effectively and, as it has been pursuing it during the past year, intruding itself into industrial organizations not only in the Northwestern States but in Eastern States, where war preparations are in progress, and by reason of which activities it is interrupting the progress of the war, it is high time that the Federal Government did something to protect itself and to aid the States in their attempts to protect themselves and the Government of the United States in the stupendous undertaking entailed by the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course the Senator knows wherever these men by acts interfere with the Federal Government's preparations for war and industrial movement they can be handled under the law as it now stands?

Mr. KING. Oh, yes; if the law is sufficient, but as to that I am not sure.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I am sure the law is amply sufficient already, but if not I will say to the Senator that no Senator in this Chamber will go further or act quicker to enact such laws as are necessary to accomplish that purpose than the Senator from Georgia. But there is a great difference between mere words and acts. There has always been recognized in the jurisprudence of all free people that difference between words and acts, and I dislike to go so far along the pathway of making the spoken word a crime. The Senator knows the danger of false witnesses and of false information and of persecution that inheres in any such course as that. Every thoughtful lawyer recognizes the danger that lurks in any such pathway as that.

Mr. KING. Yes; of course. The common law, as the Senator well knows, did not protect the individual against the effects of his speech. It is true it did not censor speech, but after he spoke——

Mr. HARDWICK. He was subject to the law.

Mr. KING. This statute, as I interpret it, does not interdict free speech, but it make the person subject to penalities for such speech if it culminate in harm.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator from Utah if he were a judge construing it, and the only judge, I would not have the slightest hesitation in voting for it except on account of the precedent which it might establish. I am not criticizing any judge when I am making that statement. I happen to know the Senator from Utah and to understand his mental operation, but when you have brought here a measure that is capable of almost any construction and that can be used as an engine of persecution where perfectly loyal men who have honest difference of opinion may be punished, I tell you I halt and hesitate and gag over it. I tell you I can not vote for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want very much to clearly understand the position being taken by the Senator from Georgia. As I gather it, his argument is being made against the amendment——

Mr. HARDWICK. From the Senate committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Beginning with line 18 on page 2.

Mr HARDWICK. I am going to particularize now the language that I think is objectionable, and how I think it is objectionable.

Mr. CUMMINS. Did I understand aright when I gathered the impression that the Senator from Georgia would regard that amendment as proper State legislation?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. He suggested that these troubles ought to be covered by the States rather than by the General Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. I said that they could be cured in the States in most instances by the enforcement of existing State statutes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I am wrong in assuming, which I did at the moment, that the Senator from Georgia thought the legislation might be profitable if enacted by States but improper if enacted by the General Government.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no; of course the State could not enact any such legislation; and then I do not think any legislature, State or Federal, ought to enact it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to continue the assumption.

Mr. HARDWICK. The trouble that has arisen out of the I. W. W. situation, in my judgment, as far as I have been advised, could largely be handled by the States.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Georgia believes this proposed legislation would be too severe, no matter by what authority enacted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I would not enact any such legislation as this by any authority.

Now, let us see what this bill is and what the real objection in detail to its provisions are. It contains seven substantive propositions, three of which came from the House in the form of a bill that passed there practically without contest, I am informed, and which I think could have passed this body practically without contest in the form that the House passed it. We are now informed by the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from North Carolina, that the amendments that make the bill particularly obnoxious, the amendments that give the bill the same features that made the sedition law of 1798 obnoxious and infamous, in my judgment at least, come from the Senate committee. So if the amendments or the amendment—I presume I might say it is all one amendment—suggested by the Senate committee were eliminated the bill would be far less objectionable. It is to be remembered also that the Department of Justice that framed this bill is not committed, and I am glad it is not, as long as it is my own party, to any such monstrous proposition as those now embodied in this bill and that are represented by it. As I said, in the bill as it now stands there are seven distinct substantive propositions. I am going to discuss them and I am going to tell the Senate what my objection is to each one of them.

First:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States, or to promote the success of its enemies, or shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements—

Now, that is the end of that proposition. Nobody can oppose that. I do not think it is necessary. I believe it is covered by the original espionage law. I think any Senator who has any recollection of that law will probably concur in that opinion. I made a somewhat hasty examination of that law in connection with this measure and that is my offhand opinion on that question. I believe it is already the law now, and I have no particular objection to it, except that it is unnecessary to repeat it—

Or—

And here is the second substantive proposition—

Or say or do anything except by way of bona fide and not disloyal advice to an investor or investors, with intent to obstruct the sale by the United States of bonds or other securities of the United States or the making of loans by or to the United States—

That is all right. I am not sure but that is already the law. The Department of Justice, however, thinks not, and it is on account of this second substantive proposition relating to the bonds and to the making of false statements with reference to bonds that the Department of Justice suggested this legislation and is urging expedition in connection with its consideration, because the administration desires to use that provision of the law in connection with the proposed and immediately pending liberty loan about to be offered.

Now, third:

And whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause or incite or attempt to incite insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct or discourage or willfully attempt to obstruct or discourage the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States.

That is the end of that. I am certain that is the law already. There may be some words added which do not materially change the sense of the legislation already passed, but anyhow that is the end of it and it was the end of the House bill. My judgment is that almost everything, if not quite everything, embraced in the House bill was already the law; but to remove some doubt on that subject, especially on the liberty-loan part of it, the Department of Justice presented this bill to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, and by that committee it was presented to the House of Representatives. If the bill had stopped there, every one of us could have afforded to pass it without the slightest objection. But in the Senate committee, for reasons that, of course, appear sound to that committee, or it would not have been done, very material and very far-reaching amendments were adopted, that entirely change the purpose, the scope, the object of this bill and that make it a measure altogether different and an altogether new proposition from that which came from the House of Representatives or from that which came from the Department of Justice or from that which the Attorney General to-day is urging this body to pass as expeditiously as possible in the interest of the third liberty loan.

What are those new propositions added by the Senate committee amendment? Here is the fourth:

And whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language—

The use of all these adjectives seems to have greatly strengthened this proposed statute in the minds of its proponents. To my mind they weaken it. The weakest part of speech in the English language is the adjective qualifying and shading and changing and twisting meaning, so much so that one of the wisest lawyers I know, an old man, has a supreme contempt for the adjective, and says it destroys the virility of the Saxon speech; and when he wants to be unusually severe about some younger lawyer who visits his town he classes him as one of those "infernal adjective lawyers."

What is "abusive"? You might think "abusive" was one thing; I might think "abusive" was another thing. Many men, many minds; many courts, many constructions.

"Disloyal!" I know men who are foolish enough to insist that anybody in this country who does not do whatever the President of the United States tells him to do about anything that comes up is disloyal to the country. Of course those men themselves are more disloyal to the country than are the men they criticize. This country is no longer fit to be a free country if that is sound doctrine; and yet there are some men who call that disloyal.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia, however, would not suggest that there is any court in Christendom which would hold or could hold that a refusal to adopt all the advice of the President of the United States would constitute disloyalty to the United States. There is no danger, at least, of that construction being put upon that word.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think I am with the Senator from Iowa on that question, but I am not absolutely dead certain. A Federal judge in Texas abusing the bench, dishonoring himself, dared to impugn and challenge the patriotism of Members of this body whose shoestrings he is not worthy to tie. Do you tell me that judge would not hold that because, forsooth, they did not agree with him about legislative questions they were disloyal? I do not know what he would hold; but I think that man would hold anything that he could get his hands on. I think he would even hold a stove until it burned him.

Oh, adjectives! God save us from the adjective lawyers and the adjective courts! I do not know what they will say is "abusive"; I do not know what they will say is "disloyal."

Any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of Government of the United States.

The suggestions made on this floor that the extreme advocates of woman suffrage might be liable to indictment under this language is not at all far-fetched. Some of them have contended that it was a denial of fundamental liberty to deny the women the right to vote; that it was a mockery to call this country "the land of the free" so long as all freedom was denied to them; and that it was worse than mockery to term this a democracy when they had no part or parcel or voice in its deliberations.

Some of the language that I have seen in print from the advocates of that propaganda would subject them, in my judgment as a lawyer—and I say it deliberately—to indictment, and certainly to conviction, if they were tried in this Texas court to which I have referred.

or the Constitution of the United States—

I do not know how many people would be safe under that language. Some people say that the Constitution is a sort of an elastic thing; that it does not mean anything much, except what they want it to mean for the time being. Some people abuse it, and say it is an iron band around the forehead of progress, and some people high in authority—the very highest in this land—have used just about such language. Would they be subject to indictment? Some things they have said about the Constitution of the United States are pretty abusive, and some of their talk about it has been even worse. Could we indict them? I do not know what would happen under this section.

or the soldiers or sailors of the United States—

You know I am for them. They are about the only people who are doing any real fighting, and I have a thousand times more respect for men who fight as they are fighting than for the lip patriots who fight with their tongues, but at the same time, as pointed out by the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] on yesterday, I am not sure how far that language would go. It seems that here in Washington, if we can credit the reports that are being published, we have an army of swivel-chair soldiers larger than the force of officers that lead our fighting forces, who walk around in gold braid and brass buttons, with jingling, clanking spurs, admiring themselves, and admired generally by the public, or at least so they seem to think——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why do they have spurs on them?

Mr. HARDWICK. A distinguished member of another body, if I may say it without offending my friend from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], said that, in his opinion, these swivel-chair officers, who are wearing uniforms in such large numbers around Washington, hiding out from the draft, wore spurs so that when they put their feet upon their desks they would not slip off. [Laughter.] That is the only useful purpose the spurs can serve, so I suppose the distinguished gentleman was right. I am not, however, sure that if we should pass this bill, even with an earnest desire to remedy this condition that I regard as an evil, even to invite public attention to the fact that political favoritism of the lowest and basest type has been employed to shield these men from the manly duties that they owe to their country at the front, on the battle fields, and in the trenches, and that they are merely hiding them out from the draft in these bombproof office positions—I am not sure that a man who should say that would not be indicted for abusing soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy.

or any language calculated—

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who is the ablest proponent of this bill—of course, not making any invidious comparisons between the various gentlemen who present it and stand sponsor for it, but who, at any rate, has made the longest argument in its support—admits that he thinks that the word "calculated" probably had better be changed to "intended." I promised to cite the Senator some authorities to show that "calculated" and "intended" have a very different legal signification. I am afraid I can not do so now, for I did not intend to speak until to-morrow, and I am speaking entirely without notes, entirely without preparation, except as my general reading has prepared me for the argument——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I think I have two decisions here to support his view in that regard.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know there are several such decisions, from having spent most of my life at the bar. I will let the Senator put the decisions to which he refers in in my time, if he will interrupt me, and cite them.

Mr. KING. I read from the Ninetieth Circuit Court of Appeals the case of Industrial Press against W. R. C. Smith Publishing Co., from the syllabus, as follows:

"Calculated to deceive" does not mean or include intent to deceive. There should be a clear averment that the name is used with intent to deceive in the respects claimed in the bill.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico for that purpose.

Mr. FALL. I simply want to clear up a question in my mind. Was that not a case where the statute required that the indictment or information should aver intent?

Mr. KING. Let me read a little further.

A bill for unfair competition in trade by the use by defendant of a name for a periodical similar to one used by complainant must clearly allege that it was so used with intent to deceive the public or patrons, and an allegation that it was "calculated to deceive" is insufficient.

Mr. FALL. I understand the distinction.

Mr. KING. Reading further from the syllabus:

Smallwood v. Com. (40 S. W., 248; 19 Ky., 344), where it was held that the word "calculated," as used in an instruction authorizing the jury in a prosecution for murder to convict if they believed that defendant willfully struck another with a pistol that was a deadly weapon or "calculated to produce death," was not equivalent to "intended," so as to render the instruction erroneous, but was synonymous with "fitted," "adapted," or "suited."

Without taking up any further time, I will merely call the Senator's attention to the case of the People ex rel. Springs against Reid, in One hundred and thirty-ninth Appellate Division Reports, Supreme Court of New York, page 555.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, there is no doubt whatever in my mind that the word "calculated" has a very different meaning from the word "intended" in statutes. One is objective and the other is subjective; that is the difference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will my colleague allow me a suggestion?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it is thought that the word "calculated" has the same meaning as "intended," why not meet that question by adding the words "and intended," so as to read "calculated and intended"?

Mr. HARDWICK. It would be better to substitute the one word for the other, I think.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it might be well to use both. I think the meaning should be "calculated to produce the result and intended to produce the result."

Mr. HARDWICK. I believe my colleague is right about that; but, at any rate, as I have said, one of those words is subjective and the other is objective; one means what the man who did the thing had in his mind when he did it, and the other means what the effect of the thing he did was after he did it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the one case a man might be perfectly innocent, and it might be held that his act was calculated to produce the result, when he had nothing of the sort in his mind and would not have done it at all if he had thought it was calculated to produce an evil result.

Mr. HARDWICK. Precisely; and it has been so held by the courts, I think, in a great many cases. I am sorry I do not have the time to answer the challenge made by my friend from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and to present the authorities, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has presented several. It seems to me, however, a self-evident proposition that there is a material and substantial difference between the two words, and that the proposed statute would be infinitely better one way than the other. I might do an act which is "calculated"—not calculated by me, but calculated so far as the results are concerned—to bring about a certain state of affairs without intending at all to bring about that state of affairs.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is not now in his seat, but I think I heard him make the statement to which the Senator from Georgia now refers. The Senator from Idaho did not assert that there was no difference between the word——

Mr. HARDWICK. He said he was not certain, I think.

Mr. CUMMINS. Between the word "calculated" and the word "intended." I think he very clearly recognized the difference between the legal meaning of those words. So far as I am concerned, I agree entirely——

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say to the Senator, because I was here and heard every word said, that the Senator from Idaho denied it and challenged me to produce any authority. He said he had been able to find only one himself.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. The Senator from Idaho is so well convinced that there is a difference in the meaning of those words that he has offered, or is about to offer, an amendment substituting the word "intended" for the word "calculated."

Mr. HARDWICK. And I am trying to strengthen him in that, because he said he would just as soon withdraw it, as it was not very important.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia, I think, understood the Senator from Idaho correctly when he said he found but one decision which indicated a difference between the meaning of those words; but the Senator from Georgia challenged him upon that, and I think that he has sustained the challenge very successfully, for there is an obvious difference between the meaning of those words, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] very clearly pointed out yesterday the difference between the two in their practical application.

I understood the Senator from Idaho to say that in the great majority of instances in actual practice there would be no difference in the result of trials whether we use the word "calculated" or the word "intended." I only say this because the Senator from Idaho is not here.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think he thinks that, but the trouble is that is a mere prediction, and I am not fond of relying on predictions in matters of this sort.

To resume the reading from the bill—

or any language calculated—

"Intended," I think, it ought to be, or "calculated and intended" would do—

to bring the form of Government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute—

And so forth.

Now, the sixth substantive proposition—

or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

The most outrageous proposition is embraced in those few words that, in my judgment, ever was submitted to a legislative body in connection with a measure of this kind. Members of the two Houses of Congress in the performance of their constitutional duties have been compelled to stand on these floors and vote against certain measures which in the opinion of the majority were best calculated to prosecute the war.

Now, some of them—and I do not hesitate to say that I am one of them—have been very bitterly assailed by a lot of people, for whom I have the utmost scorn and contempt, because they exercised their own judgment and followed their own conscience in matters of this sort. We have been branded as disloyal to this country because we did not take orders and because we did not follow every plan and every method that was suggested, but had our own ideas and thought that perhaps there might be some other and different and, in our judgment, better way to wage this war. While lying newspapers and lying men have maligned us, are we not to be permitted to go home and defend our own honor without being branded as felons when we undertake the defense?

Is that what representative government means, and is that the low estate to which the representatives of the people have fallen? If I thought so, I would not be very much devoted to this form of government myself; and yet, if any man who found it necessary, like the chairman of the great committee that reported the bill and, like I did, to vote against the food-control law, goes home and explains the reason why he opposed it some one may say "that is calculated to incite or inflame resistance to a law relating to the prosecution of this war, either as conducted by Federal or State authority, or both." Is that right? Is that fair? Is that just? Is a country in which that can be done a free country? Does free speech still live and is free thought still enthroned in the hearts and minds of a people who will submit to any such proposition as that? Yet that is what we are proposing to do in this bill.

Not only that, Mr. President, but I lay down the proposition—and it is fundamental and as sound as the ark upon which our covenant rests—that any man in this Republic—I do not care how humble he is, how poor he is, how lowly his station in life—has just as much right as the highest and mightiest official who sits enthroned in power to advocate a change in policy, a change in law, a change in plan, and a change in method even about conducting a war in a free country. So long as these men tell the people that they are in favor of the enforcement of the law as it is written, so long as it is so written they have the right to advocate a change, a repeal, or a modification of that law.

Oh, Senators, I tell you when you pass legislation of this character you will have gone further and faster than the Federalists ever went when under Alexander Hamilton's whip and spur they signed the death knell of their own party as they passed the sedition bill of 1798.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator find anything in this bill that would forbid anyone advocating a change in the law governing the Food Administration?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do. I have just explained that to the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Or that would forbid anyone to say that the law ought to be changed? Is that forbidden? Where does the Senator find that? I ask him to point it out, please.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the Senator been in the Chamber during all of my remarks?

Mr. MYERS. I have been in the Chamber a part of the time.

Mr. HARDWICK. A part of the time is, I think, a correct answer, because I just explained exactly the way I thought that came in. Still, for the benefit of the Senator, whom I esteem very highly, I will explain to him exactly how that can and will be done.

The sixth substantive proposition in this bill is that you are going to put in prison for a period of not more than 20 years or you are going to punish by a fine of not more than $10,000, or both, any man who—shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted State or Federal authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

Suppose the Senator from Montana had voted against some one of the measures which have been passed for the prosecution of the war, and that he was bitterly, viciously, and falsely assailed at home in connection with his vote, and that he went out, as would be his right, to defend his honor, his character, his manhood, and his position before his own constituency, and in order to do that he had to tell them why he was against the food-control bill, we will say, or the draft law. Assailed on every corner and from every angle and from every side, he has got to show why he did not support those measures; and yet when he does it they will say: "That is calculated to inflame the people to resist or oppose the law."

Mr. MYERS. Not "oppose." "Oppose" is not in the provision, but "resist" is.

Mr. HARDWICK. What is the difference between "resist" and "oppose"?

Mr. MYERS. "Opposing" is a mental operation, while "resisting" is refusing to subject one's self to the law.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator is right about that; it would make it just a little better if he is; but I am afraid to risk that matter; I am afraid that some Texas judge, like the "misfit" we have down there to whom I have referred, might say, as he did say of those who took a certain view on certain of these measures, that they ought to be taken out and shot.

Mr. MYERS. Still, the Senator never heard of that suggestion being carried into effect?

Mr. HARDWICK. I would not like to risk it in that Texas court over which that distinguished and able-bodied citizen presides; I would not care to risk my liberty with any such man as that. Really, of course, he is not fit to be on any bench; that stands to reason, and can not be disputed by anyone. Senators must see the danger. That judge would unhesitatingly say, if I lived in Texas and went home to defend my vote on the food-control legislation, which I am very proud to say I opposed, that I was trying to inflame resistance to the execution of a law which was necessary to the prosecution of the war. Ah, Senators, I say you have opened a Pandora's box when you enact any such legislation as this. The furies that Alexander Hamilton and his co-Federalist chiefs unloosed to gnaw the very vitals of the party they loved, and to which they owed allegiance, were as nothing compared to what the result will be if you enact legislation of this character and continue to walk along this pathway. Instead of destroying one political party, you may destroy two political parties, if you keep it up and both continue to unite in the accomplishment of such results, and instead of having, as you will have after awhile, an autocracy that is only rivaled in modern history by the Romanoff dynasty in Russia before it lost power, you will invite that which you fear most, the other extreme, the reign of American Bolsheviki in this country. One extreme begets the other. Ah, Senators, half way between those two camps I stand; I am neither for the autocracy of the Romanoffs nor for the socialism of the Bolsheviki.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there is no man who values the right of criticism in public affairs more than I do, and there are not very many who exercise it more freely than I do. If I believed that this amendment could have any such effect as is suggested by the Senator from Georgia, I would condemn it quite as severely and emphatically as he does.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am sure of that.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I do not understand that it means any such thing; and I am going to ask the Senator from Georgia to elaborate a little upon it, in order that I may be able to view it from every possible angle. Does the Senator from Georgia understand that anyone who refuses to accept a recommendation of the President of the United States with regard to the propriety of a law is resisting lawful authority?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia most emphatically does not; but there are a lot of fools in this country who mighty nearly think that, or claim to do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then let us go one step farther. I want to know what the Senator from Georgia understands by resistance to "any duly constituted authority." What is the character of the act of resistance?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think it is quite so important what the Senator from Georgia may understand about it as it is important what the Texas judge might thing about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, I do not think we can make laws to suit the idiosyncracies or the idiocies of a Texas judge.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; but we can make laws that an unfit judge can not twist into all sorts of constructions that are quite possible from the language employed. We had better quit making them at all if we can not do that. It would be better never to have another law from now until judgment day if we can not make laws that are incapable of as many misconstructions as this Senate committee amendment is.

Mr. CUMMINS. I doubt if we could pass any law that a corrupt judge could not twist into an instrument of injustice.

Mr. HARDWICK. I doubt that, too.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I come back to this matter. Agreeing with the Senator from Georgia that the word "calculated" ought to be stricken out and the word "intended" ought to be inserted instead of "calculated," "resistance to a duly constituted Federal authority" is a refusal to obey a duly constituted authority.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator let me elaborate that a little, or does he understand what I mean?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I should like to know what the Senator means by "resistance," because it can not be that if the Senator from Georgia were to go home and defend his views with regard to any law he would be a lawbreaker.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why, Mr. President, a newspaper published in Georgia that was supposed to be reputable contended that I ought to be indicted for doing this very thing, under a law just like this.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no reputable man who would contend anything of that kind about the Senator from Georgia. He was a disreputable man, whoever he may be, or wherever he may live, who would contend that the Senator from Georgia has not that right, both morally and legally.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, Mr. President, here is the way they do it, and here is the way they have done it. I am not dealing in prophecy now; I am talking about history. I do not have myself in mind more than I do many other people throughout this country, in office and out of office, who have views that do not agree with everything that has been done, and who think other plans might have been pursued with more hope of success in some of these matters.

Whoever * * * shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance——

Mr. CUMMINS. Will not the Senator read that "intended to"?

Mr. HARDWICK. We have an amendment here, and of course I have to discuss the amendment as it is. Of course, if it is calculated, it is a little worse; but if it is intended, it is somewhat better. But here is the argument they will make: "Why, it is just as plain as a pikestaff. This man goes out, and he makes these speeches. He shows that they were mistaken about these things. He attempts to show, at least, that these laws are wrong, and the result is that the people are opposed to them, and they resist them, and the ultimate result is that they do not obey them."

How are you going to escape his logic? I am not sure but that the courts would be justified in so holding, if this language is left exactly like it is. If the language is made to read "intended," then, of course, they would have to convince any jury that tried a case like that that the man, whoever he was, who was taking that position, intended to interfere with the country, and then there would be only one more step of reasoning, "Why, surely, as a sensible man, he could not have done that unless he intended to accomplish the natural result of his acts."

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. Well, in the execution of any of our criminal laws which I have opposed, for instance, and which I may be at liberty to criticize elsewhere, does the Senator from Georgia mean to say that if I express my view with regard to the righteousness or propriety of any criminal law I am inflaming or inciting some one to resist an officer who is in the execution of that law, who has a warrant of arrest, and is about to take one into custody? Could my opposition to the law itself be construed into an invitation or a suggestion that one who was about to be arrested by an officer should resist the law?

Mr. HARDWICK. Why, undoubtedly. I would not so contend, but it has been so contended on this floor. I heard a distinguished Senator of the United States stand in this presence, in the Senator's hearing, I think, and in mine, I know, and say that people who opposed these laws thoroughly obstructed the draft, for instance—he was discussing the draft in that particular case—because, although they did not advise anybody to resist the law, the effect of their argument was that people got opposed to it and would resist it, and that they were infinitely more guilty of stirring up opposition to the law than people who went out and advised folks flatly and expressly to resist it. Why, that contention has been made right in this Chamber.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not know that the Senator had accepted any such rule as that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not accept it, but it has occurred. I despise it, but men have been indicted and dragged into court for less than that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like, with the consent of the able Senator from Georgia, to ask the Senator from Iowa his opinion of this question that might arise under a law of this character.

Quite a number of Senators, while the revenue bill was under consideration, insisted upon raising a larger per cent of the money with which to pay the expenses of this war by taxation instead of by selling bonds. Now, suppose a Senator should go on the stump and, in defending his record, criticize the injustice of the present law, should urge that the money necessary to defray the expenses of this war which is now being raised by selling bonds and thereby putting the burden upon posterity ought to have been raised by levying taxes upon excess war profits and swollen incomes. Does the honorable Senator think that would be a violation of this proposed statute in the way of discouraging or hindering the prosecution of the war?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, very clearly not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator thinks not?

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe that a greater portion of the expense incident to the war should be raised by taxation, and I intend to say so, here and everywhere.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I intend to do the same thing, and do it boldly and emphatically.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it is impossible for me to conceive a judge so corrupt or so ignorant as to construe a criticism of that kind into an obstruction of the sale of bonds, because, the law having been passed, I think that no one should attempt to interfere with the sale of the bonds, because that is the way in which the duly constituted authority has determined to raise the money for the prosecution of the war; and while I believe that I have a perfect right to criticize the law and to endeavor to change or modify it, yet there could be no obstruction to the sale of bonds by any course of that kind.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield, and to whom?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say that I agree with the Senator from Iowa that every effort should be made by every patriotic citizen to raise this money according to the law as now written; but does not the Senator think that probably there are people who would not buy these bonds, thinking that if the bonds were not taken the Government would be forced to the extreme of conscripting the money for defraying the expenses of the war as it has conscripted the men to fight the war?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is not inconceivable—that is, that some minds would operate in that way—but it is inconceivable that any judge should hold that a person who acted upon those motives would be a violator of the law.

Mr. GORE and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield first to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, with reference to what the Senator from Iowa says, there is no doubt as to the justice of the point for which he is contending. I dislike to introduce a personal reference; but I may say that during the last liberty-loan campaign, in October, I had occasion to deliver an address in New York City. During the course of my remarks I insisted upon the raising of a larger part of the revenue for the conduct of the war from taxation, and a lesser proportion from the sale of bonds. I did take occasion, however, to urge the necessity of subscribing for the bond issue then being floated. I declared, during the course of my remarks, that the failure of the loan would be almost as bad as the loss of a battle, and that it was just as much a public and patriotic duty to subscribe for the bonds as to pay taxes; and yet the leading publication in my own State assailed me most bitterly for attacking the liberty loan and discouraging the purchase of bonds. I do not imagine that any judge would share the views of that editor; and yet it shows how, when passion is rampant, the minds of otherwise prudent men are unbalanced or led astray.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator from Tennessee rose first.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator from Georgia—and I should also like to ask the Senator from Iowa, who is on the committee—about the words "any duly constituted Federal authority." Just what does that term mean?

Mr. HARDWICK. It means every branch of State and Federal authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. This troubles me: Take the commission that is in control of Hog Island. Is that a duly constituted Federal authority? If it is, would a person who criticized or who incited any one to criticize or inflame against that commission, which has charge there—I am just using it as an illustration, of course—come within the provisions of this bill? If so, it is very important for some of us to know it before we vote for the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not the author of these words. I accepted them when they were presented in the committee by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who usually employs the proper phrase to express the idea that he has in mind. I do not know what authority in the Hog Island enterprise the Senator from Tennessee has in view. I am not very familiar with that enterprise.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that I have not any at all; I do not know who it is; but evidently there must be a duly constituted Federal authority in control of that project.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know that. If the Senator from Tennessee will kindly describe to me the relation which the Government has toward that enterprise, which I understand is a private enterprise, then I shall be able to answer the question a good deal more intelligently.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that it is under Government control.

Mr. FLETCHER and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator yield? Seven Senators are on their feet.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senators will pardon me just a minute, I am willing to yield to any of them; but I think the language is just as broad as it can be. It covers everything that is a Federal authority. The Senator will have to find out whether that is a Federal authority or not, and then he can answer his own question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was just going to state the situation at Hog Island. The Emergency Fleet Corporation, through the agency of the International Shipbuilding Corporation, is in charge of the yard and building the ships; so the Federal authority there would probably be the Emergency Fleet Corporation. I merely mention that in view of what has been said.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Nelson	Shields
Borah	Hardwick	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Henderson	Overman	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Kellogg	Pittman	Smoot
Cummins	King	Poindexter	Sterling
Curtis	Kirby	Pomerene	Sutherland
Dillingham	Lodge	Ransdell	Swanson
Fletcher	McCumber	Reed	Thomas
France	McKellar	Robinson	Tillman
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Saulsbury	Townsend
Gallinger	McNary	Shafroth	Trammell
Gore	Martin	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hale	Myers	Sherman	Warren

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have been requested to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] on necessary public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator, and I beg his pardon for not yielding sooner.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia possibly two questions. The first one is this: What would be the Senator's view of the possible construction of any judge upon a provision in the penal laws of a State which provided that any person who, by word or act, advised another to disobey any of the laws of the State should be guilty of a misdemeanor? Would the Senator contend that any judge fit to be called a judge could ever possibly hold that a mere condemnation of the law itself was equivalent to advising its resistance?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not if the language was as stated by the Senator; but that is not the language in this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. The second question is this: If a judge could possibly so hold, I do not think the Senator would contend that we ought to abolish a law of that kind simply because some one unfitted to hold the position might so hold.

Mr. HARDWICK. Probably not. If the Senator had followed my argument throughout, however, he would not ask either one of those questions. The difficulty is that we have not used language like that. If you will merely put in this bill exactly the language which the Senator has stated, and which is now of record, I should vote for that part of it with little hesitation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator that we should have used the word "advise" and not "calculated"; and I think probably there will be very little difference in the Senate about that proposition. I can not see the logic of the use of the word "calculated" at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, "to incite or inflame resistance"—there is no need of those words.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know; but the Senator certainly could not claim that any court would hold that merely expressing opposition to a law would be construed to mean that the person so objecting was inciting or inflaming resistance.

Mr. HARDWICK. They have held that in this country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us take a case like this: Take the case of a State like mine, a prohibition State. The question of prohibition is a question that comes up at every election and at every session of the legislature, and we have orators on both sides, those proclaiming in favor of it and those proclaiming against it, those contending against it arguing that it is a denial of the freedom of the individual. Now, no court would hold, or could possibly hold, that the person who was against prohibition was committing an offense against the law or was inciting anyone to resist the law.

Mr. HARDWICK. The trouble about it is, if the Senator pleases, that the language used here is not the language that the Senator has used. If the language used here were that "any person who shall by utterance, writing, or publication use language which is intended to cause resistance to any law" should be punished, I would be for it. I would find no objection to it. But it is "to incite or inflame resistance"; and there are courts in this country that have held—I will not undertake to specify them now, but I think I can substantiate that statement—that any argument that goes to the very roots of the law itself has a tendency to inflame and to incite resistance. I do not think it is a sound contention, but it is not an unusual one.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it is a contention that any court could possibly stand by.

Mr. HARDWICK. The trouble is that they have, Senator.

Now, Mr. President, I have but a very few more words to say about this matter.

The next proposition is that any person who—shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged—is a felon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the next sentence limits that—

With intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. My colleague is right. I think that removes the most objectionable thing that I had in mind about that. I do not think there is any particular trouble about that with that limitation; without it, it would be unspeakably dangerous.

Now we come to the final proposition:

And whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein—

Shall be a felon, and punished as prescribed by this act.

That language, if it is to stay in the bill at all, undoubtedly ought to be amended. It ought to be "whoever shall favor the German Empire or its allies in the present war, or by word or act oppose the United States therein." We do not want to leave any room for construction about what the cause of the United States in this war is. Senators say they do not mean anything more than to oppose the country while it is prosecuting this war. If they mean no more than that, they ought not to employ language which is easily capable of a different construction than that, and that may embark us on the broad field of inquiry as to exactly what and how broad the cause of this country is in prosecuting this war.

Mr. McCUMBER. What would the Senator strike out in that phrase?

Mr. HARDWICK. I would strike out the words "the cause of," and just say, "whoever favors the German Empire and its allies, or opposes the United States, in this war," if I were going to have the language at all.

I have a further objection to that proposition, even as amended. I undertook to state it in a colloquy I had with the Senator from Idaho. It is a serious objection; it is not a factious objection; and I predict that if we leave this language in the day will come when we will see some grave abuses growing out of this very thing.

There are men in this country, and there are newspapers in this country, who insist now that if anybody should propose to make peace with Germany he would be very close to a traitor to this country. Senators for whom I have the greatest respect, and for whose opinions and judgment I have the greatest respect, I know entertain that view. Yet they must realize that they have neither a monopoly of wisdom nor a monopoly of patriotism, and that other men might just as well feel otherwise about that and still be as loyal and as patriotic as they are.

Personally, I am inclined to agree for the present; but the time may come when all of us, or all sensible men, can agree that we have an opportunity to conclude an honorable peace. Yet if the time did come when we could obtain a peace with honor, and anybody undertook to lead a movement of that sort in this country, there are men and there are newspapers and there may be courts, or judges thereof at least, who would say that when he did it he was opposing the United States in this war, and favoring Germany and her allies. It is a dangerous proposition to risk. There are men in this country who go so far as to say—one I have in mind now—that the President of the United States did this country a great disservice when he discussed at a joint session of Congress not long ago the terms on which the United States might conclude peace.

As far as I am concerned I do not contend that the time has arrived when anybody ought to suggest peace. My idea is that we are in the fighting business now, and that we have not yet come to a point where we could hope to get a proper peace. But I hope the time may come when we can honorably compose our differences with our enemy, when we can with honor to the United States end this slaughter that is now devastating the world. When that time comes I do not want myself or any other man in this country, whether he is in office or out of it, to be muzzled so that he can not speak. I insist now, as I insisted earlier in the day to the Senate, that the humblest citizen of the United States, out of office though he be, unclothed with power though he stand, has just as much right as the President of the United States or anybody else in office, however high their authority, to advocate whatever course of action he thinks is right with respect to this matter. It is utterly impossible in a free country to enact and enforce a statute without muzzling freedom by which you can say it is patriotic and lawful to advocate a continance of this war from now until doomsday but unpatriotic and disloyal and treasonable and criminal to advocate a conclusion of peace, even when it can be honorably concluded.

Mr. President, I think, no doubt, if the committee in charge of this bill will strike out all except what the House of Representatives passed we can readily agree to the passage of the bill. The vice of a large portion of it, at least practically all of it, comes from the Senate committee amendments. I do think that in the interest of free speech, of liberty, order regulated by law, and fundamental rights in this land of the free, that that is about far enough to go to-day, and I again warn the Senate that even as the sedition act of 1798 spelled and sounded the death warrant of one political party, too much of this sort of thing can easily spell and sound the death knell and the death warrant of two political parties in this country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before saying the little I desire to say about the committee amendments to the bill I wish to refer to some remarks that were made here as to the candidacy of Mr. Berger, of Wisconsin, and the question of peace. At this time, Mr. President, no peace could possibly be made that was not a German peace, made in her interest, equivalent to a loss of the war; and I think any allusion or any talk of a peace at this time is most unfortunate, for I believe the idea cherished by anybody that we can separate the German people from the Kaiser——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator let me interrupt him?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely want to say, so that neither the Senate nor the country may misunderstand my position, that I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator does, for I have been listening to him.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think this is any time to talk about peace, but I do not want to be muzzled when the time comes.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator's position; he stated it very clearly. Anyone who cherishes the idea that we can separate the German people from the Kaiser or that we can separate Austria from Germany, or Turkey and Bulgaria from Germany, is cherishing the merest delusion. I think for that reason all talk about peace is harmful, for it tends to divide and confuse opinion here and among our allies and to strengthen the German determination to stop at nothing short of the fulfillment of all their demands.

Mr. President, there is another form of demanding peace which is much worse, and that is the kind of peace that was demanded by Mr. Berger, as I saw it reported in the newspapers. It was to make peace now and make it at any price practically. That seems to me to be so disloyal as to border on treason. The man is under indictment for similar offenses. I think his candidacy was most unfortunate, and that he should poll 100,000 votes in a great State of this Union is to me to the last degree melancholy.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me ask my eminent friend from Massachusetts, Does the Senator from Massachusetts assume that the United States Senate under the Constitution of the United States, until it is amended or destroyed, would allow a man to take a seat in this body who had to swear he would support the Constitution when his campaign had been both against the Government and for the destruction of the Constitution?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that fortunately is a hypothetical question now. I for one should hope to see a seat refused such a man as the Senator describes.

Mr. President, as to this bill, the worst offenders in this country are those agents and spies—the word "spies" has been used here very loosely—but those agents of the German Government who have been engaged not merely since we entered the war but since the beginning of the war in dynamiting factories, in starting great incendiary fires, in attempting to destroy railroad bridges, in poisoning food, and in mixing glass with bread. Those are criminal acts of the worst kind, and they are being committed frequently throughout this country. There are other men in this country who are furnishing information to the German Government injurious to us and helpful to the German Government. Those are spies. We have a law to reach those people, but the criminals who put a bomb on a ship or blow up a factory and destroy innocent lives according to my idea have been treated altogether too delicately. I saw in a paper that two have been arrested and the charge against them dropped out of sight. They come to trial and they get some short term in the State prison or the prison of the United States, a punishment for which they care nothing. The only way, in my opinion, to put an end to those criminal activities of organized German agents and spies is to treat them as spies and agents of that kind always have been treated in time of war—try them by a court-martial and shoot them. Germany does not hesitate to do that. No other country hesitates to do it. We have ample law for that. This proposed law does not touch those classes at all. The German agents and the German spies do not go about this country publishing their views. On the contrary, they probably pretend to be loyal to the United States in order to cover their opposition. This bill is directed against those who print or publish or utter language injurious to the Government and helpful to the German cause. To state it very broadly, it is aimed at certain classes of agitators who exist in different parts of the country.

With the purposes of this bill I think everybody must be in sympathy. I do not suppose there is the slightest objection anywhere to the bill as it came from the House with the committee amendments to that portion of the bill; but the Senate committee has seen fit to add an amendment which is longer than the original measure and which is designed to meet certain very dangerous expressions or outbreaks of opinion in different parts of the country. They ought to be met, they ought to be dealt with in some way, and dealt with lawfully. It should not be left, as it now is, to the rough hand of popular justice or injustice to settle. Undoubtedly the cases which this law intends to cover will be dealt with by lynch law if we do not deal with it ourselves.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am glad to hear the Senator suggest that these men ought to be dealt with by a military tribunal.

Mr. LODGE. The spies and German agents?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I mean the spies and German agents. Germany has not hesitated to deal with them under the military code, and if our military code is not broad enough to cover that class of cases it seems to me it ought to be amended so as to place within the jurisdiction of military tribunals the classes of men—and women, too, if you please—mentioned by the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I feel very strongly about that, and I think we have increased and continued these crimes by the tender way in which we have handled spies and criminal agents. There is no other way to describe it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator referred to the fact that unless these people were dealt with in an orderly way and a legal way the mob would undoubtedly deal with them, and that the Senator did not desire to have occur. I simply call attention to the fact that I have received notice by telegraph that at Collinsville, Ill., April 5, a mob of 300 men lynched a man by the name of Prager for disloyalty.

Mr. LODGE. That is an illustration of the point I was making.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that I have messages here from my own State, where the Federal court is in session. A man was on trial who said he cared nothing for the American flag; that he loved the German flag better, and would rather fight under the German flag than the American flag, and he hoped Germany would win.

Mr. HARDWICK. He ought to have been sent over there.

Mr. OVERMAN. He was turned loose by the court because there was no law to punish him, and the marshal has reported to me that unless we did something mob law would break out in North Carolina pretty soon.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in connection with what is being said in regard to mob violence or the fear of mob violence, I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to an account of a meeting of the governors of the various States here, and I read this statement:

> Govs. Manning, of South Carolina, and Milligan, of Maine, warned that unless drastic steps were taken soon mob violence would be expected.

Mr. LODGE. I think there can be no doubt of that, Mr. President.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennesssee?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. There is no one more opposed to mob law than I am. I think the course of justice ought always to run smooth. There ought always to be a resort to the courts to punish all unlawful conduct. But I think there has been too much argument here in favor of this statute in order to protect the emissaries of Germany. I understand this law is to punish them in order to prevent them from doing wrong to this country, wrong to our Army and our Navy and our Government, and not for their protection against lynch law. Of course we would rather not have the mob law, but the object of this law is to suppress the infamous and murderous conduct that is going on in this country and not to protect these murderers and incendiaries and emissaries of Germany.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope nothing that I have said could be possibly twisted into a suggestion that I wanted to protect these people.

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly not; I did not intend to say that; but I only called attention to the fact that since this bill has been up we constantly refer to it as a measure which ought to be passed to stop lynching and to stop mob law. That is one of the consequences which will follow if we do not have a law to punish them, and I would not go so far as to say it ought to follow.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my first criticism is that the law under which we could reach spies and German agents is not enforced in such a way as to really strike terror to their hearts and put an end to it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. FALL. I ask the Senator how he would apply the law we have now upon our statute books so as to vest in a military tribunal the trial of those charged with treason or with being spies?

Mr. LODGE. I think that to bring them before a military tribunal we must have additional legislation. In the law we have, as I recall it, there are certain offenses described, and if a person is convicted of those offenses he is liable to the death penalty.

Mr. FALL. But the tribunals constituted for the trial of those cases are the ordinary civil tribunals.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FALL. The only method by which a military tribunal could obtain jurisdiction to try the cases would be by a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus or else the civil tribunal would, under our law, take possession of the accused upon an application for a writ and withdraw him from the operation of the military law and put him to trial before that civil tribunal. If the law fails now, it is because of the failure of the civil tribunals to visit sentence.

Mr. LODGE. It is the failure of the civil tribunal to punish these crimes as they should be punished, in my judgment.

Mr. OVERMAN. There ought to be some law providing for a court-martial to hang these people. I want to know if the Senator can cite me to a law on the statute books that enables them to be punished? The truth is——

Mr. LODGE. I do not mean the cases covered by the act we are now considering.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know you can not convict a man of treason under our law. You must have a different law.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator remembers the espionage act better than I do, but I think in that bill we made provision——

Mr. OVERMAN. We have no law on the subject, and the truth is we can not convict anybody for it. It is utterly inefficient.

Mr. LODGE. The language of the Constitution, as I recall it—I have not it open before me—is "giving aid and comfort" to the enemy.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is it.

Mr. LODGE. I know the difficulties that have occurred in the past in the definition of treason. What I was referring to, and I may be wrong, in the espionage act, as it is called, which we passed, which included really, I think, 12 different bills, I thought there was a provision for the crimes which I have mentioned, the using of dynamite, or anything of that sort, or plotting against the Government, for which death was one of the penalties.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is right; but I am sorry to say the provisions were stricken out. The bill we passed here six months ago would cover it. It came back from the House yesterday. The Senate has tried to take care of the situation in conference. As soon as the consideration of this bill is over, that bill, which, I think, will take care of that situation, will be brought up. It did pass the Senate six months ago.

Mr. LODGE. Difficulty is found in the course of the civil tribunal and that is the reason why I agree so strongly with the Senator from Oregon that it would be well if we could have legislation which should bring certain cases of spies and criminal agents before a court-martial.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to read one paragraph of the Constitution which I think is absolutely prohibitive against trying men not in the military and naval service of the United States by a court-martial:

> The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

I take it that under this provision of the Constitution, unless a man is in the military or naval service of the United States, he could not be tried by a court-martial. At all events, he could not unless we suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and that would have to be suspended by an act of Congress and not by the President.

Mr. LODGE. One very great President did suspend the writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. WALSH. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Constitution was construed in the Milligan case, so often referred to during the present Congress, in which the defendant Milligan and others who had been convicted by a court-martial in Indiana were discharged on a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. LODGE. I remember the case; but, of course, a district can be declared under martial law in time of war.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will permit me, only upon the theory that there is a revolution in that district.

Mr. LODGE. The theory is not so important as the fact.

Mr. FALL. That is what the Constitution provides; and it is only upon the theory that the civil law can not be enforced either by the State authorities, if it happens to be in the State, or by the National authority, where the unheaval is of such force in that State that the civil process can not be invoked successfully; and then by a tribunal properly constituted. As the Senator suggested, that tribunal has been considered to be the President of the United States, and not only in one case, but Mr. Jefferson was the first authority in the United States who suspended the writ of habeas corpus. Mr. Lincoln was compelled to suspend it, and the courts recognized it as being suspended, even when Mr. Lincoln had not declared a revolution to exist.

Mr. LODGE. There was a man who, in 1863, said it could be done if necessary.

Mr. President, I have gotten away from the bill. This amendment, as I understand it, was taken from the Montana statute, and I believe from what has been said here the passage of that statute was due to if not suggested by the decision of a judge out there who acquitted a man charged with offenses which certainly, in my judgment, deserved punishment. The origin of the statute seems to me to make it necessary that, however meritorious it is, we should scrutinize it with care. If I may use a phrase, which I borrow from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], it was what might be called an impulsive statute, and I think an impulsive statute deserves to be carefully examined, because we do not desire, certainly in meeting these undoubted evils, to create a situation which might terrorize and prevent men from engaging in free and legitimate discussion—I mean loyal men. It is one thing to punish a man for what is described here and another thing to use it as it might be used in the hands of unscrupulous officials to stifle opinion, either in a newspaper or an utterance by an individual.

We do not want to put the innocent in peril in our desire to reach the guilty. I think we can amend this clause so that it will be safe and at the same time carry out the purposes that we desire. As to the word "calculated," the Senator from Tennessee read the legal definition of it, which was rather looser than I had expected. I think the word "calculated" is too broad a word. I think it leaves too dangerous a power in the hands of the men who are called upon to administer the law. If any danger arises from this statute it will be in its administration, not in the clause as it reads here, as it is read and understood by us, but in the way in which it is administered.

I am aware that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] yesterday in a colloquy with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] called attention to the difference between the use of the word "calculate" and the use of the word "intend" as shifting the burden of proof. I think that is undoubtedly true, but it seems to me that that degree of protection which is carried in the word "intend," and which we find in most of our statutes in the form of the adverb "knowingly," prevents the punishment or the persecution of the innocent. I think the word "calculated" ought to be changed to "intended," and we should give that much advantage. I do not think it would interfere with the effective operation of the statute, for it is to be remembered that although this statute only carries the accused person into court and before a jury and gives him a trial, that is a great protection. I think we ought to have in all such cases the protection of trial by jury. That is the reason why I am so much opposed to the wholesale power that we have given to stop the passage through the mails of any publications simply on the judgment of one man.

But it is to be remembered that the mere threat of prosecution, the mere threat of bringing a man or a newspaper or any publication into court, to the average man is a very serious matter; and a threat of prosecution would undoubtedly deter many men who are just as loyal men as stand in the country to-day from expressing their honest opinion, which they would have a right to express.

I hope the Senate will be willing to change the word "calculated" to "intended," as suggested by the Senator from Idaho.

In line 5, page 3, occur the words "or inflame." "Inflame" to my mind is rather a novel word in a statute. It is not very clear to me what the legal interpretation would be. It seems to me it would be better to put in some word with which we are familiar in statutes, such as the word "encourage." That is a small point, but it seems to me to be a necessary one.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the word "incite" conveys to the mind very much the same idea.

Mr. LODGE. I think it does.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the statute would be to any extent affected if the word "inflame" were entirely omitted.

Mr. LODGE. Incite, as I understand it, involves the idea of beginning resistance. I think there is another idea to be covered, and that is the encouraging of resistance which already exists. Stimulating it, inflaming it, in ordinary conversation is perfectly understood; but I think a better statutory word could be found. I think, however, there are two stages of resistance: One covered by incitement, which starts it when perhaps it does not exist; and the other, which stimulates and encourages it after it is begun; but that is not a very vital point.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, of course this has been a very interesting discussion all the way through, and certainly by no means the least interesting portion of it is that to which we are now lisening. I mean that very sincerely. I am, however, impressed with the statement which was made by the Senator from Massachusetts, in answer to a suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], in which the Senator indicated that he would like to see certain offenders in the United States tried by military tribunals. The point I am arriving at is this:

It has been suggested here, and agreed to I think by nearly all, that unless the law itself provides some method of dealing with those who are outraging public opinion by attacks upon our form of Government or upon our Constitution or upon our soldiers or upon the uniform, unless something is done one of two things must inevitably happen—that is, that lynch law will be invoked against those people or that sooner or later they will be dealt with by a military tribunal.

Now, I want simply to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is not his understanding, as it is mine, that, while before the civil tribunals, which some of us are anxious to retain as the proper tribunals before which offenses shall be tried, "hair-splitting"—if the Senator will allow me to use that term—definitions as to what "inflame" and what "calculated" mean and what "incite" means, and so forth, may very properly be indulged in, before no military tribunal will ever any defense be listened to for one moment based upon such attempted definitions of words?

Mr. LODGE. I entirely agree to that.

Mr. FALL. No presumptions are engaged in before a military tribunal as to "intent," and the principle of our civil law that the presumption of innocence, which is always the sheet anchor of the defense in any case, is a necessary shield and protection to the accused, in no instance will apply in a trial before a military tribunal. Does not the Senator agree with me that that is the distinction practically between civil and military tribunals?

Mr. LODGE. I think that distinction is probably sound.

Mr. FALL. Then is it not a fact, if I am not trespassing upon the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. Not at all.

Mr. FALL. Is it not a fact that, possibly because none of us here, or very few of us, have ever dealt with public affairs during a time of war, even those of us who are most determined to assist in every possible way in carrying this war to what we conceive to be its legitimate conclusion, being influenced by the fact that we have been legislating and considering matters during the "piping times of peace," while recognizing that we are at war, can not bring our minds to grasp the fact that the people of the United States are to-day in war and that the distinctions that we have had in mind, the hairsplitting—I will again use that term—definitions of words applicable to penal statutes and thrown around penal statutes for the defense of the accused do not apply to this present condition when the object of legislation of this kind is to enable us to carry this war to a successful conclusion?

Mr. LODGE. Well, if in any way we can get the class of crimes which I have in mind and the spies who are carrying information before military tribunals, the Senator from New Mexico will not find me making any trouble about hairsplitting definitions. One reason that I favor military tribunals for crimes of that kind is that they are prompt, and yet the accused can be represented by counsel and can know the charge against him.

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. It is a prompt procedure, and a great deal of delay is avoided; but I should think nobody would think of putting the offenses involved in this bill before a military tribunal.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will allow me, I think inevitably, if you do not put them in the hands of the courts——

Mr. LODGE. That is what we are proposing to do.

Mr. FALL. But if you do not put them in the hands of the courts, and put them there in such a way that people will believe that justice will be meted out, if Senators are so insistent upon still throwing around the accused the protective language which will enable him simply to throw the burden upon the prosecution to prove his intent, although the effect of his language may be most disastrous—if insistence upon shielding the accused by placing upon the prosecution in these cases the burden of proving intent is successful, you will try these cases either by a military tribunal or Judge Lynch will preside over the court. To me there is no other conclusion, and I have been insistent—trespassing further upon the Senator's time—from the introduction of the original so-called espionage bill, upon one line of legislative procedure, which is that authority should be vested in the tribunals of the United States to try certain cases where in times of peace they had no jurisdiction under our ordinary civil law, for the very purpose of attempting to carry along with us in our own country here through this war the jurisdiction of the civil tribunals, the constitutional courts, and those legislative courts formed under the Constitution; that all crimes might be tried before those courts; and that we might not be compelled to invoke the military courts. That has been my purpose——

Mr. LODGE. I understand.

Mr. FALL. And it is yet my purpose; but I say to the Senator very frankly that if the statutes which we have attempted to enact fail, as they have failed, under decisions of the courts such as were read at the request of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], if guilty persons can not be punished under such statutes because of legal technicalities, the people of the United States will see that they are punished in some way, and the efforts of the Senator from Massachusetts and myself to keep open the civil tribunals, to afford to all accused the right to the writ of habeas corpus, the right of trial by jury, the right to be confronted with witnesses, to have the accusation read, and the accusation itself founded upon indictment or upon affidavit or upon information alleging the crime committed will be of no avail.

If all those things can be carried along with us through this war, then some of us will be perfectly satisfied with the result of our labors; but if the statutes of Congress fail, as they have failed invariably, because of the very fact, as in the case of the espionage bill itself, in my judgment, that they are so emasculated by hypercritical amendments and hairsplitting definitions that within the legislation itself defining the offense there is carried such a defense to the accused as to render it practically impossible for the United States Government or the State authorities to convict him of any crime or offense whatsoever, then, I say to the Senator—and I think the Senator will agree with me—that the military tribunals inevitably will be compelled to deal with the situation or the people will take the law into their own hands.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this bill does not deal with any crimes or any offenses which I should think for a moment of suggesting to place before a military tribunal; but it seems to me the Senator from New Mexico wants to keep the jurisdiction of all offenses in civil tribunals—in which desire I very largely sympathize—but he also wants to make the civil tribunals as much like military tribunals as he can. I think we had better keep them separate. As to the men who are committing crimes and who are genuine spies, I think a military tribunal is the only fit place for them.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I thought there was a provision in the Articles of War which reached the class of individuals mentioned a while ago by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I find that is true. I find that article 82 of the Articles of War provides:

ART. 82. Spies: Any person who in time of war shall be found lurking or acting as a spy in or about any of the fortifications, posts, quarters, or encampments of any of the armies of the United States, or elsewhere, shall be tried by a general court-martial or by a military commission, and shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.

Articles 46, 47, and 48 provide as follows:

ART. 46. Approval and execution of sentence: No sentence of a court-martial shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by the officer appointing the court or by the officer commanding for the time being.

ART. 47. Powers incident to power to approve: The power to approve the sentence of a court-martial shall be held to include:

"(a) The power to approve or disapprove a finding and to approve only so much of a finding of guilty of a particular offense as involves a finding of guilty of a lesser included offense when, in the opinion of the authority having power to approve, the evidence of record requires a finding of only the lesser degree of guilt; and

"(b) The power to approve or disapprove the whole or any part of the sentence."

ART. 48. Confirmation; when required: In addition to the approval required by article 46, confirmation by the President is required in the following cases before the sentence of a court-martial is carried into execution, namely:

"(a) Any sentence respecting a general officer;

"(b) Any sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer, except that in time of war a sentence extending to the dismissal of an officer below the grade of brigadier general may be carried into execution upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the territorial department or division;

"(c) Any sentence extending to the suspension or dismissal of a cadet; and

"(d) Any sentence of death, except in the cases of persons convicted in time of war of murder, rape, mutiny, desertion, or as spies; and in such excepted cases a sentence of death may be carried into execution upon confirmation by the commanding general of the Army in the field or by the commanding general of the territorial department or division.

"When the authority competent to confirm the sentence has already acted as the approving authority no additional confirmation by him is necessary."

So that it appears that we have recourse now to the Articles of War to punish the class of offenders mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, is correct in the strict sense of the term. In any military district or upon a military reservation or within five miles of a cantonment, or any place of that kind, which is purely under military rule, and where military authority is supreme there the Articles of War apply, but the Senator certainly does not mean that the eighty-second article of war, which he has just read—the courts have passed upon the proposition too often for there to be any doubt about it—suspends the writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do, so far as the State courts are concerned.

Mr. FALL. In the United States to-day?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. FALL. Then all legislation here of this character is entirely unnecessary; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Articles of War only cover the case of spies outside of those connected with the military service.

Mr. FALL. No; it does not make any difference, Mr. President. The Articles of War govern the Army and the conduct of civilians in connection with the Army in any military zone.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I beg to differ from the Senator. The articles speak for themselves. They define who shall come within their provisions; they specify those who are within the military service, camp followers, and others.

Mr. FALL. Precisely.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And then go ahead and, in article 82, specify spies as coming within the jurisdiction of military tribunals.

Mr. FALL. Certainly. There is no difference between the Senator and myself except the question of jurisdiction; that is all.

Mr. BORAH. It applies if the spy is in a military district.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I say that a spy anywhere in the United States is in a military district? He may not be near a fortification or a post or a cantonment, but he is a spy just the same; and if he is within a cantonment or near a cantonment or near a post or fortification he is subject to the jurisdiction of a military court.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have a case in mind which illustrates what I mean. I have seen a report in the newspapers that a man—I think he was an Austrian or a German—in one of our factories, which was under military supervision and which was making shells, was found to be putting in short fuses, so that the shells would not explode when they landed; in fact, destroying their usefulness. He was caught in the act, was remanded to the civil tribunals, and that is the last I have heard of the case. I do not know what has become of him. A man like that, working on military supplies in a factory over which the Government has supervision, I think, ought to go before a court-martial and be tried there quickly and disposed of there quickly; but such cases go to the civil courts, or, apparently, the case to which I referred to went to the civil courts.

This bill, however, to come back to it, does not touch the cases of the dangerous criminal agents and the spies; and the danger of it is that it will be used, if loosely drawn, to suppress free and legitimate discussion by the great mass of the loyal people of this country. That is not desirable, from my viewpoint.

Now, Mr. President, to go on with the bill, in line 18, on page 3——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator leaves line 5, where he suggested that some other word than the word "inflame" should be used, as "inflame" is an uncommon word and has probably not been construed by the courts, I would suggest that there be used in place of the word "inflame" the words "urge or provoke," so as to read: "Calculated to incite, urge, or provoke resistance." Those are the statutory words commonly used.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; something of that kind, I think, is better than the word "inflame," which certainly is not a common statutory word.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before the Senator proceeds to line 18, I want to ask him if he does not think it would be well to strike out, in lines 13 and 14, the words "with intent by such curtailment of the production of things necessary in the prosecution of the war"; in other words, ought not the urging of the curtailment of the prosecution of things necessary in the prosecution of the war to be prohibited without being compelled to show further that it was done with the intention to hinder?

Mr. LODGE. My attention has not heretofore been called to that; but I am disposed to agree with the Senator that that is needless, and it is better to make it simple.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it is not only needless——

Mr. LODGE. I think it might be harmful.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it would be very harmful, and I hope the Senator from Montana will consider that, as I understand this provision of the bill is his suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Upon the reflection that I have been able to give it, I should think it would be inadvisable. I want to make the statute as strong as I can consistently; but I can very readily conceive how it might be grossly abused if that clause were, as a matter of fact, taken out. One might dissuade his neighbor from sowing wheat, and urge, for instance, that flax is a much more profitable crop and one that is equally necessary for the conduct of the war. He might be charged, then, with urging the curtailment of the production of wheat, a necessity of the war, but he does not do it at all to injure the United States. I fear that the bill would be open to very just criticism if that particular clause were eliminated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What I fear is that if it remains in the bill we will not stop any of the incitement to curtail production.

Mr. WALSH. I am not unmindful of the difficulty of the situation suggested by the Senator from Washington; and yet I should feel that the bill would be open to much of the criticism that has, I think undeservedly, been directed against it in other respects if those words were not left in.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the words "necessary or essential" are open to a great deal of possible discussion.

In line 17 there occurs this language:

By word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies.

Who are the allies of the German Empire—I am speaking of her legal allies? Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey. We are not at war with Turkey and Bulgaria. I think we ought to be; but, as a matter of fact, we are not at war with them. Yet we have a bill here that punishes a man who says anything favorable to a country with which we are not at war. It seems to me that it might be improved by some rewording, because that presents one of those difficulties to which the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has alluded in respect to hairsplitting technicalities.

Mr. NELSON. To what does the Senator refer?

Mr. LODGE. I refer to the language "the German Empire or its allies."

Then we come to the last clause; and I must say it seems to me it would be better if it read "oppose the United States." I think the word "cause" is another loose word, and that it is much simpler to say "oppose the United States"; and that will cover everything.

Mr. President, some time ago I presented an amendment, which I am now going to move. I do not know whether there is any amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the Senator from Massachusetts goes to the amendment that he intends to offer, I want to call his attention to one of the things that has bothered me with respect to the bill. I am generally very much in favor of it.

Mr. LODGE. So am I.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree to the substitution of the word "intended" for the word "calculated," as I have already said, and I had hoped that while the Senator from Massachusetts, with his critical judgment respecting the use of words, was considering lines 4 and 5, he would refer to the word "resistance" and give us the benefit of his opinion with regard to the proper meaning of that word. The provision is—

Or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language—

I will read it now as I would have it—intended to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority.

What is "resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority"? Is the word "resistance" the equivalent or the synonym in this case of the word "disobedience"? If it covers mere disobedience to the law, its propriety could very well be doubted; but if it means something other than mere failure to obey the law, then its employment may be very wise. I look upon the word as meaning or requiring something more than mere failure to comply with a law or a lawful order. Our statutes already attach penalties for failure to comply with their provisions or with orders which were made under them. I am led, therefore, to ask the Senator what, in his opinion, is the real meaning of the word "resistance"?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should not think it covered mere disobedience; for example, if Mr. Garfield commanded the people of this country not to fill their bins with coal—not to "hoard" it, as he called it a year ago—or to fill their bins, as he now commands them, I do not think a failure in either case could be interpreted as resistance to the law. "Resistance to the law," as I read it, means resistance to the execution of the law.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call the attention of Senators to section 62 of the Penal Code, which gives an illustration of such language.

Whoever shall forcibly assault, resist—

I call attention to the word "resist"— oppose, prevent, impede, or interfere with any officer or employee of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture in the execution of his duties, or on account of the execution of his duties, shall be fined—

And so forth.

There the word "resist" is used and, I think, it is used in the sense of impeding an officer in the performance of his duties.

Mr. LODGE. As I have said, resisting the execution of the law——

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I think that is the sense in which it is used here.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suspect that the word "resist" in that statute is qualified by the word "forcibly."

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. LODGE. No; that only qualifies one word.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will ask the Senator to read it again.

Mr. NELSON. It does not qualify the word "resist"; there is a comma after the word "assault"—

Whoever shall forcibly assault—

Then there is a comma, and it proceeds—resist, oppose, prevent, impede, or interfere—

The word "resist" is not qualified.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota what he understands by the word "resistance"? Is it mere failure to obey?

Mr. NELSON. No; I do not think it is mere failure to obey.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, what is it, then?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me, I will read the general statute with regard to resistance to an officer.

Mr. CUMMINS. To an officer?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir. It is as follows:

Whoever shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer of the United States, or other person duly authorized, in serving or attempting to serve or execute any mesne process or warrant, or any rule or order, or any other legal or judicial writ or process of any court of the United States or United States commissioner, or shall assault, beat, or wound any officer or other person duly authorized, knowing him to be such officer, or other persons so duly authorized, in serving or executing any such writ, rule, order, process, * * * shall be fined—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course that means, as I said in the case of the statute read by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], resistance to the execution of an order of the court, or of the law.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not mean a mere failure to obey a law, or an order which may be issued by some lawful authority.

Mr. STERLING. A failure to obey a subpœna, for example, would not be resistance to the order of the court.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I wanted it to be perfectly clear, at any rate, when I voted for the statute, that I did not vote for it with the understanding that the mere suggestion of a failure to obey the law should visit upon one the extreme penalties that are here provided.

Mr. LODGE. It is my opinion that the word "resistance" is usually interpreted to mean and conveys the idea of resistance to the execution of a law.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I think the two words that precede "resistance" indicate that it can not be the mere failure to obey the law. The words are, "calculated to incite or inflame resistance." That means that somebody outside is acting or inciting. The two words there have different shades of meaning. The word "incite" implies, among other meanings, personal solicitation, while the word "inflame" does not imply that. For instance, a man makes a harangue or speech before a mob, before a crowd, encouraging them to disobedience. That is inflaming them. But if a man, by personal solicitation in any form, does the same thing, that comes under the head of "inciting." So I think the two terms cover different shades of meaning.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LEWIS. I beg pardon. I was about to tender an amendment, and I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. LODGE. No; I have not, yet. I have been trying to regain it.

If I may say one word more before I pass to the little amendment I am going to offer, I think it would be wise, after "German Empire," in line 18, to leave out "or its allies." If you say "the cause of the German Empire," you cover whatever is done in her favor, whether it is done in Turkey or Bulgaria or Russia or Finland or anywhere else. Germany is sending troops at this moment to Finland. I think the more general you make it, the better; but if you leave in the word "allies" you at once embarrass yourself with the fact that we have not declared war on Turkey and Bulgaria, as we ought to have done.

Mr. President, the amendment I want to offer was read from the desk this morning. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has offered an amendment repealing the clause of the espionage bill which gives to the Postmaster General, without any restriction whatever, the power to shut out from the mails practically any newspaper, periodical, or publication that he does not happen to like.

I think that is a very dangerous power to be conferred on one man. It is not only inferior to the civil tribunals, but I think there is a less chance of justice than in a court-martial. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Idaho with the greatest pleasure, but I do believe that it is well within the power of Congress to decide what shall be excluded from the mails.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I dare say the Senator from Massachusetts will recall that when the bill was originally under consideration in the month of June last, that particular provision was the subject of very extensive discussion; and attention was then called to the fact that we have already in times of prosperous peace conferred upon the Postmaster General the power to exclude from the mails publications that are deemed inimical to the public interest.

Mr. LODGE. The peace power is very carefully limited. It is confined to obscene publications and other things that are perfectly capable of definition. The other was very much broader. But if we want to exclude from the mails, let us do it by law here, and determine ourselves what we want excluded.

It is in that view that I offer this amendment:

The use of the mails shall not be permitted to any newspaper, magazine, or periodical, circular, or pamphlet which is printed in whole or in part in the German language.

Those circulars, pamphlets, and newspapers are the nests in which all of these treasonable and injurious utterances are hatched. I do not say that applies to them all, of course, but it applies to a great many. They are not prevented from publishing. They can publish in English and supply it to their constituency perfectly well. The language of the United States is English; and I think in time of war we had better circulate through the mails the language of the United States, and not the language of our enemies.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LODGE. I yield; yes.

Mr. KING. What I am about to say is scarcely a question. I was just about to observe to the Senator that, speaking for myself, I would prefer to see the first section of the bill which is now under consideration defeated, and not passed, than to have adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho and which the Senator from Massachusetts has just indorsed. I know from investigation that that section has proven a powerful weapon and a very valuable weapon in the hands of the Government in preventing this wicked and criminal propaganda that has been carried on by the I. W. W.'s and other traitors in this country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this bill is designed to meet that very propaganda and that very language and those very publications, and let them go to the courts, and not leave them to be dealt with by a Cabinet officer.

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator that in a number of instances—several scores, I am told—they have resorted to the courts, and in every single instance the action of the Postmaster General has been supported. He has not exercised in an arbitrary or a capricious way the power which we have given him.

Mr. LODGE. I am not attacking the Postmaster General, or the way in which he has exercised his authority. I am putting the proposition on the broad ground that it is too great a power to be intrusted to one man. I would a great deal rather trust it to a court-martial.

Mr. KING. I think it would be a very great mistake in time of war, such as this is, to deny to some agency of the Government the power to prevent treasonable, disloyal, anarchistic, or seditious publications from being transmitted through the mails, especially where, as the law now provides, there is a remedy by appeal to the court.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. I yield. I yield the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to suggest to the Senator before he yields the floor that the good that the Senator from Utah believes has been accomplished, even conceding it to be true, still leaves in the power that to my mind is a greater danger than what he suppresses as the law now stands, and that is the power to coerce newspapers that he does not suppress; that the indirect danger is greater than the direct danger.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move the amendment which I send to the desk, and which I have already read.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, with the purpose of having it read and printed, and calling it up later. It is rather an important amendment, and I will ask the attention of the Senate to it, as I should like to have the judgment of the Senators upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Illinois proposes the following amendment:

SECTION —. Whenever any person in the United States or in any Territory or country under the jurisdiction of or administered by the United States, who, being a citizen of the United States or exercising and enjoying the rights and privileges of a citizen of the United States, shall by conduct, acts, or declaration, show that such person is a disloyal citizen of the United States and unworthy of citizenship of the United States, or of enjoying the rights and privileges of a citizen of the United States, such fact, when established by procedure provided in this bill, shall forfeit his citizenship in the United States and all rights, privileges, and emoluments that go therewith, and shall forfeit all right to become a citizen of the United States and enjoyment of all privileges that attend, enter upon, and follow the becoming a citizen of the United States.

SEC. —. Any person described in the foregoing section who shall, in the manner provided in this act, have been proven to be a disloyal citizen and unworthy of the citizenship of the United States shall, by the judgment condemning such citizen to forfeit the said citizenship, have all property held under the laws of the United States and enjoyed under the protection of the laws of the United States forfeited and returned to the United States, to be taken by the United States under proper judgment and decree and appropriated for uses for the defense by the United States and for the protection of the United States against all foes that are at war with and against the United States.

SEC. —. Any person or persons who may have knowledge of any acts or conduct or declarations of any person named in this law, showing such person or persons to be unworthy of the citizenship of the United States, shall have the right to make complaint before any court having jurisdiction to grant citizenship to any person, and said court upon said complaint shall have process served upon the person or persons complained of, to be answered in the form of the proceeding in court of the condemnation of property, and issue upon the said cause be duly entered in such form of pleading as is provided in the practice within the particular State or District where the action is brought. The cause shall be heard before a jury after the order and manner of causes heard before a jury involving the rights of persons and property as prescribed for civil procedure in matters in which juries are provided by the law of the State or district where the action is brought. The verdict of the jury shall state the finding of the jury as to the matter of disloyalty, and also shall state whether there shall be forfeit of property or not, as in each case may be by the circumstances to the jury justified.

SEC. —. That hereafter, following the declaration by court or jury of disloyalty and the withdrawal of citizenship from any person or persons or of property, it shall be in the power of any court having jurisdiction to grant citizenship, to restore citizenship, and make order of restoration of property or the value thereof, upon the showing to the court through the ordinary legal procedure, by petition under the form of practice in equity, that the said person has become loyal and worthy to be restored to citizenship. That upon the decree of restoration the said person shall be at once restored to all privileges and immunities, rights, and honors, that attend and follow citizenship in the United States of America, as though to the full extent he had no judgment or forfeiture rendered against him.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I merely ask that the amendment be now printed and lie upon the table, as I shall move its adoption at the proper time.

Mr. LODGE. I was about to ask the Senator to have it printed. It is a long and very important amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the discussion of this bill has very naturally assumed a very broad range, and the amendments which have been offered from time to time, I think, need but one more to demonstrate how far we are at sea from that sort of legislation which it is within our power to enact. If some Senator will now introduce another amendment abolishing the right of trial by jury, I am inclined to think that the bill as it now stands will be reasonably perfect.

The last proposed amendment reads to me like a bill of attainder, and I am inclined to think that it would be so construed as to property and as to individual rights if it should be enacted into law and become the subject of judicial construction.

Mr. President, I want to cast my vote for a bill which will accomplish the object which the Judiciary Committee had in view when they reported the measure to the Senate by a practically unanimous vote. I do not desire, in the effort to accomplish that purpose, to go so far as to enact a measure so radical and far-reaching as to virtually defeat itself. It is the history of all drastic penal legislation that when it becomes too extreme it is incapable of enforcement. The courts, by a liberal construction or the reverse, and the juries having the power to pass upon the facts, will refuse to effectuate the purposes of a statute so radical in its character as to meet with their disapproval.

There was a time in the common law of England when the pettiest of offenses were punished by death. I think the larceny of a shilling was such an offense. The juries, by an almost constant system of conduct, and the judges, by winking as far as they could at that conduct, very frequently, perhaps in a majority of cases where grand larceny had been committed, accepted testimony which indicated the value of the property to be less than the minimum amount, which, upon conviction, was followed by execution or punished capitally.

That, Mr. President, was not only a practice justified by the humane instincts of an enlightened community, but it was the application of the principles of justice, as far as they could be applied, in view of an express law too rigid in its penalties and its provisions to receive the sanction of public opinion.

Mr. President, there is no question but that the use of language, written or spoken, in the hands of a capable individual, can create much mischief, can undermine the cause of the Nation to some degree, and can produce injurious consequences of a far-reaching character. That is obvious not only because of our present experiences but we are so told by the history of nations. To the extent to which that mischief can be restricted and punished in times like these, legislation is necessary. To the extent that it can not be restricted and punished by legislation, no matter how drastic it may be, we should not go.

Of course it would be perfectly legitimate for me to be asked at this point to point out the limit which defines proper and constitutional legislation from that which is improper and unconstitutional. Frankly I can not do it. I think no man can; and that suggests the difficulty with which the committee were confronted in their efforts to phrase something adequate to the exigency. What they have produced here is doubtless as nearly perfect as can be phrased in language, but in my judgment it is not such language as we should crystallize into a statute at this time or at any other time.

I took occasion yesterday to call attention to the absence of an element which is absolutely inseparable from crime, and without which, no matter how grave the act, there can be no crime. I refer, of course, to the intent with which an act may be committed. I know of no exception to the fundamental proposition that acts, to be criminal, must be willful or deliberate, except those which indicate a carelessness, a rashness, a disregard for the rights of others, so obvious as to become the equivalent of a willful intent.

The Senator from Washington a few moments ago suggested that where the term does appear it should be eliminated, lest the object of the statute should be defeated by its inclusion. Mr. President, I think the Senator upon reflection will admit the very obvious wisdom of the reply of the Senator from Montana with regard to that suggestion. We can not afford, Mr. President, and at this time of all times we can least afford, to break down or disregard so fundamental a safeguard in the enactment of criminal legislation as the element of intent. Otherwise, Mr. President, the innocent and the guilty will alike be included within the recitals of this criminal statute. Otherwise we make no distinction whatever between the man who deliberately commits an offense and the man who innocently commits an act which, if it were intended, would constitute the offense.

Hence, I shall move at the proper time on line 18, page 2, between the last two words of the line, to insert the word "willfully," and to insert the same word on line 4, page 3, between the words "shall" and "utter," and between the words "shall" and "display," on line 7, of page 3, and also between the words "shall" and "advocate," in line 14, so that the acts which are to be prohibited shall constitute offenses when they shall have been performed willfully or with deliberate intent; and I do not believe, Mr. President, that any court in this country will sustain an act from which those words or their equivalents are absent.

If they do sustain it, they will import into the law the old common-law element of intent, and wherever it does not appear that the act complained of was so committed they will instruct the jury accordingly. But it seems to me to be a reflection upon the experience of the Congress and upon the wisdom of its Members to pass a bill of this sort, which does not contain that essential element of criminal intent.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MYERS. Can any man utter any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States without intending to speak the words which pass his lips?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, no. When a man speaks a word he intends to speak it; but he may not intend willfully to slander his Government in speaking it. I got a letter yesterday morning from a private soldier, who complained very bitterly because he had not received his pay. His contention was that those dependent upon him were suffering because he had not received his pay, and he expressed his opinion of the Government of the United States in language far more forcible than elegant. Now, that soldier did not mean to defame his Government. He did not mean to speak words of disloyalty. In his resentment at what he considered unjust treatment he expressed himself to me as I have stated. There is an instance, Mr. President, in which the boy would be punished, sent to the penitentiary for a term of years or fined far beyond his means, perhaps, if we are going to enact this statute in the precise terms in which it was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Now, let me call attention to another word which seems to me, Mr. President, to carry this law far beyond the intentions of its framers, and certainly far beyond the legitimate purpose of the act. I allude to the word "defend"—

> Whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated—

Mr. President, John Doe may be indicted for seditious utterances in violation of this act. My friend the Senator from Montana may be employed to defend him, and of course if he is so employed he will endeavor to the best of his ability to acquit his client; but if, in so doing, he defends the act, however necessary and legitimate it may be to the purposes of the defense, he in turn may be indicted and punished, together with his client, for defending that client.

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be, Mr. President, that that is a far-fetched illustration, but certainly it is within, and far within, the opinions which I have heard expressed here to-day as to what this statute ought to be and as to what they intend it shall be.

I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I was just about to ask the Senator in substance what he has stated, that it might be a far-fetched illustration; but does not the Senator think that the court would exclude from the operation of a statute the defense made by an attorney in behalf of his client?

Mr. THOMAS. I think a court would; but why should we enact here a statute which would make it necessary for a court to do so?

Mr. STERLING. It would be a violation of his constitutional right, of course, if he was deprived of his defense.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is true; and yet one Senator has said that unless we pass this law and make it drastic enough the military authorities will assume jurisdiction of these cases and punish them according to military codes. That, with all due respect to my distinguished friend, for whose legal ability

I have the highest opinion, was, to my mind, one of the most astonishing utterances that I have heard in the course of this debate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I had an idea of going on with the bill until it was completed, but some Senators have dinner engagements, and so on. I wonder if I could not get unanimous consent to consider the bill to-morrow, and that at not later than 5 o'clock to-morrow afternoon we shall agree to vote on it. I suggest that the Secretary read the agreement I propose, and then if anyone here objects that will be the end of it.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to yield for the purpose of submitting that proposition because I understand it would require a call of the roll under the rule.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will just present it, and if anyone objects it will go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum has to be developed. Otherwise there can be no unanimous-consent agreement as to the final passage of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will let the Senator from Colorado proceed, and I shall present the agreement after he gets through.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course the failure of legislation under the civil law for the regulation of crime even in times of war could not transfer jurisdiction to military tribunals under our form of government; nor, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] well suggested, can any crime under the Constitution of the United States be punishable except by the verdict of a jury, unless it was committed by those directly within the jurisdiction of the military or naval authority. So, whether we enact this statute or not, there can be no assumption of power, except possibly through the declaration of martial law in districts that are said to be in insurrection, to stretch their authority and assume jurisdiction of a solitary offense here to be created or anything like it. That has been the law ever since the Milligan case.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield in just a moment. I have had occasion once or twice to refer to the Milligan case, and now refer to it as one of the great landmarks in the judicial history of the United States. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I simply want to say, in view of the fact that the Senator apparently had reference to something I said, I did not mean for one moment to say that if we failed to enact legislation of this kind the military authority would extend all over the United States. In fact, I deny that absolutely.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the Senator to say—and, of course, if I misunderstood him I must apologize—that unless legislation of this sort was adopted, these offenses would go to a tribunal that would not only not quibble upon the meaning of words, but which would deny to the defendant those presumptions which exist for his protection at common law.

Mr. FALL. I would not have the Senator for a moment think I meant that military law would go of its own accord. What I meant to say was that to save this Government and this country of ours the President of the United States would be justified in doing exactly what Abraham Lincoln did in declaring a state of revolution to exist while possibly the State itself was not in revolution. The military law would then apply.

Mr. THOMAS. I, of course, accept the Senator's correction, and I am sorry I misunderstood him; but, Mr. President, the Executive of the Nation is powerless to clothe military tribunals with jurisdiction over criminal offenses not committed by military people. Of course, he may suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and within the limits of that suspension, there being no law except military law, those committing offenses may be arrested, imprisoned, probably shot; but in every instance where the courts are open the mere declaration of martial law does not close them. In every case where the courts are open the accused has a right to appeal to the civil tribunals of the country, and in the past that appeal has not been made in vain, to my knowledge. However, sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. Let us not enact measures now which may be too broad in their aim and consequently too sweeping in their consequences because of an apprehension that unless we be swift about this legislation the Executive may interfere and put the country under the edict of martial law.

I think, Mr. President, the suggestions which I have made with regard to the amendments here should be adopted. I will not promise now to vote for this measure even if they are adopted, for in the absence of clear language imputing willful intent to a citizen who may be guilty of a violation of these provisions I could not under my construction of my oath of office here vote for the passage of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield to me, that I may present two amendments?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish just to offer, so that they may go into the RECORD, two amendments. On line 22, page 2, strike out the words "soldiers or sailors" and insert "Army and Navy"; and on page 3, line 5, at the close of the line, add before the word "any" the words "legal order of any," so that it will read:

To incite or inflame resistance to any legal order of any duly constituted Federal or State authority—

And so forth.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question about that proposed amendment. Suppose an officer of the United States or of a State government goes to arrest a man who is doing something forbidden by this bill after it is enacted into a law, and the man about to be arrested resists, where would the legal order be?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This refers to the criticism——

Mr. MYERS. The officer sees that a man is violating this law and, without any warrant, proceeds to arrest him, and the man resists. Where is the legal order?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has no reference to that case at all. The right of arrest exists, under certain circumstances, everywhere, without indictment and without a warrant. This is the paragraph which refers to the criticism——

Mr. MYERS. I will amplify my question. Suppose that anyone uses language calculated——

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not yield for the amendments to be debated. I yielded to the Senator to offer his amendments, and they can be debated later.

I now propose the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Saturday, April 6, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States," etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say if this is agreed to I shall ask the Senate to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, which will give from 11 to 5 o'clock to debate the bill and all amendments to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Surely, we will have time to get through with it if we can take the ordinary adjournment until 11 o'clock. The Senator knows more about the probable talk upon it than I do. I should be glad to give unanimous consent to vote not later than 5; but then, as to an adjournment, I want to bring up to-morrow, not for any length of time, a very important bill. I want to introduce a bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Could not the Senator wait until Monday?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I want to introduce it to-morrow.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will agree to let the Senator introduce his bill at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection from any Senator present to the proposed agreement?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course I am going to vote for this bill and I am in favor of it, with a few amendments. I know there are several Senators who are opposed to it, and in good faith. While I share the desire of the Senator from North Carolina to pass the bill, and pass it speedily, and appreciate the necessity of speedy action, I am inclined to think that it might not be wise to urge the proposed agreement at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going to urge it, and if anybody wants to object let him object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can we not at least give unanimous consent to dispose of it during the calendar day to-morrow? And if we have to sit a little later than 5, let us stay and dispose of it. I am perfectly in accord with the desire to complete the bill.

Mr. KING. I am not going to object, but I want full opportunity for those who desire to discuss it to have that opportunity.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill has been debated. It is a very short bill, but it is an important bill, and there have been fine speeches made upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Utah does not object?

Mr. KING. I do not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Sterling
Cummins	King	Pittman	Stone
Curtis	Kirby	Pomerene	Swanson
Fall	Lewis	Robinson	Thomas
France	Lodge	Sheppard	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Martin	Shields	Underwood
Gore	Myers	Smith, Ariz.	Vardaman
Hale	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Weeks

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. NEW, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. TILLMAN, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Members.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. REED, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. COLT, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. NELSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] and also the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] are detained on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary now read the proposal for a unanimous-consent agreement as to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the legislative day of Saturday, April 6, 1918, the Senate will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States," etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. of April 6 no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. STONE. What is the hour fixed for a vote?

Mr. CUMMINS. No hour is fixed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No hour is fixed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I suggest that the hour of 1 o'clock be changed to 2 o'clock. It seems to me that three hours should be allowed for speeches.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to vote on the principal amendments which may be offered to this bill before a unanimous-consent agreement of this character is had. The time fixed is very short. The fact that it is now within 25 minutes of the ordinary hour of adjournment, and that the Senate will probably not convene until 12 o'clock to-morrow——

Mr. OVERMAN. I have given notice that I would ask the Senate to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. REED. That only adds an hour.

Mr. OVERMAN. But there will be no morning hour, and the whole day will be devoted to the bill.

Mr. REED. That interferes with committee work, which is crowding constantly for attention.

I think that the Senator ought not to ask for a vote upon this bill at so early a date. I think we ought to vote upon the principal amendments before debate is limited. This proposed unanimous-consent agreement is almost equivalent to asking for 10-minute debate, beginning at the present time.

Mr. OVERMAN. There will be three hours for debate, if the Senate meets at 11 o'clock.

Mr. REED. The bill is a very important one. It is a bill with the spirit of which, I think, every man in the Senate is in accord. It is a bill which I believe every man in the Senate who has considered the matter thinks goes further than it ought to go, and I see no reason in the world for any such haste as is involved in the proposed agreement. I do not think the Senator ought to ask it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, we will let it run into Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday of next week.

Mr. REED. Suppose that we really go on until Monday or Tuesday of next week, what would be the harm? Here is a bill that involves questions that are almost vital in their importance; it is a bill that many patriotic men fear will work injury in some respects. I am not going to call any names, but I talked to a Senator who was largely instrumental in helping to draft this bill, and, as I understood him, he himself thought that the matter ought to be carefully reviewed. That is my opinion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator suggest a time?

Mr. REED. I do not think we have reached a stage to suggest a time; I think we ought to vote upon the principal amendments that may be offered to this bill. Then we will know what the measure is really to be, and when we come to give our consent to a final vote we will give it in the light of that situation; but if the amendments are brought up, as they ordinarily are brought up, under unanimous-consent agreements of this character when the debate is limited to 10 minutes, it frequently happens that questions receive but very meager consideration. If we can dispose of the principal amendments by going on with the bill to-morrow, I have no doubt that we will very speedily reach a time when we can vote. There has been no delay of this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we have had about all the debate that is likely to take place on the main amendments in connection with the speeches which have been made to-day. There are a few Senators who desire to speak to-morrow, but only a few. I have talked with the leader of the opposition, and he is perfectly willing that this course be taken. I refer to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. REED. I do not number myself in the opposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I am not referring to the Senator; I refer to the Senator from Georgia, who is willing to vote at 4 o'clock to-morrow. Now, we propose to go further and provide for a vote on the legislative day.

Mr. REED. I simply want to have the principal amendments to this bill disposed of before we are asked to proceed under a 10-minute limitation on debate. I do not think any amendment ordinarily receives proper consideration under those circumstances, and I think this is a matter that ought to be carefully thought out.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has not been here—I know he had business elsewhere, and I am not criticizing him—but the principal speeches have been made in the five hours' debate to-day on the main amendments to the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is true that there have been one or two speeches made, but that is not the point I am making. Amendments will be offered to this bill, and amendments when offered ought to be properly discussed. If there had been a great consumption of time on this bill the necessity for a unanimous-consent agreement might be apparent, but I see no necessity for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would not insist on it if it were not for the fact that expedition is necessary.

Mr. REED. There has not been any disposition on the part of anybody to delay action; and what reason is there why we can not go on in the ordinary way with the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator—he was probably not here—that I have already stated that I had an urgent message which came down from the Attorney General, urging that this bill be passed to-day.

Mr. REED. Why?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because he said the sale of the bonds was to commence on Monday next, and he would like to have the bill passed before the sale began. He said that so far as he was concerned, rather than to see this bill not passed he was willing to see those amendments go out of the bill. He was so anxious to have the bill passed that he asked me to do that; but I could not afford to do it, because the committee had urged that these amendments be made. So far as he is concerned, rather than not have this bill passed, he will just limit it to the bond sale; but I could not listen to that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we hear some very strange and very peculiar reasons offered for sudden action by the Congress, but about as strange a one as I have heard is the one just offered. There is not a man in this Chamber who does not know that the sale of the bonds does not depend upon the passage of this bill. Why, Mr. President, if the sale of the bonds that we are about to offer to the American people depends upon the passage of a bill of this character, we are already defeated in this war.

I hear Senators about me speak about people denouncing the sale of these bonds. I will venture the assertion that there will not be found in the United States a single man of any prominence or influence who will say one word against the sale of these bonds. There will be, perhaps, some criminal, some crank, some Bolshevik, who will mouth a little bit about them; and every time he opens his foul lips to say anything against the sale of these bonds he will only increase the market. It is utter nonsense to talk about the sale of the bonds depending upon the passage of a bill of this character. It is not true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a formal objection. I am asking the Senator to go on with this matter. Let us take up these amendments and pass upon them in an orderly way. Nobody is going to be hurt. We all want to enact a proper statute; but do not let us be rushed into a hasty agreement on the ground that otherwise the bonds will not sell.

I expect to go out and give some of my time to helping persuade people to buy these bonds, and I expect to do as I did on the other bond issue—to bankrupt myself temporarily and borrow money to buy bonds. Almost everybody else in the United States is going to do the same thing; but the sale of the bonds does not depend upon the enactment of this statute.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the sale of the bonds depended upon the enactment of this bill, we would not place the loan at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will not accede to my request, which I think is reasonable, I am going to object to unanimous consent to a vote at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That disposes of the matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is not insistent in regard to going on with the amendments this afternoon?

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to go right along with them, and after the principal amendments are disposed of I would just as soon come to a vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us vote on the amendments, then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "statements" to insert "or say or do anything except by way of bona fide and not disloyal advice to an investor or investors."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 12, after the word "cause," to insert "or incite or attempt to incite."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 15, after the word "obstruct," to insert "or discourage or willfully attempt to obstruct or discourage."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 16, after the words "United States," to strike out "to the injury of the service or of the United States," and insert "and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war, or shall display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting the word "willfully," on line 18, page 2, between the words "shall" and "utter"; also the same word on page 3, line 4, between the words "shall" and "utter"; also on line 7, between the words "shall" and "display"; also on line 14, between the words "shall" and "advocate."

Mr. BORAH. What page?

Mr. THOMAS. Page 3.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think that is putting useless verbiage in the bill. I do not see how a man can utter any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about anything without willfully speaking the words, without intending to do it, unless he did it in his sleep or while he was delirious or while he was insane. Those are the only three exceptions of which I can think. If you are going to put in the word "willfully," some highly technical judge will simply extend the meaning of the word "willfully" to more than it ought to qualify, and we shall have decisions that a man must willfully intend to defame the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States. Every qualification that you put in there is simply going to make the law harder to enforce, and going to make the spirit of it harder to carry out. I think the law ought to be as it is in the State of Montana, that a man who utters words of that character is conclusively presumed to know what he is doing and is guilty under this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment. I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kendrick	Phelan	Thomas
Borah	King	Reed	Tillman
Colt	Lewis	Robinson	Townsend
Cummins	Lodge	Shafroth	Underwood
Fall	McNary	Sheppard	Vardaman
France	Martin	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Gallinger	Nelson	Smoot
Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Swanson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have taken no part in the debate. I presume I have no right to say much; but I will ask the Senator from North Carolina to move an adjournment now. I think he will make more progress with his bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am inclined to think so. The Senator from New Hampshire, who always does his duty, had left the Chamber, and has returned to it, notwithstanding sickness in his family. Appreciating what we asked for, he returned to the Chamber under those circumstances. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 6, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 5, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everliving God our Heavenly Father, in whom all wisdom, power, and goodness are centered, we lift up our hearts in fervent prayer with the millions who are at this moment praying for the success of our allied forces, who are engaged in a most terrific battle against the barbarians who would break through all barriers and check the onward march of civilization so well begun and so far advanced.

Give, we beseech Thee, courage, strength, victory to our arms, that liberty, justice, peace, and righteousness may live, a blessing to untold generations; and all praise we will ascribe to Thee, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RATIFICATION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT BY DELAWARE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a communication from the secretary of state of Delaware announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the prohibition amendment. The communication will be filed.

HERBERT A. MEYER.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution 297, directing the Secretary of War to furnish the House the facts in reference to the issuance of a commission as captain to Herbert A. Meyer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 297.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the House, for information of the House, as soon as practicable, the facts in reference to the issuance of a commission to Herbert A. Meyer as captain in the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps; also any information as to whether the recent official statements of the War Department discontinuing the issuance of commissions in the Army of the United States to persons in civil life and to registrants under the selective-draft act of May 18, 1917, were violated in the case of Herbert A. Meyer; also a list of all commissions which have been issued in violation of such procedure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Reserving the right to object, I did not catch exactly the purpose of that resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a resolution asking the War Department for information with reference to certain appointments in the Army. The resolution is reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs and is now on the calendar.

Mr. KITCHIN. Was it unanimously reported?

Mr. ANTHONY. It was.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of the resolution of inquiry?

Mr. ANTHONY. The purpose of the resolution of inquiry is to get some information from the War Department in regard to appointments which are reported to have been made of men who are registered and liable to draft and about to be called to duty who have been given commissions in the Army and assigned to noncombatant places. It seems that about four or five months ago the War Department, through its bureau chiefs, in letters to Members of Congress and others, announced that it was its purpose henceforth not to give any more appointments in the Army to men who were registered under the selective draft law. Members of Congress so notified their constituents, and it was generally accepted all over the country that that was to be the policy of the department. In spite of that statement from the department we find that commissions have been issued to men who are registered under the draft who are about to be called to service, and that in many cases these men are commissioned to safety-first, noncombatant places. The committee believed that that was hardly fair, and we wanted full information as to the extent to which this pernicious practice has been allowed to go on.

Mr. KITCHIN. As I understood the gentleman to answer me a while ago, this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of an omnibus pension bill that should have been passed two weeks ago to-day. I understand there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. This is not pension day.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know it is not, but I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of an omnibus pension bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is it just one bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. One bill from the Invalid Pensions Committee. I think the Pensions Committee have two small bills, but the chairman of that committee has not come in yet.

Mr. WALSH. The bill from the Invalid Pensions Committee, I understand, is a short one.

Mr. RUSSELL. A short bill. I do not think it will take 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. No. 10850.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (H. R. 10850) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of John S. Mott, late of Company E, One hundred and eightieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arabella Miller, widow of William Miller, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Joshua Markley, late of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Michael P. Wells, late of Company A, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew King, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lafayette Crouser, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Johnson, late of Company H, Fifty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hugh Thompson, late of Company C, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George J. Wilson, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isabella C. Waddell, late a nurse, Medical Department, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Edward O. Wright, late of Company E, Second Regiment New York Veteran Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Orrin J. Belden, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Lantz, late of Company D, Eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Conkle, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Cavalry, and Company —, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Rowland, late of Company E, Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel H. Samples, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wilson Gaskill, late of Company C, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Eply, late of Company I, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Newitt F. Gorrell, late of Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment, and Company F, Fiftieth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jonas F. Fortney, late of Company B, Forty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ambrose Wells, late of Company C, One hundred and seventy-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Schmook, late of Company F, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment, and Company C, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Johnson Harris, late of Company I, Twenty-ninth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martha E. Sellers, widow of Samuel S. Sellers, late of Capt. Gilbreath's company, Independent Scouts and Guides of Alabama, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of William Criswell, late of Company G, Eighty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theresa E. Bright, former widow of Henson Bright, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of David E. Rench, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abraham Lanham, late of Company K, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi Mattern, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Seth W. Gray, late of Companies I and L, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Mitzel, late of Companies H and C, Fifty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Kilgore, late of Company K, Forty-second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Roads, late of the Second Independent Battery, Wisconsin Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo W. Covert, late of Company I, Twenty-fifth Regiment, and Company B, Ninth Regiment, Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martin Guthrie, helpless and dependent child of Perry Guthrie, late of Company K, Sixty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of David Compton, late of Company K, Sixty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, Third Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George S. Winans, late of Company I, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Katie Edds, helpless and dependent child of Finis Edds, late of Company C, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Robert McGill, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Houts, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Butler George, late of Company E, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alexander Klinedinst, late of Company D, Eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Myron I. Hartwell, late of Company F, Twentieth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry H. Crane, late of Company B and G, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lucius A. West, late of Company M, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Krieger, late of Company K, One hundred and first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James D. Montgomery, late of Company D, Third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph M. Wagner, alias Joseph Mann, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Leathers, late of Company G, Sixtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Lakey, late of Company A, Seventy-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James G. B. Lamb, late of Company K, Twenty-sixth Regiment, and Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Story, late of Company K, First Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Shoup, late of Company B, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Gooding, late of Company F, One hundred and seventieth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Burkhart, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert Harris, late of Company C, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Esto A. Makepeace, late of Company B, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James D. Webb, late of Company G, Third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nicholas Wetzel, late of Company L, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Page, late of Company E, Maine Coast Guards Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Van Riper, late of Company A, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Shoeman, widow of David Shoeman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Hezekiah S. Williams, alias Hezekiah Straw, late of Company H, Tenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Horace W. Brown, late of Company E, Ninth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas A. Jamison, late of Company G, Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William M. Henderson, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Rosborough, late of Company E, Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Williams Sollars, late of Companies A and D, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Oliver J. Boord, late of Company C, Eighty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Allice L. Enloe, helpless and dependent child of Edwin T. Enloe, late of Company D, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John Van Schoyk, late of Company I, Thirty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob P. Ellis, late of Company B, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lucretia Napier, dependent mother of Richard Napier, late of Company H, Fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Seth K. Coats, late of Company D, Thirty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jasper N. Woods, late of Company C, Forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James K. P. Morelock, late of Company B, Thirty-ninth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel McCammon, late of Company A, Thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Levi P. Fodrea, late of Company A, One hundred and first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David R. Pringle, late of Company E, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jeremiah Hyatt, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jarrett E. Burgess, late of Company K, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Lemon, late of the Twenty-second Battery, Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arthur W. Brittingham, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of L. Ethel Bolton, helpless and dependent child of Charles W. Bolton, late of Company I, Ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Maggie L. Oliver, helpless and dependent child of John M. Oliver, late of Company F, Thirty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Philip Kissel, late of Company B, First Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ambrose J. Knapp, late of Company A, Third New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton T. Monroe, late of Company A, Eighty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Aultman, late of Company I, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elias B. Green, late of Battery D, Third New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Annia Branigan, widow of John J. Branigan, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment, and Company L, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of John M. Culver, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Margaret Berry, widow of Caleb Berry, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Isaac L. Prescott, late of Company B, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Newton, late of Company A, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Kendall, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cyrus Riffle, late of Company C, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Powers, late of Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment, and unassigned, Thirty-third Regiment, New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry J. Olmstead, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Robison, late of Company B, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eli Shidler, late of Company K, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edwin Andrews, late of Company D, Hatch's battalion, Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Uriah Smith, alias William Edwards, late of Company I, One hundred and fifty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth A. Munday, former widow of Donaldson Martin, late of Company B, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Daniel Ault, late of Company F, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William R. Brummett, late of Company E, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eva M. Bevier, widow of James E. Bevier, late of Company H, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Eli Abbott, late of Company D, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Megehee, late of Company L, Third Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry C. Crooks, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nelson White, late of Company F, Fortieth Regiment and Fifty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Kiplinger, widow of Reuben D. Kiplinger, late of Company C, Forty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of David L. Buchannan, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Chester E. Kyte, late of Company A, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Mounted Rifles, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mortimer L. Woodward, late of Company G, Forty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jeremiah McIntosh, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Michael Ham, late of Company H, Forty-sixth Regiment, and Company G, One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edmon Wade West, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel J. Vaughn, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank W. Henninger, late of Company D, One hundred and ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Garrison J. Jaques, late of Company D, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah L. Seltzer, widow of A. Frank Seltzer, late of Company G, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Charles G. Mack, late of Company B, One hundred and ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James C. Moore, late of Company G, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Irving Holcomb, late of Company B, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Philo M. Russell, late of Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William C. McGhee, late of Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert Harper, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eli Smith, late of Company K, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rachel Woggerman, former widow of Daniel Lobaugh, late of Company F, Seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of John Wisner, late of Company K, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment, and Company E, Forty-sixth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry B. Towner, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Reuben Sumpter, late of Battery A, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Williamson, late of Company L, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Robinson, late of Company A, Fourth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles W. Cross, late of Company L, Third Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David G. R. Potect, late of Company I, Fifty-third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Croasmun, widow of Oliver Croasmun, late of Company A, One hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of John H. Nickerson, late of Company D, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William D. Dunkerson, late of Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter Jacoby, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William G. Abbott, late of Company B, Fifty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sabina Chaney, former widow of William J. Burcham, late of Company C, Forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Michael Reichert, late of Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Hollander, late of Company I, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William T. Eager, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Aaron Hall, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Fifty-third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William S. Kiddey, late of Company K, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Martin, late of Company D, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and Company F, First Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary Sprague, now Ett, dependent mother of George W. Sprague, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Henry Weitzel, late of Company F, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Logan, late of Company D, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Marcus L. K. Wells, late of Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William P. Dorton, late of Company G, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Patton Coomer, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Uriah T. Alley, late of Company L, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edgar W. Lauck, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Columbus Sampson, late of Companies F and C, First Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Second Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Campbell, late of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry G. C. Rose, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Infantry, and Thirty-seventh Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John P. Simonds, late of Company H, First Regiment New York Volunteer Mounted Rifles, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John B. Williams, late of Company M, Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Burk, late of Company K, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

H. R. 594. John S. Mott.
H. R. 788. Arabella Miller.
H. R. 1350. Joshua Markley.
H. R. 1362. Michael P. Wells.
H. R. 1380. Andrew King.
H. R. 1382. Lafayette Crouser.
H. R. 1483. Thomas Johnson.
H. R. 1941. Hugh Thompson.
H. R. 1986. George J. Wilson.
H. R. 2038. Isabella C. Waddell.
H. R. 2519. Edward C. Wright.
H. R. 2520. Orrin J. Belden.
H. R. 2558. David Lantz.
H. R. 2761. Jacob Conkle.
H. R. 2802. James W. Rowland.
H. R. 3513. Samuel H. Samples.
H. R. 3595. Wilson Gaskill.
H. R. 3598. William H. Eply.
H. R. 3870. Newitt F. Gorrell.
H. R. 4337. Jonas F. Fortney.
H. R. 4621. Ambrose Wells.
H. R. 4751. William Schmook.
H. R. 5233. Johnson Harris.
H. R. 5304. Martha E. Sellers.
H. R. 5330. William Criswell.
H. R. 5352. Theresa E. Bright.
H. R. 5355. David E. Rench.
H. R. 5464. Abraham Lanham.
H. R. 5503. Levi Mattern.
H. R. 5603. Seth W. Gray.
H. R. 5618. David Mitzel.
H. R. 5754. Charles Kilgore.
H. R. 5759. John W. Roads.
H. R. 5844. Alonzo W. Covert.
H. R. 5921. Martin Guthrie.
H. R. 5946. David Compton.
H. R. 6207. George S. Winans.
H. R. 6423. Kattie Edds.
H. R. 6471. Robert McGill.
H. R. 6475. George Houts.
H. R. 6498. Butler George.
H. R. 6557. Alexander Klinedinst.
H. R. 6686. Myron I. Hartwell.
H. R. 6804. Henry H. Crane.
H. R. 6806. Lucius A. West.
H. R. 6814. Jacob Krieger.
H. R. 6834. James D. Montgomery.
H. R. 6991. Joseph M. Wagner, alias Joseph Mann.
H. R. 7109. John W. Leathers.
H. R. 7200. Charles H. Lakey.
H. R. 7202. James G. B. Lamb.
H. R. 7210. Charles Story.
H. R. 7216. John Shoup.
H. R. 7278. Samuel Gooding.
H. R. 7308. Joseph Burkhart.
H. R. 7371. Robert Harris.
H. R. 7373. Esto A. Makepeace.
H. R. 7420. James D. Webb.
H. R. 7482. Nicholas Wetzel.
H. R. 7499. James W. Page.
H. R. 7508. James Van Riper.
H. R. 7612. Elizabeth Sboeman.
H. R. 7706. Hezekiah S. Williams, alias Hezekiah Straw.
H. R. 7755. Horace W. Brown.
H. R. 7805. Thomas A. Jamison.
H. R. 7819. William M. Henderson.
H. R. 7823. William J. Rosborough.
H. R. 8080. William Sollars.
H. R. 8112. Oliver J. Boord.
H. R. 8123. Allice L. Enloe.
H. R. 8136. John Van Schoyk.
H. R. 8155. Jacob P. Ellis.
H. R. 8206. Lucretia Napier.
H. R. 8220. Seth K. Coats.
H. R. 8262. Jasper N. Woods.
H. R. 8284. James K. P. Morelock.
H. R. 8285. Daniel McCammon.
H. R. 8475. Levi P. Fodren.
H. R. 8483. David R. Pringle.
H. R. 8510. Jeremiah Hyatt.
H. R. 8256. Jarrett E. Burgess.
H. R. 8537. David Lemon.
H. R. 8671. Arthur W. Brittingham.
H. R. 8794. L. Ethel Bolton.
H. R. 8818. Maggie L. Oliver.
H. R. 8955. Philip Kissel.
H. R. 9020. Ambrose J. Knapp.
H. R. 9113. Milton T. Monroe.
H. R. 9125. William A. Aultman.
H. R. 9134. Elias B. Green.
H. R. 9177. Annie Branigan.
H. R. 9231. John M. Culver.

H. R. 9419. Margaret Berry.
H. R. 9433. Isaac L. Prescott.
H. R. 9447. William Newton.
H. R. 9448. William H. Kendall.
H. R. 9471. Cyrus Riffle.
H. R. 9472. James Powers.
H. R. 9526. Henry J. Olmstead.
H. R. 9595. John M. Robison.
H. R. 9596. Eli Shidler.
H. R. 9606. Edwin Andrews.
H. R. 9658. Uriah Smith, alias William Edwards.
H. R. 9660. Elizabeth A. Munday.
H. R. 9676. Daniel Ault.
H. R. 9687. William R. Brummett.
H. R. 9742. Eva M. Bevier.
H. R. 9745. Eli Abbott.
H. R. 9763. John Megehee.
H. R. 9851. Henry C. Crooks.
H. R. 9859. Nelson White.
H. R. 9938. Mary A. Kiplinger.
H. R. 9940. David L. Buchannan.
H. R. 9954. Chester E. Kyte.
H. R. 9982. Mortimer L. Woodward.
H. R. 9983. Jeremiah McIntosh.
H. R. 10002. Michael Ham.
H. R. 10004. Edmon Wade West.
H. R. 10030. Samuel J. Vaughn.
H. R. 10116. Frank W. Henninger.
H. R. 10169. Garrison J. Jaques.
H. R. 10173. Sarah L. Seltzer.
H. R. 10174. Charles G. Mack.
H. R. 10179. James C. Moore.
H. R. 10212. Irving Holcomb.
H. R. 10222. Philo M. Russell.
H. R. 10229. William C. McGhee.
H. R. 10248. Robert Harper.
H. R. 10256. Eli Smith.
H. R. 10260. Rachel Woggerman.
H. R. 10276. John J. Wisner.
H. R. 10278. Henry B. Towner.
H. R. 10279. Reuben Sumpter.
H. R. 10283. James Williamson.
H. R. 10315. William W. Robinson.
H. R. 10341. Charles W. Cross.
H. R. 10345. David G. R. Poteet.
H. R. 10374. Mary E. Croasmun.
H. R. 10382. John H. Nickerson.
H. R. 10383. William D. Dunkerson.
H. R. 10388. Peter Jacoby.
H. R. 10389. William G. Abbott.
H. R. 10402. Sabina Chaney.
H. R. 10420. Michael Reichert.
H. R. 10421. John A. Hollander.
H. R. 10441. William T. Eager.
H. R. 10442. Aaron Hall.
H. R. 10449. William S. Kiddey.
H. R. 10451. Andrew J. Martin.
H. R. 10461. Mary Sprague, now Ett.
H. R. 10465. Henry Weitzel.
H. R. 10489. William Logan.
H. R. 10497. Marcus L. K. Wells.
H. R. 10498. William P. Dorton.
H. R. 10528. Patton Coomer.
H. R. 10532. Uriah T. Alley.
H. R. 10538. Edgar W. Lauck.
H. R. 10541. Columbus Sampson.
H. R. 10545. William A. Campbell.
H. R. 10566. Henry G. C. Rose.
H. R. 10574. John P. Simonds.
H. R. 10576. John B. Williams.
H. R. 10806. James A. Burk.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up a pension bill, House bill 10924.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a pension bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 10924) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend to call up any other bills?

Mr. TILLMAN. This is the only bill, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. WALSH. It is a short bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of George W. Keenan, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James E. Martin, late of Company M, Twenty-seventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John P. Kirby, late of Company H, Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Thomas E. Tanner, late of Company H, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Leslie G. Phillips, alias Gordon L. Phillips, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Orville C. Bolt, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Lorenzo D. Romine, late of Company K, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James A. Annas, late of Company L, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Frank A. Crawford, late of Troop D, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles H. Howell, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Bernhard Bolen, late of Company A, Thirtieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Fred Yeomans, late of Troop C, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, and Company L, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John Groth, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Percy H. Allen, late of Company F, Second Battalion of Engineers, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Leo A. Kelly, late of Companies E and H, Twenty-sixth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Margaret C. Fargo, dependent mother of William H. Fargo, deceased, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of T. McElvaney, late of Company C-2, Arkansas Veteran Infantry, and Company K, Thirty-third Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Otis H. Sidener, late of Company F, Thirty-ninth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Frank C. Barrow, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Louis Settles, late of Company E, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Joshua W. Reed, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julian A. Wiggins, late of Company M, First Regiment Texas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of James L. Henderson, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lewis Speie, late of Troop A, Ninth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George A. Holmes, late of Company H, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles A. Swander, late of Company C, Thirty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary Diven, dependent mother of Edward T. Diven, jr., deceased, late of Company I, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William J. McCabe, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eugene A. Hendricks, late of Company A, First Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mace H. Corsbie, late of Company B, Second Regiment Mississippi Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to said committee:

H. R. 1432. George W. Keenan.
H. R. 1819. James E. Martin.
H. R. 2238. John P. Kirby.
H. R. 2244. Thomas E. Tanner.
H. R. 2246. Leslie G. Phillips, alias Gordon L. Phillips.
H. R. 2422. Orville C. Bolt.
H. R. 2276. Lorenzo D. Romine.
H. R. 2280. James A. Annas.
H. R. 3887. Frank A. Crawford.
H. R. 4011. Charles H. Howell.
H. R. 4080. Bernard Bolen.
H. R. 4291. Fred Yeomans.
H. R. 6238. Percy H. Allen.
H. R. 6340. Leo A. Kelly.
H. R. 6568. Margaret C. Fargo.
H. R. 7322. Otis H. Sidener.
H. R. 8217. Frank C. Barrow.
H. R. 8684. Louis Settles.
H. R. 9207. Joshua W. Reed.
H. R. 9365. Lewis Speie.
H. R. 9421. Julian A. Wiggins.
H. R. 9463. James L. Henderson.
H. R. 9484. George A. Holmes.
H. R. 9892. Charles A. Swander.
H. R. 10053. William J. McCabe.
H. R. 10133. Mary Diven.
H. R. 10146. Eugene A. Hendricks.
H. R. 10584. Mace H. Corsbie.
H. R. 15567. John Groth.
H. R. 73112. T. McElvany.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TILLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9352. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported on April 4, 1918, that they presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 11123. An act to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign Governments, and for other purposes."

BRIDGE ACROSS CLARK FORK RIVER, BONNER COUNTY, IDAHO.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4102, and consider the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4102, a bridge bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 4102) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clark Fork River in Bonner County, Idaho.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Clark Fork River, in Bonner County, Idaho, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the village of Clark Fork, in the county of Bonner, in the State of Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill (H. R. 10593) of similar tenor was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10843, a pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 10843, a pension bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, when was this bill reported?

Mr. LINTHICUM. On March 19, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10843) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Andrew Heuser, late of the United States Marine Corps, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of James Park, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Edmund S. Auld, alias Storey E. Auld, late of Company K, First Regiment North Dakota Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jeddo Q. McNatt, late of Company B, Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James R. Hays, late of Troop L, First Texas Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William L. Snider, late of Company I, First Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Thomas J. Harris, late of Company C, Eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George Tuffendsam, late of Company M, Second Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Pauline A. Randt, dependent mother of John W. Randt, deceased, late of Company I, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Andrew E. Younginer, late of the Thirteenth Recruit Company, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George H. McCauley, late of Company G, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Dick Parker, late of Company A, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Francis O. Nash, late acting assistant surgeon in the United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry W. Kappes, late of United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Eddy B. Stevens, late first lieutenant, Third Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Arthur H. Locmis, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Howard A. Littlejohn, late of Heavy Battery, South Carolina Volunteer Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Pollock T. Harbold, late of Company M, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Lemial S. Darr, late of Troop B, Eighth United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Frank W. Allen, late of Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Joseph E. Neargarder, late of United States Marine Corps, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wilburn Hall, late of Company A, Second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George W. Bean, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harry Owen, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of John Ashton, late of Company E, Thirty-fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John T. Garrett, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Ralph A. Finicle, late of Company L, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Arthur J. Jerome, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of John E. Root, late of Troop D, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalary, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Pearley P. Beal, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of David Mann, late of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Greene B. Caywood, late of Company A, Second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Rosco Wilkins, late of Eleventh Recruit Company, General Service Infantry, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Trigg Lewis, late of Company G, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Joseph Harris, late of Troop C, Tenth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John F. Smoot, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Carl Z. Work, late of the United States Navy, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George M. Federkiel, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Frank A. Pfefferle, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Martin L. Payne, late of Company F, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George W. Hyland, late of Company I, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Walter L. Jewell, late of Troop B, Thirteenth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Leo Voelker, late of Company B, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William V. Schwoyer, late of Company M, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Howard P. Hare, late of the Eighteenth Company, United States Coast Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Edward P. Gallagher, late of Company G, Two hundred and third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George W. Boling late of Company H, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles F. Schiller, late of Troop B, First Regiment United States Cavalry, Indian wars, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Simpkins, late of Company D, Forty-second Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Robert Dinsmore, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hulbert O. White, dependent father of Claude R. White, deceased, late of Company A, Twenty-third Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Weddington, late of the Eighteenth Company United States Coast Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Michael Lacey, late of Company L, Third Battalion Engineers, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles L. Johnson, late of Troop M, First Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of John D. Bridgman, late of Battery B, Utah Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Craig, late of Company D, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Charles F. Sparger, late of Company K, Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Shirley, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles L. McClure, late of Company M, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard Thrash, late of Troop A, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Amos H. Archer, late of Company D, Second Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Franklin A. Peters, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, and Company E, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of William Leihsing, late of Troop K, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Bernard Klatt, late of Company G, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and Troop I, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of William F. Graham, late of Company D, Third Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Olaf H. Heiele, late of the United States Marine Corps, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Elmer R. Harrington, late of Company A, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Thaddeus M. Kelly, late cadet, United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martin Quinn, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martin Salmon, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Elmer F. Malone, late of Twentieth Battery United States Field Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James Manning, late of Company E, Forty-second Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of John Bush, late of Company F, Twenty-seventh Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christine Cook, dependent mother of Frederick H. Cook, deceased, late of Company L, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Charles H. Carey, late captain and assistant surgeon Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert T. Ridings, late of Battery F, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, and general service United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Beattie, late of Company H, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert W. Griffin, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Luther S. Campbell, late of Company C, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel D. Lee, late of the Twenty-sixth Company United States Coast Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Leontine M. Cremerieux, late nurse, Medical Department United States Army, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William C. Crockett, late of Company G, Second Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of William M. Simms, late of Troop L, First Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stanley W. Lemley, late of Company L, Third Battalion United States Engineers, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary Leahy, dependent mother of Cornelius J. Leahy, late of Company A, Thirty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Harry E. Bryan, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Stapleton, late of Company I, Two hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mart Bradshaw, late of Company A, Twenty-seventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to said committee:

H. R. 701. Andrew Heuser.
H. R. 753. James Park.
H. R. 957. Edmund S. Auld, alias Storey E. Auld.
H. R. 996. Jeddo Q. McNatt.
H. R. 1194. James R. Hays.
H. R. 1244. William L. Snider.
H. R. 1613. Thomas J. Harris.
H. R. 1817. George Tuffendsam.
H. R. 1925. Pauline A. Randt.
H. R. 2210. Andrew E. Younginer.
H. R. 2237. George H. McCauley.
H. R. 2706. Dick Parker.
H. R. 2824. Francis O. Nash.
H. R. 2994. Henry W. Kappes.
H. R. 3188. Eddy B. Stevens.
H. R. 3629. Arthur H. Loomis.
H. R. 3693. Howard A. Littlejohn.
H. R. 3943. Pollock T. Harbold.
H. R. 4008. Lemuel S. Darr.
H. R. 4089. Frank W. Allen.
H. R. 4275. Joseph E. Neargarder.
H. R. 4555. Wilburn Hall.
H. R. 4926. George W. Bean.
H. R. 5178. Harry Owen.
H. R. 5302. John Ashton.
H. R. 5458. John T. Garrett.
H. R. 5509. Ralph A. Finicle.
H. R. 5689. Arthur J. Jerome.
H. R. 5785. John E. Root.
H. R. 5860. Pearley P. Beal.
H. R. 5884. David Mann.
H. R. 5898. Greene B. Caywood.
H. R. 6212. Rosco Wilkins.
H. R. 6222. Trigg Lewis.
H. R. 6313. Joseph Harris.
H. R. 6502. John F. Smoot.
H. R. 6735. Carl Z. Work.
H. R. 6768. George M. Federkiel.
H. R. 6770. Frank A. Pfefferle.
H. R. 6871. Martin L. Payne.
H. R. 6897. George W. Hyland.
H. R. 7045. Walter L. Jewell.
H. R. 7056. Leo Voelker.
H. R. 7124. William V. Schwoyer.
H. R. 7242. Howard P. Hare.
H. R. 7317. Edward P. Gallagher.
H. R. 7458. George W. Boling.
H. R. 7485. Charles Schiller.
H. R. 7502. David Simpkins.
H. R. 7524. Robert Dinsmore.
H. R. 7592. Hulbert O. White.
H. R. 7704. William Weddington.
H. R. 7707. Michael Lacey.
H. R. 7723. Charles L. Johnson.
H. R. 7878. John D. Bridgman.
H. R. 7933. George W. Craig.
H. R. 7975. Charles F. Sprarger.
H. R. 8060. William J. Shirley.
H. R. 8064. Charles L. McClure.
H. R. 8072. Richard Thrash.
H. R. 8403. Amos H. Archer.
H. R. 8572. Franklin A. Peters.
H. R. 8578. William Leihsing.
H. R. 8653. Bernard Klatt.
H. R. 8654. William F. Graham.
H. R. 8664. Olaf H. Heiele.
H. R. 8676. Elmer R. Harrington.
H. R. 8813. Thaddeus M. Kelly.
H. R. 8907. Martin Quinn.
H. R. 9030. Martin Salmon.
H. R. 9126. Elmer F. Malone.
H. R. 9127. James Manning.
H. R. 9189. John Bush.
H. R. 9334. Christine Cook.
H. R. 9342. Charles H. Carey.
H. R. 9362. Robert T. Ridings.
H. R. 9381. John Beattie.
H. R. 9401. Robert W. Griffen.
H. R. 9655. Luther S. Campbell.
H. R. 9664. Samuel D. Lee.
H. R. 9692. Leontine M. Cremerieux
H. R. 9702. William C. Crockett.
H. R. 9756. William M. Simms.
H. R. 9803. Stanley W. Lemley.
H. R. 9848. Mary Leahy.
H. R. 9915. Harry E. Bryan.
H. R. 10042. James Stapleton.
H. R. 11020. Mart Bradshaw.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to pension bills. I notice that this is granting increase of pensions in some cases and original pensions in others to the soldiers in the Regular Army and soldiers of the Spanish War, and so on.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. DYER. Are these cases where men have applied for a pension under the general law and been rejected in each case?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Where they have made applications to the bureau for original or increase pensions, and they have been rejected.

Mr. DYER. Is it necessary that a soldier must have made application to the Pension Bureau and been rejected before the committee considers his claim?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Unless it is apparent that the soldier would not have had a pensionable status under existing law.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the chairman of the committee about the cases of widows of the Spanish War and Philippine insurrection soldiers. In this bill I do not see a single widow provided for.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I will explain the situation. It is like this: Last fall the House, when it passed the war-risk insurance bill, increased the rate of pensions of Civil War widows and Spanish War widows to $25 a month; that is, for those widows whose names were then on the roll and those who hereafter may be placed on the roll. That, in a large measure, disturbed the present rate that the Pension Committee had agreed upon, and before we could proceed to grant further pensions and increase of pensions to widows it was necessary for us to get in touch with the Senate Committee on Pensions and have some understanding as to the rate that the two committees would give, if possible. The chairman of the Senate committee recently died, and there being no head to that committee, it was impossible to get in touch with any member of the committee who would assume responsibility in such matters. Recently Senator Walsh, of Montana, has been appointed chairman of that committee, and he has stated that he would appoint a subcommittee to confer with a subcommittee on pensions in the House with a view to taking up and fixing some rate that would be agreeable. That subcommittee will meet some time this week, I hope, to determine the rate, and as soon as the committee can get together and have an understanding the House committee will proceed to consider pensions for Spanish War widows and all other widows.

Mr. DYER. I am glad to hear the gentleman state that, because there are many deserving cases awaiting action. I am sure the chairman of the committee and the committee itself is doing its full duty, but there are many cases of widows of the Spanish War and of the Philippine insurrection whose applications have been rejected on some technicality in the Pension Office. Many of them are dependent, with children, and suffering to some extent, and they have not been receiving the same consideration as other war widows.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. They will receive consideration very soon.

Mr. DYER. I hope the gentleman will urge it.

The following committee amendment was agreed to:

Page 14, line 4, strike out the following: "The name of Harry E. Bryan, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving," the soldier having died.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINTHICUM, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARLINGTON HOTEL PROPERTY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 262.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10022, entitled "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase the site and building now under construction thereon, known as the Arlington Hotel property"; that there shall be not to exceed two hours of general debate to be divided equally between those supporting and those opposing the bill; that at the conclusion of general debate the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule for amendments, and after the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the same shall be reported to the House with such amendments and recommendation as the Committee of the Whole may make, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill, and all amendments thereto, to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from North Carolina will pardon me, I thought it was understood that this rule was not going to be reported. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and myself tried this morning to get in touch with the gentleman, in order to confer with him about the matter. We agreed that it was not necessary to call up this rule, and concluded that it was not necessary at this time to pass the bill to which the rule referred; that the matter could be adjusted by a simple appropriation from the Appropriation Committee reimbursing the emergency fund with the amount which the President took from such fund and expended for the purchase of the Arlington site and building. I talked with the Secretary of the Treasury a few moments ago. He had no objection to this course.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I am glad indeed to learn that from the gentleman, and very glad indeed to learn that the resolution is not necessary. The fact is, the provisions of the bill authorizing the purchase of the Arlington property will have to be changed. I got here just as quickly as I could, but was not present when the conference took place. I ask unanimous consent, if that be necessary, to withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to get unanimous consent. The gentleman withdraws the resolution.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Do I understand that the rule that was submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina has been withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. It has been withdrawn.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. Pending that motion I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY] is in the Hall?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. KENNEDY was here a few moments ago, but he went away understanding that the other matter was coming up just submitted and withdrawn by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. I suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] that he arrange that general debate shall proceed with the understanding that the time shall be controlled by him and Mr. KENNEDY in equal parts, postponing the fixing of the amount of time until later.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, pending the return of Mr. KENNEDY, then, I ask unanimous consent that the time of general debate be controlled one-half by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be controlled half and half by himself and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY]. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I trust the House will indulge me for just a moment. I hope that we shall all cut down general debate on the appropriation bills and on other bills as much as possible, not, however, to interfere with a full and fair discussion of their merits. I am confident that if the membership of the House will cooperate with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and myself we shall be able to adjourn certainly by the 1st of July, and we hope earlier. [Applause.] Heretofore we have all had our fears in respect to the Senate; we have thought that it mattered not how early we concluded our business here, the Senate could be relied on to take its full and dignified time in concluding its business, but I am assured by Senators, and I am confident that they will make good the assurance, that if nothing unforeseen happens the Senate will be ready to adjourn as early as the House. They think Congress should be ready to adjourn not later than July 1.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. A good many requests are being made—I have had some myself as I presume others have—urging me and others to go away from here at the present time or soon to make liberty-loan speeches. Of course, I would be glad, and others would be glad, to help in every way possible in this patriotic work. Does the gentleman from North Carolina believe it would be best for Members of the House to leave their duties here at the present time or soon and go away for that purpose, or does he think it necessary for the membership to remain here?

Mr. KITCHIN. As a rule, I think it is very necessary for the membership to remain here and transact the business of the House and the necessary work of Congress. Of course, there may be exceptional individual cases here and there where a Member can safely go away for a reasonable time, and in such cases there should be no criticism of a Member leaving, but I would say generally that it is very necessary for the membership of the House to remain here.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And if the membership does remain here important war measures can be promptly passed and the adjournment may be expedited?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not only adjournment may be expedited, but important war measures necessary to be passed will be expedited. Without knowing the urgent necessity of the early passage of some important measures, some Members have made engagements to make liberty-loan speeches. Of course, they will have to keep those engagements, and we will have to make proper arrangements for their absence. There may be and are no doubt exceptional cases, as I say, here and there, but I would say generally that the membership of the House will do a great deal better service to their country by remaining here and getting through the necessary legislation than by going away.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For some weeks the Provost Marshal has been urging the House to pass a bill which has already passed the Senate revising the draft law. An urgent meeting of the Committee on Rules was called a few days ago in respect to it, and the committee agreed on a resolution making that bill in order in the House. It was to take precedence over all other rules that had been agreed to. I thought it would have been called up on last Wednesday. Nothing has been done, however. Why has that important war measure been set aside by the River and Harbor Committee this morning?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that my understanding from the Committee on Military Affairs is that it is not quite ready to take up this bill; but whenever the committee is ready to take it up, and that will be probably Monday, I am sure the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will give way. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] will confirm me in the statement that it was understood that the draft bill would have precedence over the river and harbor bill whenever the Military Affairs Committee was ready, even to the extent of displacing the river and harbor bill during its consideration, for such time as may be necessary for the consideration and passage of the draft bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Committee on Military Affairs is still waiting for some figures and statistics from the Provost Marshal General's office, which they have been delayed in furnishing.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am very glad that the gentleman, who is a prominent and active member of the Military Affairs Committee, made that statement. I do not want the House and the country to think that we are putting anything ahead of that, or any war measure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman is not surprised that the question was raised why this committee should take precedence with this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. I raised that question two or three days ago and went to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he stated to me what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has just stated.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I have not quite understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and I desire to propound a question. Do I understand that the reason for the delay in the consideration of the draft measure is not due to any lack of diligence on the part of the House, but of the War Department in supplying information?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I would not say that there is any responsibility either way. I say that the War Department is doing its best to get such figures and facts as the committee desires, and the committee is doing its best to get ready to have the bill properly considered in the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then this is the fact: The War Department is doing its best—there is no criticism of that—but we are waiting upon the War Department?

Mr. MADDEN. If I may be allowed, I object to that——

Mr. KITCHIN. So far as I know, the committe is waiting on the War Department.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want any misunderstanding. I do not think the committee is waiting for the War Department at all, but waiting for some members of the Committee on Military Affairs absent from the city to come back, and arrangements have been made that the bill would not be called up until the return of those members. I happen to know that Gen. Crowder, Provost Marshal General, has been urging early action on the new draft law, and the delay is embarrassing the War Department, and action should not be delayed longer by the House; at any rate, the blame should be placed where it belongs.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will state that the delay, even an unnecessary delay for a week or longer, will postpone the actual draft. The failure to pass the bill earlier has not embarrassed the department.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARNER. I want to know if I can interrogate the gentleman from Kansas in the time of the gentleman from North Carolina?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina governs that.

Mr. GARNER. That is what I am seeking recognition of the Chair for, to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if he will permit me to interrogate the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Kansas to have an interrogatory debate? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, well, I reluctantly yield.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] whether the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois is based on facts?

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not hear the statement.

Mr. GARNER. The statement of the gentleman from Illinois was to the effect that they were not waiting for information from the War Department, but waiting on certain members of the Committee on Military Affairs to return to the city.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would say both statements are correct. It is my understanding that the committee is waiting, or, rather, some of its members are waiting, on information to be furnished by the Provost Marshal General, and it is also true that one very efficient member of the Committee on Military Affairs, who is somewhat alarmed about the quota from his own State under the new classification, has gone to his home for the purpose of securing information as to how this new classification will work in his own State.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He has not been in Wisconsin?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think he has been in Wisconsin.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say the entire draft law will be held up an indefinite period of time for a gentleman to go to his district to ascertain what effect it will have on his district?

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no; it is my opinion the whole matter will be ready in a few days; that the Provost Marshal will be able to furnish all the information desired, and members of the committee prepared to discuss intelligently some of the radical changes proposed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield for me to put a question to the gentleman from Kansas? Would your committee be ready to proceed now if the Provost Marshal General had furnished the information?

Mr. ANTHONY. In my opinion the committee is ready to take up the bill at this minute if the House desires to do so. I do not believe this information for which some of the Members are waiting vitally affects the bill, but others believe it does. If it be the desire of the House to take it up and pass it to-day, it could be taken up.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What—if the gentleman can state it—what is the opinion of the Provost Marshal General on that subject—that we ought to proceed without the information, or had better wait?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have not heard any intimation from him in regard to it, but individual Members think they should have certain information before proceeding, and out of deference to them, I understand, it has been held up for a few days. While undoubtedly the bill is one which should be speedily enacted into law, so that the country may know what to expect, yet it is my understanding that no draft under this new legislation is to be made in the near future, perhaps not until June, when the new quota of men who have become 21 years of age since the last registration will be called upon to register. Nearly all of these young men will go into class 1, and it is our impression that, under the authority proposed to be given, the War Department means to fill the ranks of our armies from that time on almost entirely from the men of the first classification.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KING. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] that he control the half of the time and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY] the other half? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] to make some kind of a request.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask if I may address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. GILLETT. For two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, no Member of the House is more earnest or desirous of getting away early than I am, or will cooperate more to that end when I think such cooperation will be effective, but I have been here so long and I have heard so many of these rainbow suggestions that we could get away by the middle of June or the 1st of July and seen them disappointed, that I will confess I am rather pessimistic in reference to the suggestion which the gentleman from North Carolina makes. I have not as much confidence in the power of the Senate to suppress their love for expression [laughter] as to hope that they will be ready to adjourn by the time the gentleman mentions, and, therefore, while I say I will be very glad and I am sure we will all be on this side, to cooperate toward that end, I do not think that that argument should compel us to suppress any important facts which we think it would be wise to communicate to our fellow Members here on the floor, and I do not think it ought to be used as a lever to prevent reasonable discussion.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will assure the gentleman it will not be so used.

Mr. GILLETT. I did not mean to intimate any such intention.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to speak for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to call the attention of the House to the fact that those rosy predictions by me delivered during the last Congress or the last session were all verified. I made the prediction that the House could and would get through with its business before July—by June 1, if necessary—but I could not be responsible for the Senate. I wish to say now my confidence in the Senate's facilitating business has grown considerably in the last three or four months, because it has done more work, passed more legislation, from December till now than it has in the last 18 years in the same length of time. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] that there should be full discussion on the merits of every bill considered, but I do wish the Members of the House to cut out a good deal more gas and hot air than they usually do in the long session.

Mr. MADDEN. I congratulate the gentleman from North Carolina on his power to exercise his salutary influence over the Senate. He is the first man in the House that has been able to do it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE (H. REPT. 468).

Mr. WEBB, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a conference report on the bill H. R. 2316, an act to promote export trade, and for other purposes, for printing under the rules.

ALIEN WOMEN.

Mr. WEBB, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9504 to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, for printing under the rules.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY] is in the Hall now, and I would like to see if we can agree on the time for general debate.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. I suggest that we run along during the day, and we can make an agreement this afternoon for closing debate. I have requests for about four hours on this side, and I think most of the speakers desire to speak to the bill.

Mr. SMALL. There are requests for only about two hours on this side.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Let us run on the balance of the day, and we will agree on time for general debate this evening.

The SPEAKER. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 8.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors present the annual river and harbor bill, and I would wish to emphasize the statement that this is an annual bill. The maintenance and improvement of rivers and harbors for navigation constitute as valuable an activity of the Government as any other. Upon their navigability depends the water transportation of the country. Water transportation is one of the instrumentalities for the movement of traffic and a most valuable factor in transportation, and any lapse in the passage of the annual river and harbor bills means a distinct detriment to this instrumentality of transportation.

In the drafting of this bill the committee have been controlled by a well-defined policy. The bill contains appropriations for the maintenance of rivers and harbors heretofore completed. It contains, further, appropriations for the further improvement of projects which have been heretofore adopted but not completed. It further contains appropriations for a few new projects which have been adopted in the bill. Those constitute the only appropriations, except an item for examinations and surveys. A word of explanation now about the policy by which the committee has been governed.

The appropriations for maintenance and for further improvement have been primarily based upon recommendations by the Chief of Engineers, and in no instance has the committee included an appropriation above the estimates so submitted. These estimates have been formulated in the interest of economy and with due regard to war conditions. Recognizing the large demand for labor, for materials which enter into river and harbor works, the large demands upon the Treasury for exclusive war purposes, the committee deemed it proper to reduce each appropriation to the limit of wise economy; and appropriations have only been recommended for maintenance and further improvements which are necessary to maintain the organization of the War Department in the prosecution of this work.

This policy of the committee was not adopted without discussion, without incurring disappointments, but the committee believe that under all the conditions its wisdom will appear to be so obvious that it will meet with the approval of the House and the country. We hope the House will deem it wise to agree with this policy of the committee and decline to increase any appropriations in the bill.

As to new projects, the committee adopted the same policy which governed them in the formulation of the last bill; that is to say, they have recommended no projects for inclusion in this bill which were not intimately associated with the prosecution of the war and so recommended by the Secretary of War. As a matter of fact, there are only three new projects, and two of them only might be termed new projects. One is for the construction of a channel connecting Long Beach and Los Angeles Harbors, Cal., which was strongly urged upon the committee by the United States Shipping Board, growing out of shipbuilding activities, particularly at Long Beach. That carries an appropriation. Another new project is for Crescent City Harbor, Cal., which was urged upon the committee by the War Industries Board, because of the existence of chrome, a valuable mineral in the making of explosives and other war materials, and the necessity of providing facilities for transporting same. The paragraph adopting this new project for Crescent City Harbor carries no appropriation. The original report recommended the imposition of local cooperation to the extent of $100,000, and the locality voluntarily agreed to increase that cooperation to the extent of $200,000, which is the extent of the initial appropriation; therefore, nothing is appropriated in this bill at this time.

Another is a modification of the project for Galveston Harbor and Channel, for deepening the channel over the bar. The present depth is maintained by the construction and maintenance of jetties, but the engineers believe that an increased depth from 30 to 35 feet could be secured by dredging, and with a view to making that experiment, and if successful, thereby saving a large sum of money to the Treasury in expensive jetty construction, the committee have adopted a modification of the project in order to give an opportunity for that experiment, involving only $65,000, which is provided for out of the existing available appropriation and therefore requires no appropriation in this bill.

In a general way I have stated the policy which controlled the committee, and it may be well now to refer to the actual appropriations, which have been made for these several purposes. The bill carries for maintenance, $2,358,050; for maintenance and continuing improvement, $2,642,500; for further improvements, $14,027,350; for surveys and contingencies, $200,000; total appropriations carried in the bill, $19,227,900. The statement of that aggregate sum will at once impress the House with the result of the policy controlling the committee in the formulation of the bill. The bill is modest and absolutely conforms to all the necessary conditions imposed by the war.

I would like to say a word now about surveys. After mature deliberation the committee determined to omit from this bill any authorizations for examinations and surveys. In this conclusion they took into consideration these conditions.

Many of the United States Army Engineers heretofore engaged in river and harbor work have been detailed to active military duty, and quite a number of engineer districts in the country have been placed in the charge of civilian engineers, in nearly every instance trained men who have had years of experience in the particular works in progress in such districts.

Again, there are about 150 authorizations of surveys heretofore made upon which no report has yet been submitted. I may say again that in the last bill an amendment was inserted in the House as to surveys authorized in that bill, to the effect that no survey so authorized should be made until after the close of the war with Germany, except such as the Secretary of War shall direct. So, in view of all those considerations gentlemen will understand the reason for the conclusion of the committee in determining to omit any new authorizations for examinations and surveys.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not catch the sentence just ahead of the last one, to the effect that nothing shall be done in the way of surveys except upon suggestions or orders from the Secretary of War; but there was a statement just before that as to the ground or basis upon which that conclusion had been reached.

Mr. SMALL. There was an amendment to the last river and harbor bill, made while the bill was under consideration. There were a number of surveys in that bill, and the House thought it proper, under war conditions, that none of those surveys should be made except when specifically directed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. LITTLE. That is a statutory provision?

Mr. SMALL. Yes. It is a part of the last river and harbor act.

I think I will submit nothing further upon those features of the bill itself which involve appropriations. I will now refer to all of the general provisions in the bill which the committee thinks are important. Section 5 of the bill is intended to prohibit the unnecessary pollution of navigable streams by discharging into such streams any free acid or acid waste. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers made a most earnest recommendation for this provision. I shall not take the trouble to read the memorandum from the War Department upon it. It is incorporated in the report. But, in substance, it is stated that the introduction of these acids into streams not only impairs the potability of the water but destroys the fish. If it were only the pollution of the stream itself, impairing it for domestic purposes, or only the destruction of the fish, that evil might be remedied through the action of the States and municipalities. But such pollution of the water also results in deterioration of the boilers of steamboats and the hulls of vessels constructed of steel so as to reduce their life by at least one-half. In addition to that it is impairing the metallic parts of structures connected with the locks and dams so that they very rapidly deteriorate.

These two reasons affect questions which are within the jurisdiction of Congress, and it is believed that the time has come when some inhibition should be placed on industrial plants so polluting these streams. Some objection has been made to the chairman of the committee, since the bill has been reported, that it might unduly interrupt the activities of some industrial plants; but the paragraph is so framed and so flexible, placing it within the discretion of the Secretary of War as to the extent to which it would be applied, that no danger need be apprehended from that source.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption at that point?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. The district I have the honor to represent in Pennsylvania is a mining district, and for many years the mine water has been thrown into streams until it has polluted the rivers of the country there and creeks and smaller streams until they are absolutely unfit for portable purposes or for steam or domestic uses of any kind whatever. These mines, of course, have been in process of development for 50 years. It is absolutely impossible to exclude the mine water which flows by drainange into the streams, or where the water from the mines is pumped into the streams; and yet the acid from these mines, impregnating the water, has caused the effects complained of. Now, how can the law possibly be enforced against conditions of that kind? And if it can not be enforced, does the chairman of the committee think it is wise to embark upon a proposition of that kind in a river and harbor bill?

Mr. SMALL. Whether it is practicable to prohibit altogether the introduction of this free acid and acid waste into the streams is a matter on which I am not fully informed; but if the gentleman will turn to section 5 he will observe the language there, "That, within limits to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge," and so forth. It is unthinkable that the Secretary of War would take any action which would unnecessarily interrupt the activity of any mines producing coal. Of course, if it should be possible that they could avoid the discharge of this material into the rivers, they ought to be willing to yield to the conditions. But if it is impossible, or if it involves any great expense, I am very sure that in the administration of the law by the Secretary of War no condition will arise which will interfere with industry.

Mr. ROBBINS. If the gentleman will permit another observation on this point, the reason I am so deeply concerned about it is that an attempt to enforce it would have the effect of destroying the mining industry of western Pennsylvania without doubt. It is impossible to purify the water coming from those mines, impregnated with acids and impurities, and which, as the gentleman has stated, destroys all iron entering into the water and makes it even incapable of being used in the boilers on the Monongahela River and tributary streams; and I think the enforcement of such regulations here would tend to destroy the mining industry of a great part of our country, and it would be a rather dangerous thing, which I could not agree to without looking into it very carefully. Therefore I have directed the attention of the chairman of the committee to this point, to what I believe is a dangerous provision in the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On the point suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS], was there any testimony taken by your committee as to whether it would be practicable for the mine owners to dispose of that acid waste otherwise than by putting it into these streams?

Mr. SMALL. No; we did not. But we did inquire carefully as to whether in the enforcement of this law there would be any purpose or intent to interfere unduly with industry, and we were assured on that point.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know there has been many times legislation here which affects great interests, as to which on the floor it has been said that the proposed legislation would be utterly impossible of enforcement, and for years its enactment was prevented. Finally, when put upon the statute books, it proved not only to be entirely practicable, but very beneficial to all concerned.

I remember that the railroad companies said it would be utterly impossible for them to put on safety appliances and many similar things which Congress required, but only after years of agitation, and I wondered whether there would not be some way in which acid could be neutralized, rather than allowed to run into the streams to kill fish and destroy other property.

Mr. SMALL. If I may simply express an opinion, I believe that a way can be found. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entirely correct in his statement that many things which have been stated to be impossible have been found to be entirely feasible and in the public interest, when we finally had the courage to enact some law upon the subject.

Mr. MERRITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. MERRITT. Has the chairman of the committee information as to whether the Secretary will promulgate general regulations, or will he consider each river and each case by itself?

Mr. SMALL. Each river on its own merits, because the industries and conditions differ.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a regulation preventing the throwing of ashes into navigable streams.

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As from passing vessels.

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This proposes to prevent the throwing of what becomes flotsam into a stream. Ashes sink, and by lessening the depth of channel tend to impede navigation, so that there may be a good reason for that regulation; but this material would float.

Mr. SMALL. I understand that it is soluble when discharged into the stream.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Flotsam—as, for instance, oil—and the water from a mine containing culm. The question with me is whether the inclusion of this paragraph might not interfere to a certain extent with some of the rights of States in the matter of industry. Take the Schuylkill River, for instance, where much oil oozes out into the stream in some way or other. It may pass out from the pipes or find its way into the stream because of the method of handling. While that affects the fish life it does not necessarily impede navigation, but to penalize it might in some instances injure the business on that stream.

Mr. SMALL. I do not anticipate that the fears of the gentleman will prove to be well founded.

I might mention another injury from this pollution of the streams. The hulls of steel and iron vessels are injuriously affected, so that their owners have to exercise constant care in order to minimize deterioration; and even under the best conditions the presence of these acids makes the deterioration of metal hulls quite rapid. It therefore results in the aggregate in great loss.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have certain State laws and regulations in Pennsylvania that forbid the pollution of streams and make it punishable. Such a law might apply to the cook on a tugboat who throws his waste material into the water. But here is a provision including a penal clause involving fine and imprisonment, and the business aspects of it merit our careful consideration.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman will understand that with a view to meeting a case where this law could not be enforced without unduly injuring some industry, in order to meet that contingency, it was left within the discretion of the Secretary of War to fix the limits within which it should be enforced, and I think there need be no fear of any unnecessary injury to industry.

Mr. SNELL. I should like to inquire of the gentleman how this would affect the large paper mills in the northern part of the country that have a large amount of waste water which it seems apparently necessary to discharge into the stream.

Mr. SWITZER. Would that water impair or injure boats or machinery?

Mr. SNELL. There are no boats and there is no machinery on these streams, but they run into navigable waters. For instance, the small streams in the northern part of New York State fall eventually either into the Hudson or the St. Lawrence. Of course, there is no navigation on the small streams where these paper mills are located.

Mr. SMALL. I would infer from the statement of the gentleman that there might be no necessity for applying the law in that case, because if there is no navigation on the stream, but the waste material finally reaches a navigable stream, by the time it reaches the larger river it may be so diffused and attenuated in the larger volume of water that the injury would be negligible.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I would like to know.

Mr. SMALL. I should think so.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman think it might be well to go further and provide against the pollution of streams by sewage? Here we have the great city of Washington polluting the Potomac River. In Maryland we have the great Naval Academy polluting the Severn River. It seems to me we might go further and prevent that.

Mr. SMALL. As I tried to say in the beginning of my remarks on this paragraph, if the only injury to these streams consisted of results outside of the jurisdiction of Congress, the committee would probably have not presented this paragraph, but the pollution of streams by sewage is largely a matter for State and municipal correction.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How can the State regulate it? Maryland and Virginia own both sides of the Potomac, except these 10 miles here in the District of Columbia, where a great amount of sewage is dumped in. How can the States control that? It is an absolute impossibility.

Mr. SMALL. It is true that in the case of a river constituting the boundary line between States that Congress might assume jurisdiction and prohibit acts which polluted navigable streams, even if such pollution did not directly affect navigation.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We could not control it in Annapolis.

Mr. SMALL. The pollution of streams through the discharge of sewage usually occurs in smaller rivers.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. If I understand the provision in the bill, the Secretary of War would not make any regulations unless the pollution resulted in the product of acid water that would interfere with navigation or had some deteriorating effect on the material entering into the construction of boilers and material entering into the construction of locks and dams. It would not matter what the pollution consisted of unless it produced an acid water.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. Section 5 uses this expression, "free acid or acid waste in any form." There is nothing in the bill defining what that means or what it embraces, or what the effect of it will be as referred to in debate. What does the chairman of the committee understand to be meant to be included in the term "free acid or acid waste"?

Mr. SMALL. I can only answer that by the statement that the committee were informed that those terms had a well known meaning in chemistry and that there would be no ambiguity by the use of the words.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. SMALL. Gladly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In reply to the gentleman from Alabama, my understanding is that free acid would mean acid uncombined, practically pure acid. It would not be entirely so, but we speak of free oxygen which is oxygen uncombined, and free acid would be practically pure; that is, the major part of it would be acid. But acid waste I should construe to mean water flowing away from a mine, for instance, mixed with acid.

Mr. SMALL. I think the gentleman is right both as to free acid and acid waste.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman would apply the acid test.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was not referring to the acid test.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Are the estimates upon which the appropriations provided for in this measure based on the report of the Chief Engineer's office of the War Department as in the past?

Mr. SMALL. They were, and no appropriation in the bill exceeds the estimate so submitted.

Mr. WALSH. What has become of the provision providing for a water commission? Did that become a law in the last bill?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; but the President has never yet appointed the commission.

Mr. WALSH. That important body which it was urged was the most important during the war emergency has not been appointed by the Executive?

Mr. SMALL. I confess to the impeachment. We were informed by those who advocated it, not by the President as I recall, but by many others, that it was a most important provision and ought to be inserted in the bill forthwith.

Mr. WALSH. I recall the argument, but my question was prompted by curiosity to know whether this board had cooperated in any way in preparing the estimates or outlining the program to be carried on under the appropriations in this bill. Of course, if the commission has not been appointed that answers the question.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SMALL. I will.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman has stated that there were no public hearings in regard to section 5, and that the industries of the country have not been heard from as to how they would be affected by that section. The gentleman has also stated that he has assurances that the regulation and enforcement of this provision would be in such a manner as not to affect unduly public industries. From what source did the gentleman receive that assurance, and is it in writing?

Mr. SMALL. The assurance was received from the Secretary of War. That was oral, but I think the assurance is contained in the hearings on the bill, which are printed and accessible.

In order that we may hurry along on the paragraph, I want to give as an additional reason why the fears of Members may be unfounded that the Du Pont powder people through their representative called on the chairman of the committee and said that with this provision in the bill they could not operate their plant, but when I referred them to the language of the paragraph and advised them to go and see the Chief of Engineers about the matter I heard nothing more about it. One or two representatives of paper mills mentioned the matter to me, and when I pointed out the language in the paragraph and referred them also to the Chief of Engineers nothing more was heard from them. So it would appear that on investigation the gentlemen who made the complaint were satisfied, and I think it is fair to deduce that as a reason why the provision will not do unnecessary injury to business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Before the gentleman leaves that section, I notice the bill carries no appropriation for continuing the work of canalization of the Cumberland River below Nashville. The hearings seem to indicate that Col. Newcomer felt that the available funds were sufficient for the coming year. Does the gentleman know whether this work is to be continued without being stopped on the locks now under construction, and that available funds are sufficient for that purpose?

Mr. SMALL. The balance available on July 1, 1917, for the Cumberland River below Nashville was $1,243,140.02. As to the manner in which this will be applied I refer the gentleman to the last annual report of the Chief of Engineers for 1917, pages 1200 and 1201, particularly the paragraphs entitled "Condition at end of fiscal year" and "Proposed operations." The existing project provides for the construction of Locks and Dams A, B, C, D, E, and F, beginning with Lock A, 41 miles below Nashville, and ending at Lock F, a distance of 43.6 miles above the mouth of the river and open channel work below Lock F. The minimum project depth is 6 feet. Lock A was completed in 1904. With the available balance it is proposed to complete Locks and Dams B, C, D, E, and F.

Section 6 provides that whenever the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire land by condemnation the United States, upon the filing of the petition, shall have the right to take immediate possession. That is a matter of great importance. Quite often public works or improvements are held up for one, two, and three years awaiting the conclusion of litigation arising out of the condemnation proceedings, this delay being brought about through appeals and other incidental causes, and this paragraph is intended to give the Government the right to take immediate possession. But that right is surrounded with provisions for the protection of the property owner. For instance, before the Government can take possession there must have been an appropriation made, or if the right of way or property are to be provided by local interests and title made to the United States then they are to give a bond to meet such award as may be finally adjudicated. This paragraph if enacted into law will prevent these unnecessary delays and at the same time throw every protection around the property of the citizen and is a very essential provision.

Section 7 permits juries in making awards under condemnation proceedings to take into consideration special benefits. That is to say, if the Government takes half of a tract of land and, as a matter of fact, the remaining half is enhanced by reason of this public improvement, that benefit or enhancement in value shall be considered in making the award of just compensation to the owner of the land. The committee has given careful consideration to this provision. It is a question that has been several times discussed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and they hold in general terms that in ascertaining what is just compensation under the provision of the United States Constitution it is allowable to take special benefits into consideration in making the award. But in one or two districts of the United States, if not more, courts have held that special benefits could not be taken into consideration unless there was a statutory provision to that effect, and in some States the courts have held likewise, so that in order to remove that question from all doubt and to translate into law what has been already said by the Supreme Court ought to be considered in arriving at the just compensation to be awarded to the landowner, the committee have deemed it wise to prepare and submit this paragraph for your consideration.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I highly approve the action of the committee in this respect, which I think is very necessary and proper. As the gentleman has stated, I know it has been a subject of consideration before his committee. Under the statutes enacted in the past that have come from his committee there is more occasion to use such a provision probably than anywhere else in connection with Government action. I take it that what has developed this action, as the gentleman stated, is that in a number of States, as in my own, the rule is not applied. The rule applied there, I think, is all wrong, unjust, inequitable, and particularly so at a time like this. It is very unjust that a man who is getting benefits out of the action of the Government should not make any allowance for it when his property is taken.

Mr. SMALL. In some instances the property not taken has so increased in value as to have a market value in excess of the value of the whole tract prior to the expropriation of a part by the Government and the completion of the improvement, and it would be unjust not to take such special benefits into consideration in making the award.

Section 8 directs the Chief of Engineers hereafter in his annual report to indicate in a general way the terminal and transfer facilities existing at every city located upon a harbor or stream under improvement by the United States, and directs him to make from time to time special reports upon the existence of terminal and transfer facilities. That is as we believe an exceedingly wise provision and is constructive in character. As I shall refer to that briefly later, I shall not take more time now.

And I wish in conclusion to direct the attention of the committee to a brief consideration of the broad question of water transportation. It is unnecessary to consume the time of the committee in emphasizing the value of transportation by water. We have substantially three modes of transport—the highway, the railway, and the waterway. They are all important, and they all are or should be coordinate. Each one should be a unit in the general system of transportation of the country. For instance, a very distinct movement is in progress at this time toward the larger use of motor cars in the movement of traffic upon our highways, and if we could have represented in tonnage the amount that is now moved annually upon the highways of this country in motor trucks, I doubt not all of us would be astonished. Likewise, waterways are simply one of the coordinate units in our system of transportation. It is useless to take up the time of the committee also in giving expression to the need of water transportation, particularly in this acute period of congestion of traffic. I take it that there will not be a dissent to the proposition that water transportation is valuable and that any legislation or activity which promotes transportation by water is distinctly in the public interest.

In these annual river and harbor appropriation bills we endeavor to improve harbors and channels so as to make them more navigable and more easily usable for the purposes of transportation, but the difficulty in the past has been that we, the Congress of the United States and the American public, have been content to rest upon the statement that channels ought to be provided, and we have forgotten the concurrent proposition that channels alone to not produce water commerce. I have attended, as you have, organizations intended to promote the improvement of channels throughout the country for navigation, and I have heard emphasized many times the importance of larger appropriations for the purpose of improving these channels, but very seldom have I heard any advocacy of the other activities needed in developing water transportation. As a matter of fact, deeper and better channels, while a necessity for water trainsportation, are only the primary essential. Other things must be considered. I desire to present to you just briefly some of these other things. Of course we must have water transportation lines. These lines must have ample capital; they must have the type of boat appropriate to the particular navigation to be engaged in; they must be organized and operated under business and traffic management in a manner substantially analogous to the railroads. But even that is not all, because some of us have seen water transportation lines upon navigable rivers go out of use and be abandoned and water commerce decline when there was a navigable channel and when also there were transportation lines.

What is another need? There must be water terminals. It is impossible to maintain water transportation profitably without these. Terminals are as essential for navigable channels as are terminals for railroads. The uses of these terminals are primarily for transfer and for storage of freight, but more largely to afford better facilities for transfer. These terminals should be located upon ample areas; they should have capacious warehouses; they should be appropriately located upon a river and harbor accessible to shippers and the main highways and railroads. There must be good highways leading from the water terminal to the general system of highways of the community and section. Further, the water terminal should be connected with all the railroads serving the community by one or two belt lines, and all of this improvement under the general name of a water terminal should be owned by the public and regulated in the interests of the public.

It is astonishing when one comes to study the navigable waterways of the country to learn to what extent the providing of these adequate water terminals has been neglected. Let me give you an illustration. The committee determined early at the beginning of this session that they would lay down a constructive policy and endeavor, in so far as practicable and within reasonable limits, to confine appropriations for the improvement of waterways to those where the contiguous communities and localities, which means primarily the cities and towns, would give satisfactory assurance that they would provide water terminals. May I illustrate? In 1910 we adopted an expensive project for the improvement of the Ohio River, involving the construction of 54 locks and dams, with a view of providing 9 feet of water the year round under all stages of water, at a total cost of more than $60,000,000, and we have appropriated, including the appropriation in this bill, a little more than half of the money for the construction of that great improvement. I would not say a word to disparage the importance of this improvement, but I would submit this proposition and stand upon it. We may complete that improvement of the Ohio River, we may give them 9 feet the year round, and unless the cities and towns contiguous to the Ohio River provide terminals there will not be developed upon that river a commerce commensurate with the expenditure for the improvement. [Applause.] And the Congress of the United States can not afford to expend public money unless we are going to get value received. We took up the matter of terminals upon the Ohio River. The committee addressed letters to the mayors of every city and town and the secretaries of every commercial organization, inquiring what kind of terminals they had and if they did not have any what they proposed to do, and told them unless we had satisfactory assurance when we came to formulate the next bill the committee would seriously consider abandoning this improvement.

We received letters varying in tenor and, I am glad to say, generally satisfactory; and that correspondence, which is continuing, indicates a status of public opinion in the cities and towns along the Ohio River which will result in these water terminals at every appropriate point. But some of them insisted, and among them some intelligent men, contended that all the cities and towns had adequate terminals already. We addressed a letter to the Chief of Engineers, asking him to direct some district engineer to investigate the condition of the terminals along the Ohio from Pittsburgh to Cairo, and he made a report stating that there was not a single water terminal on the river which would answer the purposes of a terminal to meet the needs of water transportation. I mention that as a condition not alone affecting the Ohio River, but as affecting other rivers of the country, and I believe I can state as the consensus of the opinion of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—certainly it expresses my attitude—that the committee hereafter will consider whether localities contiguous to streams to be improved are going to do their part in order to promote transportation before we made appropriations for the improvement of those streams. [Applause.]

There is another essential in the development of water transportation, and that is interchange of traffic between the water carriers and the railroads. Now, however essential water terminals may be for local traffic—that is to say, water traffic which is initiated at a water point and has its destination at a water point—interchange of traffic between water carriers and railroads is impossible without these water terminals.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Speaking of water terminals, it is true, is it not, that it may be very difficult for some cities, without a very great expenditure, to secure adequate water terminal facilities because of the fact that the railroads have seen to it that they—the railroads—have gotten all the property that can be used for terminals?

Mr. SMALL. That is unfortunately true in some cities on rivers, and particularly on some harbors.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Take East St. Louis. Has not the Wiggins Ferry Co. obtained a monopoly of the water front there?

Mr. SMALL. I am not sufficiently familiar with conditions there to state whether such a monopoly exists.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is practically that.

Mr. SMALL. But I have in mind several cities where the railroads own most of the available water front. In this connection I may state this proposition: When a railroad owns water front which it has purchased in the past for the purpose of establishing a monopoly, and all of that water front is not needed for its own traffic purposes, it is within the power of the sovereign by appropriate legislation to condemn and take that property for the benefit of the public, just as it could take it from an individual, and any State or any city may rest assured that it need not be deterred from securing adequate front for terminal facilities by reason of the existence of such conditions. But, coming back to the question of the interchange of traffic, it is impossible to interchange traffic between railroads and the waterways unless you have these terminals and transfer facilities.

For instance, by way of illustration, an adequate terminal should have between the warehouse and the bulkhead on the water at least two railroad tracks. Those railroad tracks would connect with the belt line on which cars may be moved loaded with products to be transferred to a boat or with products which have been transferred from a boat and intended to be moved into the interior by rail. Such rail tracks which are an immediate part of the terminal would be located between the bulkhead where the boat is moored and the warehouse. A properly equipped terminal, with its movable power crane, could pick up the freight from the water carrier quickly and load it immediately into the cars, in order that it might be transported further by rail, or likewise transfer it into the warehouse. One of the purposes of a terminal is to enable this transfer to be made in the cheapest and quickest manner. Why, it is true at some particular landings in cities on the Mississippi River, for instance, that it actually costs as much to get freight out of the water carrier onto the elevation constituting the bank of the river and transport the same a mile to the consignee as it costs to transport it a hundred or more miles by water carrier on the river itself. And the wate terminal removes that obstacle and reduces the cost of transfer to a minimum.

The Panama Canal act, passed in 1912, contains provisions which enable any water transportation line or any municipality to apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission to have a prorating system adopted between the boat lines and all the railroads, have joint rates fixed, and to compel physical connection between the terminal and the railroads. Although this act has been in existence more than seven years it has been enforced in only a few instances. The shippers in cities and towns along navigable waterways should be advised as to their rights in securing joint traffic arrangements between the boat lines and the railroads.

There is one other essential for the establishment of a sane system of water transportation growing out of the vicious idea which prevailed for many years in the past, that the waterways were competitors of the railroads, and, therefore, that water-transportation lines were to be destroyed in the interest of the railroads. In the past, particularly from 1870 to 1900, many railroads were constructed paralleling navigable rivers. During this period they reduced rail rates competitive with water and generally so low as to render the operation of boat lines unprofitable. This resulted usually in the ultimate abandonment of the boat lines. In some instances the railroads purchased the boat lines and later, upon one pretext or another, withdrew the boat lines from operation. The result has been that upon many of the rivers of the country, particularly on the rivers of the Mississippi Valley, water commerce of prior years, which had existed in large volume, has gradually diminished to such an extent as to be incomparable to the volume of former years.

What is the remedy for this condition? It is my individual opinion that no good ground can be found for a lower rate by rail competitive with water than a rate into the interior. It costs the railroad as much. There is no difference in that respect. And the only justification which can be furnished is to give the railroad a monopoly of the traffic of all that section, a reasonable amount of which would under normal conditions go by water, or to destroy transportation altogether upon the waterways. I believe upon every principle of economics and of transportation that no good reason can be found for a lower rail rate competitive with water than prevails under the same condition for railroads serving an interior section. But whether that proposition is well founded or not, there can be absolutely no reason furnished why there should not be a readjustment of rail rates competitive with water, so as to afford a sufficient differential in favor of water lines, in order that they may be established and operated for the benefit of the public. [Applause.]

I have with the concurrence of the committee taken up this question with the President, who, I may say, is in sympathy with it, with the Director General of Railroads, and also with the Committee on Inland Water Transportation, appointed by the Director General of Railroads. And I hope and believe that they will take some action which will result in a readjustment of these rail rates, so that this unnecessary obstacle to the development of water transportation upon our rivers shall be removed; and if it shall transpire that the railroad act which was recently passed by Congress does not give the Director General and the President sufficient power to so readjust these rates in the interest of water transportation, Congress ought to make any further amendment to the law which may be essential to that end.

I have consumed much more time of the committee than I had intended, but——

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. LONERGAN. I would like to ask a specific question here.

On page 2, line 15, of the bill, I notice a provision for an appropriation of $15,000 for maintenance of the Connecticut River below Hartford. In the last bill, if my memory serves me, there was an appropriation of approximately $71,000 or $72,000.

Will that represent part of an appropriation to be made in the future to carry out improvements recommended by the Board of Engineers of the War Department?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman will remember that for the Connecticut River above Hartford there is a new project, and a most important one, which we hope some day will be adopted. It involves the development of a very large and valuable volume of hydroelectric energy. But you are speaking now of the Lower Connecticut, below Hartford?

Mr. LONERGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMALL. The available balance for the present fiscal year there was $70,204, and that, with the appropriation carried in the bill, which I think is $15,000, was regarded as sufficient for the maintenance of that project during the remainder of this fiscal year and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. But I will remind the gentleman that there is also a new project for the Connecticut River below Hartford, a modification of the existing project, so as to provide for additional dikes, retaining walls, revetments, and accessory works at an estimated cost of $211,000. The committee under its policy did not see its way to adopting that modification in the present bill.

Mr. LONERGAN. Can the gentleman state the amount that will be necessary to carry out the work where $70,000 has already been appropriated? Is it not approximately $281,000 or $282,000?

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman is assuming that the existing project has not been completed, I would suggest he is in error in that. The existing project for the Connecticut River below Hartford has been substantially completed, and it is only now a question of maintenance until we adopt the modification of the project on which a favorable report has been submitted. I would not, I think, make an improper statement if I said that in good time, inasmuch as the modification of that project is so meritorious, it will receive the approval of the committee.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. HICKS. On page 2, commencing at line 18, a number of items are mentioned—some 13 altogether—and for the maintenance of these the amount given is $22,000. Now, I assume that as all these different harbors and breakwaters are mentioned, part of $22,000 at least must be used to cover each individual item. It strikes me that there must be some very small items to have $22,000 divided up among 13 propositions.

Mr. SMALL. I will say to the gentleman that for many years—25 years or more—certain projects under improvement have been grouped, usually projects within a given area, and always projects within a given engineer district, and grouped for this primary purpose: While appropriations for maintenance or further improvement might be recommended only for a part of them, yet the value of grouping lay in this, that if by reason of any unforeseen contingency, such as storm or flood, any of those projects which did not seem to require any appropriation at the time of the submission of the report of the engineers or at the time of the enactment of the law, might require improvement or restoration on account of these subsequent events, the Chief of Engineers could divert a part of the gross appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. HICKS. Then I understand that some of these items will not receive any of this money this year?

Mr. SMALL. Duck Island, Branford, New Haven, Milford, Bridgeport, Southport, Norwalk, Five Mile River, Stamford, and so forth—is that the paragraph?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. In that group the only items for which an estimate was submitted were New Haven Harbor, $14,000, and Housatonic River, Conn., $8,000.

Mr. HICKS. A number of them are in my district, and I was wondering what was being done there.

Mr. SMALL. I might refer the gentleman to section 2 of the bill, on page 16, where he will find the law controlling the application of funds for consolidated or grouped items.

Mr. HICKS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would like to say this in conclusion: The river and harbor bill has been an object of attack by some citizens of the country and by some of the press and by some Representatives in this body. These criticisms have never been wholly justified. There have been defects in river and harbor bills, just as there are in every other large appropriation bill submitted to this House. There have been some errors, there have been some items subject to criticism, certainly from the viewpoint of the critic; but whatever grounds of criticism there have been against river and harbor bills in the past have been due to the fact that by reason of our own inertia and that of the public we have made appropriations simply for improving channels in rivers and harbors and for the construction of canals, without at the same time adopting a constructive policy which would result in the promotion and establishment of water transportation upon those channels and in those harbors so improved.

I admit, and the membership of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors admit, that we have made appropriations perhaps in the past for some rivers where the commerce did not seem to justify the appropriations, but many of them are great rivers.

Take the upper Mississippi River, if you please, which has been a target for criticism, or the lower Mississippi as well. There ought to be a large commerce upon that river. What is the duty of our committee and of Congress in that regard? To abandon it in the face of the need of additional facilities for transportation, or to adopt a policy which will result in the establishment of water transportation upon that great river?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Has any policy been established with reference to that, with respect to barges and things of that kind, by the Government?

Mr. SMALL. I may say that the Shipping Board has allotted a fund of $3,360,000, as I recall, for the construction of 24 barges and 4 towboats, to be operated between St. Louis and Minneapolis.

Mr. DYER. I am glad to have the gentleman state that, and I am sure it will result in great work in that section, and it will be an answer forever to those who have been criticizing what has been done in the past with reference to the Mississippi River.

Mr. SMALL. Let us hope so. I submit that the correct policy of this committee and the correct policy of Congress, instead of abandoning a navigable river, is to adopt a constructive policy which will establish water transportation upon that river, and so act in the public interest. That is what your committee have attempted to do.

Let me give you an illustration, and I will only advert to it for a moment, to show the importance of terminals for water transportation. Last fall Mr. Goltra and perhaps other gentlemen evolved a plan for the purpose of demonstrating the availability of the upper Mississippi River from Minneapolis to St. Louis for water transportation. Not as a gratuity, but for a valuable consideration, they secured some barges and a towboat from the War Department. They carried coal to Minneapolis and transported down the river iron ore. When they reached Minneapolis they had to wait a week or two until some temporary appliances and facilities could be constructed before they could unload that cargo and take on a cargo, and by reason of the absence of terminal facilities at Minneapolis and St. Paul the profit which they otherwise would have made upon that trip was consumed in the ensuing delay and in the additional cost involved in the transfer of the traffic to and from the barges. That is an illustration of the great value and necessity of terminals for water transportation.

In conclusion, let me say that while these criticisms have been indulged in, let us adopt a better policy, and instead of criticizing the projects themselves let us bring about the conditions under which there will be water transportation upon all these streams, and justify them, and also at the same time benefit the country.

Let me say as to this particular bill that it is immune from criticism. Criticize it if you can or will. We are prepared to meet any criticism from the membership of the House, from the press, or from the public at large. We have a bill which has been formulated along the lines of the policy which I have endeavored to explain to the House. We submit it as a bill which is entitled to the approbation and to the support of the House, and as one which is distinctly in the public interest. [Applause.]

By leave of the House I extend my remarks so as to embrace certain additional information.

According to a preliminary report of the Census Bureau on "Water Transportation in 1916," it appears that 376,000,000 tons of freight were carried on the waterways of the United States in 1916. This traffic would fill 9,400,000 average 40-ton freight cars, or about four times as many cars as are owned by the railroads of the United States.

There has been discussion from time to time regarding the depths of channels which should be provided for some of the principal harbors of the United States. Naturally conditions differentiate some harbors from others. For instance, San Francisco and Seattle possess such natural depth in their harbors that no improvements have been required other than the removal of a few obstructions at San Francisco. In some harbors which have a large commerce, but which naturally had restricted depths, the providing and maintenance of deeper channels has been quite expensive. It will be impracticable to provide an equal depth for all the important harbors either on the Atlantic, the Gulf, or Pacific coasts. Nor does it seem essential that every harbor should be placed on a parity as to depth of channel or other navigation facilities. New York is the only great harbor for which a depth of 40 feet has been provided, and above the upper bay a channel of this depth only exists in the Hudson River. While the trend in ship construction has been toward larger hulls and greater carrying capacity, yet the great bulk of our foreign trade is carried in ships with a loaded draft of less than 30 feet, and a very large proportion with a loaded draft of less than 26 feet. I have been unable to secure the draft of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade arriving or departing from our ports, but I have secured, through the Chief of Engineers, information as to the draft of vessels for a certain period arriving at and departing from New York and a list of vessels departing from Galveston, all in the foreign trade.

Statement of the combined number and draft of vessels arriving at and departing from New York Harbor from January 1 to June 30, 1914. (Compiled from Pilots' Records.) Note that coastwise vessels are not included:

Draft of vessels. ARRIVALS OR DEPARTURES.
12 feet and less than 13 feet	152
13 feet and less than 14 feet	188
14 feet and less than 15 feet	232
15 feet and less than 16 feet	213
16 feet and less than 17 feet	185
17 feet and less than 18 feet	270
18 feet and less than 19 feet	332
19 feet and less than 20 feet	321
20 feet and less than 21 feet	282
21 feet and less than 22 feet	350
22 feet and less than 23 feet	251
23 feet and less than 24 feet	294
24 feet and less than 25 feet	230
25 feet and less than 26 feet	230
26 feet and less than 27 feet	172
27 feet and less than 28 feet	138
28 feet and less than 29 feet	147
29 feet and less than 30 feet	78
30 feet and less than 31 feet	50
31 feet and less than 32 feet	28
32 feet and less than 33 feet	44
33 feet and less than 34 feet	21
34 feet and less than 35 feet	5
35 feet and less than 36 feet	10
36 feet and less than 37 feet	8
37 feet and less than 38 feet	4
38 feet and over	5
Total	4,340

It will be observed that the above table covers the period from January 1 to June 30, 1914, just prior to the European war, which probably represented the normal period of commerce. The total number of boats arriving and departing drawing 35 feet and over was only 27, or six-tenths of 1 per cent out of the total number, 4,340. The total number of boats having a loaded draft of 30 feet and over was 175, or 4 per cent, of the total number. The total number of boats having a loaded draft of 25 feet and over was 940, or 21.7 per cent of the total number.

I now append a table giving the number and draft of vessels departing from Galveston in the foreign trade for the calendar year 1916:

Statement of the number and draft of vessels departing from Galveston, Tex., to foreign ports for the year 1916 (coastwise vessels not included):

Draft of vessels.	Number.
11 feet and less than 12 feet	1
12 feet and less than 13 feet	2
13 feet and less than 14 feet	3
14 feet and less than 15 feet	3
15 feet and less than 16 feet	19
16 feet and less than 17 feet	6
17 feet and less than 18 feet	22
18 feet and less than 19 feet	38
19 feet and less than 20 feet	29
20 feet and less than 21 feet	25
21 feet and less than 22 feet	57
22 feet and less than 23 feet	54
23 feet and less than 24 feet	51
24 feet and less than 25 feet	42
25 feet and less than 26 feet	33
26 feet and less than 27 feet	18
27 feet and less than 28 feet	11
28 feet and less than 29 feet	7
29 feet and less than 30 feet	3
Total departures	424

Many of the vessels in the above table arrived and departed several times during the year. Information is not available as to whether or not each vessel was fully loaded.

The total number of boats departing drawing 25 feet and over was 72, or 17 per cent of the total number—424. The total number of boats departing drawing over 20 feet was 301, or 71 per cent of the total number.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Fordney	Kelly, Pa.	Robinson
Austin	Foss	Kiess, Pa.	Rogers
Bankhead	Fuller, Ill.	King	Rose
Blackmon	Gallagher	Kitchin	Rowe
Borland	Gallivan	Knutson	Rowland
Brodbeck	Gandy	Kreider	Rucker
Browning	Garland	LaGuardia	Sanders, N. Y.
Brumbaugh	Garrett, Tenn.	Langley	Saunders, Va.
Burnett	Garrett, Tex.	Larsen	Scott, Iowa
Campbell, Pa.	Good	Lehlbach	Scott, Mich.
Cannon	Goodwin, Ark.	Lenroot	Scott, Pa.
Carew	Gordon	Lever	Scully
Carter, Okla.	Graham, Pa.	Lobeck	Sells
Chandler, N. Y.	Gray, Ala.	Longworth	Shallenberger
Classon	Greene, Vt.	McAndrews	Siegel
Costello	Griest	McClintic	Slemp
Crosser	Griffin	McCormick	Smith, Mich.
Currie, Mich.	Hamill	McLaughlin, Mich.	Smith, T. F.
Curry, Cal.	Hamilton, N. Y.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Snyder
Darrow	Hamlin	McLemore	Stafford
Davidson	Harrison, Miss.	Maher	Stedman
Davis	Haskell	Mann	Steele
Decker	Haugen	Mecker	Stevenson
Delaney	Hayes	Mondell	Stiness
Denison	Heintz	Moon	Sullivan
Dies	Helvering	Morgan	Swift
Donovan	Hensley	Morin	Talbott
Dooling	Hollingsworth	Mudd	Taylor, Colo.
Doughton	Hood	Norton	Templeton
Drukker	Howard	Oliver, N. Y.	Thomas
Dunn	Husted	Olney	Tilson
Eagan	Hutchinson	Parker, N. Y.	Tinkham
Edmonds	Ireland	Porter	Towner
Estopinal	Johnson, S. Dak.	Powers	Vare
Fairchild, B. L.	Johnson, Wash.	Ragsdale	Venable
Fairchild, G. W.	Jones, Va.	Ramsey	Vestal
Fess	Juul	Rayburn
Flynn	Kelley, Mich.	Riordan

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill, H. R. 10069, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 282 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he presented the names of the absentees to be printed in the Journal and RECORD.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the newspapers on yesterday contained an item stating that the President, on the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, had taken $4,200,000 out of the $100,000,000 emergency war fund placed in the President's hands by Congress to purchase the Arlington Hotel property. The newspapers by the publication of this item do both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury a great injustice. The Secretary of the Treasury has not asked the President to take $4,200,000, or any other sum, out of an emergency war fund for any such purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury has a high sense of responsibility for the position he holds and for the manner in which the public funds are expended. Therefore he would not ask the President of the United States to violate the spirit of the law under which the $100,000,000 had been placed in the President's hands by taking out of that sum $4,200,000, or any other amount, for any other purpose than that for which it was placed in the hands of the President. So I say the newspapers have done both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury great injustice.

Mr. Chairman, it would require most convincing proof to establish the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury would think of asking the President to divert moneys from an emergency war fund for the purposes indicated. The Secretary of the Treasury has too high a regard for the President and too high a regard for the oath of office that the President has taken, and too high a regard for the oath of office that he himself has taken, to think of making such a request as the newspapers charge that he made of the President. It is inconceivable that the Secretary of the Treasury would think of making such a request of the President. I do not understand how the press of the country, that usually has been friendly to the President and to the administration, could think of publishing such a statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather proceed for a time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's argument is very interesting, but I think there is some ground for the statement of the newspapers.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would require most convincing proof. It would require the verbal statement of the President that he had been requested by the Secretary of the Treasury, an admission by the Secretary of the Treasury that he had made the request, or in lieu of that a confirmation of the deal that the newspapers allege was the result of the request of the Secretary of the Treasury and the grant of the request by the President. If the Arlington Hotel property has been purchased and the deal is consummated, that, of course, will be convincing evidence; but until that proof is forthcoming hearsay testimony is not convincing. I would doubt the authenticity of a copy of a letter alleged to have been written by the President bearing his signature. I would doubt any sort of evidence except direct evidence of the fact.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman if the Rules Committee had information before them that this deal had been consummated?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They had not. The Rules Committee have not had any such evidence or admission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is aware of the fact that a bill was to have been called up this morning——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania would allow me to proceed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have stated that it would require the most convincing evidence that the Secretary of the Treasury would make these astounding requests of the President. I do not believe they have been made. It is stated in the same article that the requests were made by the Secretary of the Treasury because the necessities of the Treasury for additional room really amounted to a war emergency. That can not be true, because it is not true. I stated that it could not be true that the Secretary of the Treasury had made these requests of the President or the statement that it was a war emergency. First of all, it is not a war emergency. The building in question is not a war necessity. Recently under an authorization from the Congress we have repaired and altered many buildings south of Pennsylvania Avenue belonging to the Government, which will house many hundreds of Government employees. We are building acres upon acres of public buildings in which to house the employees of the Government.

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman submit to an interruption?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather not at this time. We are appropriating millions and hundreds of millions of dollars for the construction of office buildings throughout the city. In addition to that, more than half a year ago the Secretary of the Treasury asked authorization for the construction of an annex to the Treasury on the Belasco Theater site. That authorization was granted on the 27th of September last. It was stated when the authorization was asked for that, if it was made, the building would immediately be thrown up there to relieve the necessities of the Treasury; that it was imperative that the authorization be made. The Committee on Rules made a bill in order, and the authorization for the expenditure of $1,200,000 for building a Treasury annex on the site south of the Belasco Theater was passed. That was the 27th of September—more than six months ago. So far only discussion and working on plans have been done toward the erection of that building.

If there had been an immediate necessity for office room to relieve the congested condition in the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury would have rushed the construction of the Treasury annex under the authorization and the appropriation that he has. That has not been done, and, of course, it has not been done because the necessities of the Treasury did not require it.

Further, there is ample space for one of the bureaus in the Treasury Department in the Bureau of Pensions—that of allotment to soldiers' relatives. I have it on the very highest authority that the Pension Commissioner can handle with the force he now has the allotments to the relatives of soldiers in the cantonments and at the front. That would relieve the congested condition in the Treasury to a large extent. The matters to be dealt with are so peculiarly within the work of the Pension Bureau that it should be done there, and at a time when money is so much in need for war purposes, so difficult to secure, every advantage should be taken of economy in the employment of men and in the utilization of space.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather not at this moment. Every effort should be made, therefore, to economize for the one purpose of conserving the resources of the Nation in order to prosecute the war to a successful conclusion. Therefore advantage should be taken by the administration of the opportunity to handle the war allotment out of the Pension Office.

Further, a building is now being constructed between Eighteenth and Nineteenth Streets, up near the Interior Department Building. It is an eight-story building, with over 800 rooms, which will accommodate all the office force that could possibly be required for the work that is being done in the Treasury Department. This building is available for the Secretary of the Treasury; it will be completed in a few days, and is ready now for any such preparation as might be required in order to make it suitable for the needs of the Treasury.

So I say, for all of these reasons it could not be possible that the Secretary of the Treasury has made such an astounding request on the President of the United States as a war measure. I repeat, I do not believe that the Secretary has made such a request.

So far I have confined my observations on this subject to the Secretary of the Treasury. I now address myself to the President of the United States. That great office, towering above all other in the world to-day, occupied by a man fitted by education and training for the high station, would never think of violating a sacred fund placed in his hands to accomplish purposes secretly, wisely, and efficiently in preparing this country for war, to the consummation of a real estate transaction of this character. The President of the United States has a high appreciation of the duties and responsibilities of his office, and would never think of diverting a fund that was placed in his hands to prepare the Nation for war to erect or buy a public building, complying in all respects to the tests of the Fine Arts Commission, containing spacious apartments and appointments for numerous bureau chiefs, with hundreds of clerks, many of whose services might well be dispensed with, providing room for additional mahogany, quarter-sawed oak, and swivel chairs.

Oh, no; the President of the United States has done no such thing. He will not do any such thing. It is unthinkable that the President would take out of a fund placed in his hands by Congress to be used secretly by him, because matters with which from time to time he has to deal are of such a character that they can not be discussed openly here or in any other forum, matters in which he makes the expenditures of large sums of money, without specific appropriation or discussion by Congress. That was the reason for placing the $100,000,000 in his hands. That is the reason the remainder of it is there to-day. Does any newspaper publisher think the President would take any part of that fund and use it for the purpose indicated? Oh, no. The President would do no such thing. He has done no such thing as the newspapers have stated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather not. I have stated that this fund was placed in the hands of the President to enable him to do things without consulting Congress or anyone else because of the secrecy that is required in the consummation of certain transactions in preparing the Nation to meet a foreign foe. Does the purchase of a building to provide additional office space for clerks come within the scope of that authority? Oh, no. Those are matters that should be and are discussed on this floor. The wisdom or unwisdom of every specific proposition has been and ought to be discussed here. This is the place where authorizations for the purchase of sites for public buildings and the erection of public buildings are made here in Washington. They are not done in secret. Oh, no. And the President has not done this thing in a corner, nor in secret, and I challenge the newspapers of the country, the newspapers of Washington, that have published this statement to produce the evidence. I repeat neither the Secretary of the Treasury ever made such a request nor did the President of the United States ever grant such a request. It is unthinkable that it is so.

Now, for a moment about the Arlington site. The old Arlington Hotel was one of the most celebrated in the country. Travelers from all over the world made it their stopping place when in Washington. Guests from every quarter of our own country were entertained there. It was the stopping place of captains of industry, finance, and politics. Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan and Tom Platt made it their abiding place in Washington.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do not forget the Gridiron Club, which made it famous.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And the Gridiron Club, which made the hotel famous. It was the situs of the most celebrated birthday dinner that has ever been given in the United States, the occasion of Uncle JOE'S seventieth birthday anniversary. [Applause.] Early in 1912 it was decided by the company to tear down the old building and erect a new one, larger and more spacious in its appointments. The old hotel was torn down and a hole made in the ground. A series of incidents occurred. The Democrats were successful in 1912; J. Pierpont Morgan, whom, it is alleged, was going to finance the enterprise, died; and the Arlington Hotel proposition failed. Court proceedings and foreclosure sales ensued. The property was offered for sale under a mortgage held by the Equitable Life Insurance Co. early in January, 1914. It was purchased by a company of gentlemen from Richmond, Va. Owing to some failure of a financial transaction immediately following the sale, the sale was not consummated, and the property was readvertised and sold again a week later. It sold for $850,000. Some days later it sold for $847,000, the purchasers giving a certified check for $50,000 on the day of the sale, and subsequently giving another $100,000, making a total that the purchasers have in the property of $150,000. Since then financial embarrassment has attended the mutations of the Arlington Hotel Co. They have made many efforts to unload the property and to get rid of it. It has been a great burden to them. It was far from a financial success. They attempted a year and a half ago to rent it to the Navy Department. They made a proposition to erect a spacious office building and rent it to the Navy Department for 65⅝ cents a square foot for a period of five years. This was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, carefully considered, and the committee refused to take the lease of the property. Then there was more embarrassment in the Arlington Hotel Co.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on Appropriations refused to authorize the lease of the Arlington property and preferred to recommend an appropriation of $2,000,000 to build temporary office buildings, the cost of which from an interest charge standpoint would not be anything like what the rent of that building would have been if they had rented it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Appropriations acted wisely.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is the gentleman's speech intended as a demonstration of the Republican support that his party is so proudly claiming for the President?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the Arlington Hotel Co. then sought to sell the property to the Treasury Department. That offer, so far as the Treasury Department was concerned, was apparently accepted. Authorizations were asked of Congress to consummate the purchase. Congress has been hearing evidence pro and con and has been dealing with the matter without very much enthusiasm. There has never been shown a very great disposition to make the purchase. Even this morning a resolution from the Committee on Rules making in order a bill for the purchase of the Arlington Hotel site, after having been offered was withdrawn, so that the Congress does not seem to be very enthusiastic over a transaction that would relieve the Arlington Hotel Co. of the great burden they have been carrying on an investment of $150,000. The reasonableness of the price asked or the questions incident to it I shall not discuss at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Just for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When Congress voted to the President a lump sum of $100,000,000 for war purposes, did it not also grant to him the power to appropriate a part of that money for the purchase of the Arlington Hotel site or any other site if he thought it necessary as a war emergency?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It did not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that if in the estimation of the President it was necessary for purposes of war that he or the Secretary of the Treasury should purchase the Arlington Hotel or any other site that he did not have the power to do it with his $100,000,000 fund? The practice, of course, is unusual.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, it would be a most violent assumption that the President would consider the purchase of hotel properties as war measures. What we need to win the war are arms, ammunition, airplanes, battle planes, ships, munitions of war of all kinds. We do not need hotel properties.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman would not yield to me a moment ago, and I was hoping some Democrat would take my place and ask the question whether or not the President had actually made this authorization. My own judgment is that he has——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I refuse to believe it.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will state to the gentleman that the President has authorized the expenditure of this fund upon the ground that it is a war-emergency measure, and upon the ground that in order to carry on the war the men who are working here in Washington must have a roof under which to work to protect themselves.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Unless the gentleman from North Carolina, whose word I would not dispute under any sort of circumstances, has positive proof coming to him from the President himself I still stand upon the assumption that the President has done nothing of the kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. With the gentleman's permission, I have a letter here, it will take just a moment if the gentleman will permit me, from the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, that is not the admission of the President. [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. With the permission of the gentleman, it says here:

> I inclose copy of a letter I sent to the President in reference to the Arlington Building. The President has authorized me in the circumstances to acquire it out of the war-emergency fund.
>
> The exigency is so great that it is not possible to delay action further. I earnestly hope, however, that the bill now pending in the House, and favorably reported by the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, will be passed as promptly as possible, in order that the President's war-emergency funds may be reimbursed.

That is dated March 28, 1918. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that the gentleman believes the question now is one of reimbursement. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman permit me to read——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would rather go on and let the gentleman from Illinois take time in his own right.

Mr. RAINEY. As to the law under which this is done——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will ask the gentleman to take time in his own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. About half a minute.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], notwithstanding the reading of the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, I do not modify a single statement that I have made here with respect to this subject and to the duty of the President with regard to this $100,000,000 war fund. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was very much in hope when spring came that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] would catch the spirit of the season and get in a good humor. He seems to have been in a bad humor especially with all measures which seem to have the recommendation of the President of the United States and the executive heads of our departments, upon whom the responsibility for the proper conduct of this war exists, and I sincerely hope——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I hope——

Mr. CANTRILL (continuing). That this House will have the pleasure some time in the near future of hearing the gentleman from Kansas stand up here upon this floor and, as a patriotic American citizen ought to do, do something to uphold the hands of the President of the United States [applause on the Democratic side] instead of vicious and idle criticism of every move that the President and the departments undertake to make in the great crisis now facing this Nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. CANTRILL. As to the merits of this proposition——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield? I hope the gentleman will not charge me with failing to support the President of the United States in all war measures. I have worked and voted for every measure——

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Kansas I will say that he, like some of the other Members of this House who take up all the time of the House on idle measures day after day in idle talk, when the roll comes does not dare stand before the American people and vote against what the President and the people want. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, as to the merits of this proposition, Mr. Chairman, the facts in the case are—and that is what this House wants are the facts—no man in my 10 years' experience here has ever heard me make a partisan speech criticizing gentlemen on the other side; this is no time for it and no place for it. What this

House wants to-day are the facts connected with this case for the purchase of the Arlington Hotel property. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who heard in detail all of the facts connected with this property, and as a member of the Rules Committee, where those facts were rehearsed before that committee, I say to the committee, and the RECORD of the House bears me out, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds by almost a unanimous vote, if not unanimous, decided to report a measure authorizing the appropriation of $4,200,000 for the purchase of the Arlington Hotel property. The Members of the House know that the calendars of the House are loaded down, and the only way to get consideration of that measure was to come before the Rules Committee and get a rule to expedite the passage of this bill because it was a war measure, and I will prove it before I leave the floor. The Public Buildings and Grounds Committee thought it was a war measure and gave their unanimous support to it. The Committee on Rules, with the exception of the gentleman from Kansas, was of the opinion that it was of sufficient importance to bring in a special rule and ask this House to give this bill immediate consideration. Yet the House, acting under other rules, took up days and days in idle discussion of minor measures. The time had come when in order to secure this property at a reasonable price some one had to act, and pending the legislation in Congress, which has the indorsement of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Rules Committee, the President has seen fit to act, and I, for one, say that he did right in doing what he did do, in giving the money to buy this property. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, the facts in the case—facts are strange things to the gentleman from Kansas, but the House wants them—the facts in the case are these: That this building is now in course of construction. I walked over it the other day and looked at it, and I think there are four stories above ground of steel construction now up. The building that is being erected there is not, as the gentleman from Kansas stated, a hotel piece of property, but it is a modern, up-to-date office building, and the hearings before the Committee on Rules showed that, and the gentleman from Kansas was not fair with the House when he undertook to make the House believe that it was a hotel going up there instead of a modern, up-to-date office building with the approval of the various building commissions of this city here behind it. Now, this building is to be used for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

And I want to say to this House that the room for these employees of the Government is absolutely needed at this moment, and that is why the President acted. The testimony, the facts, before the Rules Committee and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds showed that the three stories of this building underground are to be used for the preservation of the policies of the soldiers and sailors who are now in the service of their country, 1,000,000 life insurance policies having been taken out by the loyal soldiers and sailors of Uncle Sam. Where are those policies to-day? It would not be wise for me to state it here upon this floor. The committee members were advised in secret as to where they were located. Suffice it to say they are not where they ought to be, for their proper preservation. They now are being guarded day and night by armed soldiers in order to protect the interests of our boys.

The purpose of buying this property is to have proper storage immediately for these million policies of our soldiers and sailors, because, as stated before the committee, the strongest blow that could be given us to-day would be the destruction of these 1,000,000 policies, which would wipe out the record of every loyal soldier and sailor and deprive his family of the insurance that the Government intends him to have.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will.

Mr. GILLETT. When is this building going to be completed, so that it can be used for that purpose?

Mr. CANTRILL. The building is now under construction?

Mr. GILLETT. I understand it will be finished by the 1st of next October.

Mr. CANTRILL. I understand it is to be finished just as rapidly as it can be pushed to completion, whereas if we had to go into other parts of the city and buy property it would be delayed a year. And, gentlemen, let me say this to you, that in my opinion this is a proper place for the President of the United States to buy property. As said by the gentleman from Kansas, the Belasco corner has been purchased by the Treasury Department and a building authorized there. It ought to go there. It is just across Pennsylvania Avenue from the Treasury Department proper. It can be connected by tunnel under the Avenue with the Treasury, and just as soon as possible a building will be put up there and ougth to be put up there, and Congress has already authorized it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CANTRILL. Can I get two or three minutes more?

Mr. BOOHER. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CANTRILL. Thank you.

Now, as the Members of the House know, the Arlington Hotel property is just a square beyond the Belasco property. So that makes the Treasury Building and the Belasco property building, connected by tunnel under the Avenue, and the Arlington Hotel property, practically all within one square, under the direct control of the Treasury Department. It would be better if they could all be in one building, but every Member of Congress knows it is impossible to remodel the old Treasury Building so as to bring them under the same roof, and this is the nearest that can be done to put them together. It is in the proper location to be properly connected with the Treasury Department. It is upon very high ground, too, which is absolutely necessary, inasmuch as these million war policies have to be stored in the basement, and we need dry basements in order to store those policies properly or to store any other valuable papers of the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Just for a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Ordinarily, when property is to be purchased by the Government, the procedure is for the department to come to Congress with an estimate to the committee that has real charge of the matter here?

Mr. CANTRILL. I will answer your question directly, because I want to give the House all the information I have, and I do not want to take up any time in indulging in anything but facts.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] complains about the price of the property. The record before the various committees shows that the Government paid for this lot about $1,000,000. At forced sale it brought almost $1,000,000, and for years has been listed and taxed by the city of Washington upon the basis of almost $1,000,000.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Just let me finish my answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania first.

And the Government has paid exactly what experts in the city have said it is worth, and not a dollar more than it is worth. The building which is going up has been carefully looked into by the Supervising Architect and his entire force, and the head men of that office and of the Treasury Department, after a full investigation of the cost of building material, labor, and all, and the cost of the lot, came before two committees of Congress and told us that the price paid in the bill is reasonable and practically the cost price of the property. And in that connection permit me to say to the House that in private conversation not long ago with a real estate man in this city, who had no interest whatever in the property and who happens to be my personal friend, I asked him for information on this subject, and he, as a practical real estate man in the city of Washington, told me that the Government was getting the full worth of its money in the purchase price of the Arlington Hotel property.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question purely for information?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON Does the $4,500,000 measure the cost of the building when it is completed?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four million two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CANTRILL. Four million two hundred thousand includes, I will say to the gentleman, the cost of the lot and the entire completed cost of the building, taking in the entire surface of the lot. There is but one-third of that lot that was not in the original plans when they started out to build this office building; but, in order to make room for the department, the third of the lot was added on, and the proposed building will cover the entire area. And I will say to the House that, in order to transact the business of the Government in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue's office and in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, which is now housed in six different places in this city, with the records scattered from one end of the city to the other—and I am supported in my contention both by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and by the Committee on Rules—this purchase should be immediately put through; and I say the President was right in taking advantage of the opportunity and that it is the duty of this House to reimburse that fund.

